HU QILI ON IMPORTANCE OF DEVELOPING U.S. TIES

OW141350 Beijing XINHUA in English 1336 GMT 14 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 14 (XINHUA) -- A senior official of the Communist Party of China (CPC) said here today that China attaches great importance to developing its relations with the United States.

"It doesn't matter if we have different views. What is important is that we have to increase our mutual understanding," he said.

Hu Qili, member of the Political Bureau and Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, made these remarks at a meeting here this afternoon with Edmund G. Brown Jr., president of the U.S. Institute of National Strategy Study.

He told Brown that an important issue China has to solve in its reform is to expand socialist democracy and improve its socialist legal system so that the democratic rights of the people can be institutionalized and legalized.

China's reform, he said, started first in the ideological and political realm. Without major ideological and political changes, no reform is possible. "We hope that the Chinese people can get rich and at the same time have a healthy, sound and developing social environment," he said.

Brown said that the whole world is interested in China's reform. The United States and China, despite their different social systems, have a lot to learn from each other.

Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincain, vice-chairman of China's National People's Congress Standing Committee, was present at the meeting.

DPRK'S KIM IL-SONG CITES STEPS FOR REUNIFICATION

[Text] Pyongyang, June 15 (XINHUA) -- Korean President Kim Il-song pointed out that the most important step to achieve the reunification of the Korean peninsula is to "smash" the U.S. conspiracy of "two Koreas." He made these remarks in reply to questions raised by the editor-in-chief of the Yugoslav newspaper OSLOBODJENJE on 20 May.

This is a prerequisite for the Korean people to reunify their country independently and peacefully, Kim stressed. The newspaper NODONG SINMUN published in full his answers today. He said that the presence of the U.S. troops in South Korea makes it impossible to ease the tension in the peninsula.

On possible means to realize the reunification, the president reiterated the proposals of his government for tripartite talks among the Democratic People's Republic of Korea, the United States and South Korea, a peace agreement between Korea and the United States, a declaration of non-aggression between the North and the South of Korea. Provided this is done, the U.S. troops will be withdrawn from South Korea, tension in the peninsula will be eased and the relations between the North and South will be improved. Only in this way can the Korean people get united to achieve the peaceful reunification of the country by establishing a Democratic Confederate Republic of Koryo.

On the 24th Olympic Games, Kim said that the proposal for joint sponsorship by the North and the South of the games is fair and reasonable. And if it is accepted, the North will provide the best possible facilities for all events to be held in Pyongyang and warmly receive all the players.

The Korean leader also stated his views on the Non-Aligned Movement, saying that member countries of the movement, irrespective of their difference in social system and religious beliefs, should strengthen unity against arms race and stockpiling of weapons.

Kim expressed the hope that the eighth non-aligned summit to be convened in Harare, capital of Zimbabwe, in August will contribute to the settlement of the urgent problems in the world today, such as the anti-nuclear and peace movement, South-South cooperation and the establishment of a new international economic order.

KIM IL-SONG URGES NONALIGNED UNITY

OW130100 Beijing XINHUA in English 0039 GMT 13 Jan 86

[Excerpt] Belgrade, June 12 (XINHUA) -- All Non-aligned countries should strengthen unity, oppose the policy of war and condemn the arms race and stockpiling of weapons regardless of the differences in their social systems, political views and religious beliefs, Korean leader Kim Il-song said.

In an interview with Yugoslav's newspaper OSLOBODJENJE published by the official news agency TANJUG today, Kim said that non-aligned countries should not follow or join any bloc as big powers are trying to exert influence on them.

Non-aligned countries should respect each other's sovereignty and do not interfere in each other's internal affairs to make the Non-Aligned Movement an independent political force, Kim stressed in the interview which came before the eighth non-aligned summit to be convened in Harare, capital of Zimbabwe, in August.

The Korean leader maintained that newly liberated countries should solve their conflicts through peaceful means instead of force while non-aligned countries should refrain from taking steps to intensify such conflicts. Only in this way can unity of the Non-Aligned Movement be ensured, he noted.

The vice-president will discuss with Chinese leaders on bilateral relations and international issues of common interest.

Feted by Ulanhu

[Text] Beijing, June 15 (XINHUA) -- Vice-President Ulanhu said here today that the Chinese people highly value their friendship with the Filipino people. "We wish to work together with our Filipino friends for further strengthening the friendly relations and cooperation between our two countries," he said.

Ulanhu made these remarks at a banquet given by him in honor of Philippine Vice-President and Foreign Minister Salvador H. Laurel and Mrs. Laurel in the Great Hall of the People here this evening.

He said Laurel's current official visit to China soon after the formation of the new government in the Philippines has shown the importance the Philippine Government and Laurel himself have attached to the development of Sino-Filipino friendly relations and cooperation. He noted that new progress has been made in the Sino-Filipino friendly relations since the new Philippine Government was formed.

Ulanhu said that the Chinese people are deeply concerned with peace and stability of Southeast Asia. He said the Chinese Government highly appreciates a joint statement issued by Laurel and foreign ministers of other ASEAN countries not long ago in Indonesia's Bali in supporting the constructive eight-point proposal for a political settlement of the Kampuchea question put forward by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea, condemning the Vietnamese acts of aggression and urging the withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from that country.

"We hope that the people in Asia and the rest of the world enjoy peace together and achieve development and progress. Therefore, the Chinese Government unswervingly pursues an independent foreign policy of peace. It is our sincere desire to establish and develop good-neighborly and friendly relations with Southeast Asian nations who are our close neighbours," he said.

In his toast, Laurel extended to his hosts the warm greetings and best wishes of President Corazon C. Aquino and the Philippine people. Philippines' links with China go back as early as the 10th century, he said. His country has forged a relationship that is deeply rooted in the Philippine history and culture. Laurel said his delegation is here to "renew friendships and make new ones, and to reaffirm the very principles on which our relationship was established."

The vice-president spoke highly of China's achievements in its national economy, adding that the Philippines takes great interest in China's economic reforms. As the Philippine Government has adopted policies designed to make the Philippine economy more open and competitive, there will be more opportunities for an expanded economic cooperative ties with China, he said.

The Philippines also intends to expand the range of its contacts with China in the scientific and technological fields, he said. The vice-president noted that the cultural links between the two countries are being strengthened. All these exchanges have created an excellent environment for relations between the Philippines and China. "We can continue to explore new areas of cooperation with much confidence," he said. "As we look ahead into the future, we are encouraged in the belief that we can foster a more dynamic partnership."

Attending the dinner were Chinese State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian, Zhu Muzhi, chairman of the Chinese Government Reception Committee and minister of culture, and Laurel's entourage.

After his arrival here this afternoon, Laurel was honored at a ceremony at the plaza to the east of the Great Hall of the People, presided over by Ulanhu.

Holds Talks with Zhao Ziyang

[Text] Beijing, June 16 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang said today he believed the Philippines could look forward to domestic stability and economic development under the leadership of the new government.

He said China and the Philippines had been friendly neighbors historically, and their friendly relations had strengthened since the new government came to power. The Chinese Government appreciates the Philippine Government's enthusiasm for promoting bilateral friendship. Zhao was speaking at a meeting here with Philippine Vice-President Salvador Laurel, who is on an official visit to China.

Laurel said, the Philippines and China had never been enemies, and there was every reason for them to become close friends. He spoke highly of China's support for the new Philippine Government.

Zhao said it was China's policy to promote friendly relations with countries from the Association of South-East Asian Nations (ASEAN), and to wish them solidarity and prosperity. The Chinese Government values highly these countries' contributions to peace and stability in the region, Zhao said.

Laurel said the South-East Asian nations look forward to increased political and economic co-operation with China. Both leaders agreed that barter trade was good for developing countries such as theirs. They also agreed that China and the Philippines shared similar views on the Kampuchean problem, and Laurel expressed his appreciation of China's support for the eight-point proposal for a political settlement in Kampuchea. The Chinese premier asked Laurel to convey to Corazon Aquino his best wishes and those of President Li Xiannian and other Chinese leaders. He invited Mrs Aquino to visit China at a convenient date. RADIO BEIJING INTERVIEWS PHILIPPINE AMBASSADOR

HK131024 Beijing International Service in English 1130 GMT 12 Jun 86

[Feature program: "Interview With Philippine Ambassador to China, His Excellency Alfredo Yuchengco, on the Occasion of Philippine Independence Day"]

[Excerpts] [Radio Beijing -- RB]: China and the Philippines have a long traditional friendship. There is much interaction and exchanbge between the two nations. How do you think can we further develop these relations?

[Yuchengco] The relationship between China and the Philippines goes back almost 1,000 years, way before Magellan discovered the Philippines. Even in the early 11th century, there was already trade and commerce between our two countries. As you probably know, the Philippines have officially half a million Chinese. But this figure does not include the Chinese who are now Filipino citizens, nor does it include second, third, and fourth generation Chinese-Filipinos. Since diplomatic relations between our two countries was restored in 1975, after the liberation of China, trade has increased substantially. In 1985, total trade between our two countries amounted to less than U.S. $300 million. In 1986, the projected trade is estimated to be U.S. $360 million. Right after the people's revolution in February, China was the first country to send a mission to the Philippines. The cultural delegation headed by your cultural minister was very well received in my country. Your cultural minister was able to call on Vice President Laurel and President Aquino, aside from other senior officials in the Philippines. A cultural agreement was entered into by our two countries. Under this agreement, both sides agreed to exchange professors, students, as well as cultural exhibitions. This is one way of promoting a close relationship between our two countries. And we would like to see this agreement fully implemented, if not expanded.

Our vice president, Mr Laurel, is expected to visit Beijing sometime this month. This will be his second official foreign visit since the new government took power. As you know, Marcos left behind very severe political and economic problems for President Aquino. It will take titanic efforts and time to solve these problems. At this particular time, Philippines needs the help and understanding of all our friends, especially the ones in our own region in Asia. It is hoped that China will extend financial and other assistance to the Philippines during the visit to Vice President Laurel. We will never forget a friend who helps us during our hour of need. There is a saying: A friend in need is a friend indeed.

[Yuchengco] I have visited Beijing several times since the liberation of China. The first visit was when the Philippines reestablished diplomatic relations with China in 1975. I again visited China in 1982 as president of Federation of Afro-Asian Insurers and Reinsurers. At that time, the federation was invited by People's Insurance Company of China to hold its executive committee meeting here. At that meeting, I had occasion to meet Vice Premier Yao Yilin, and I must say I was very impressed with Vice Premier Yao. In 1985, I returned for the general meeting of the Federation of Afro-Asian Insurers and Reinsurers. More than 750 people attended last year's meeting. The 1985 general meeting was also sponsored by the People's Insurance Company of China, and everyone had nothing but praise for the People's Insurance Company of China. Both in 1982 and 1985, I took advantage of the two trips to visit many other cities, including Guangzhou, Guilin, Hangzhou, Shanghai, Nanjing, Inner Mongolia, Lhasa in Tibet, and [word indistinct]. I remember in 1975, there was almost no cars in the streets and practically no foreign tourists. In 1982, I noticed an increase in number of cars and foreign tourists, but the increases in both cases were not substantial. I was flabbergasted in 1985 at the number of cars, television sets, and foreign tourists in China.

If I may be permitted to be very frank, I think one should control the number of tourists coming to China. One should not accept more tourists than there are available facilities. In 1985, I noticed that many tourists were sleeping in the lobby of hotels, and also many tourists were bumped off airplanes in spite of confirmed reservations. This does not create goodwill. I think although China imported too many cars and other luxury goods in the past 2 years, I understand the government is now correcting the situation.

One last point I would like to mention is the sanitary facilities available in Beijing. I think with the number of tourists coming here, it can stand some improvement, especially in the public tourist spots like the Great Wall, the Ming Tombs, etc.

[RB] Thank you very much, Mr Ambassador.

AUSTRALIA'S HAWKE EXPLAINS NUCLEAR ARMS STAND

[Text] Canberra, June 8 (XINHUA) -- Australian Prime Minister Robert Hawke today explained Australia's stand to the recent development of U.S. and Soviet attitudes toward the limitation of nuclear weapons.

Speaking at the Labor Party conference of the South Australian State, Hawke disclosed that he recently wrote to U.S. President Ronald Reagan to express Australia's concern over the U.S. intention to breach the arms limitations set out in the SALT II Treaty and wrote to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev urging the Soviet Union in the strongest terms to demonstrate full compliance with existing agreements. He said that in a world where nuclear weapons exist, the main concern must be the avoidance of nuclear war.

Referring to the South Pacific Nuclear Free Zone Treaty, he noted that Australia associates itself with the common aspiration of South Pacific countries to prevent the testing, acquisition, production and stationing of nuclear weapons and the dumping of nuclear waste in the region.

Talking about the apartheid policy of the south African regime, he termed it a monstrously immoral system imposed by an armed and ruthless state apparatus on a largely defenceless black majority which continues to be denied the most elementary human rights. He said, his country will "support comprehensive mandatory economic sanctions (against the regime of South Africa) if the world community decides to apply them."

[Text] Beijing, June 14 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang expressed the hope today that the Sino-Bhutanese border will become a border of peace friendship.

Meeting a Bhutanese delegation here this afternoon, the premier expressed satisfaction with the third round of boundary talks in Beijing during which the Chinese and Bhutanese delegations exchanged views on the guiding principles for settling the boundary question in a frank and friendly atmosphere. He said, "It is China's sincere hope to settle the Sino-Bhutanese bounary question at an early date. Our boundary question is not so complicated and can be resolved easily."

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON HU YAOBANG'S EUROPEAN TRIP

[Full text of 13 June speech by CPC Central Committee General Secretary Hu Yaobang at Congress of Industry and Commerce of FRG: "China Seeks To Develop Long-term Economic Cooperation With Europe" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Bonn, 13 Jun (XINHUA) - Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the CPC Central Committee, today delivered on invitation an important speech at the Congress of Industry and Commerce of the FRG. The full text of this speech, entitled "China Seeks To Develop Long-term Economic Cooperation With Europe," is as follows:

Mr Chairman,

Ladies and Gentlemen:

Thanks to the invitation of the Congress of Industry and Commerce of the FRG which gives me the opportunity to meet notable personages of the FRG economic circles today, first of all, would you, please, allow me to extend my heartfelt thanks to all the German friends who have made contributions to promoting the economic cooperation between our two countries.

Today, I would like to discuss with all of you the way of ensuring a steady and stable development of the economic cooperation between China on the one hand and the FRG and other Western European countries on the other, from now till the 21st century.

As all of you already know, it has been 7 years since China put into effect the policy of opening up to the outside world and expanding economic cooperation with foreign countries. Facts in the past 7 years have proved, as we had expected at the very beginning, that Western European countries are important partners for cooperation in economic development. By and large, gratifying progress has been made over the past few years in our economic cooperation with Western European countries, among which the FRG has always had the lead. And both of us are satisfied with the progress that has since been made. The fine economic relations between our two countries are reflected in many aspects. Here I would like to cite four points in particular:

First, bilateral trade has increased steadily without dramatic ups and downs. Over the years your country has always been China's number one trade partner in Western Europe. The FRG ranks third among other trade partners of China, next only to Japan and the United States. The total value of bilateral trade between China and the FRG in 1985 exceeded 3 billion, an increase of 38.8 percent over the previous year, and more than 11 times as much as 1972 when diplomatic relations were established between the two countries.

Second, the scope of cooperation is being increasingly broadened, and the ways of cooperation diversified. At present, the two countries have reached agreement on several hundred projects of economic cooperation, covering such fields as machine-building, chemical industry, civil engineering, coal industry, metallurgy, light industry, energy, communications, and transportation. The ways of cooperation and diversified, including cooperative production, compensation trade, joint venture, joint research and manufacture, export of labor service, and so on.

Not only has remarkable success been achieved in some large cooperative projects, a good start has also been made in cooperation with small-and medium-sized enterprises. Not only has the cooperation between the two countries at the federal or central level been constantly strengthened, exchange between provinces and states and between Chinese and FRG cities has also boomed. So far, 16 pairs of Chinese and FRG provinces, states, and cities have established partnership or friendly relationships, and positive results have als been scored in cooperation between the two countries in third countries.

Third, cooperation in science and technology is developing in breadth and depth. The two sides have concluded 37 agreements and protocols on large-scale scientific and technological cooperative projects. Some German companies have been transferring technology to China by the means of joint design and cooperation in production. The FRG Government and some non-governmental organizations have organized on their own or in cooperation with the Chinese Government many training courses and training centers, of which the latest example is the Modern Industrial Technical Training Center to be set up in Tianjin. In recent years, your country has sent many specialists and scholars to give lectures in China, to serve as consultants, or to assume official posts. All of them have done an excellent job, among whom Mr Werner Gerich, director of a plant in Wuhan City, is the best-known representative. In addition, the federal government and business community of your country have provided China with quite a number of scholarships, and some 1,700 people from China are studying or received training in various parts of the Federal Republic.

Fourth, initial results have been achieved in developing assistance and cooperation projects. At the beginning of the 1980's, the FRG Government recognized China as a developing country and started to provide technical assistance to China. This has been going on smoothly. In addition, the FRG entered into financial cooperation with China last year. The funds involved in these two items are increasing year by year, playing a positive role in promoting cooperation in medium- and small-sized projects.

The economic cooperation between our two countries has developed in breadth and depth in the short span of only a few years. This is by no means accidental, but a result of many factors.

First of all, there is no conflict of fundamental interests between China and the FRG. The friendly relations between the two countries have been developing smoothly since the establishment of diplomatic ties in 1972. In the current international situation, we both need peace and hope to achieve common prosperity through our cooperation. The FRG would like to see a developed and strong China and China also wishes the FRG prosperity. The economic cooperation between the two countries has a solid political foundation.

Second, China is the largest developing country in the world and abounds in human and material resources and has a vast and expanding market, but lacks construction funds, advanced technology, and managerial expertise. The FRG, as one of the most developed countries in the world, has abundant capital, advanced technology, and rich managerial experience, but is in need of market and raw materials. The economic structure of the two countries makes it possible for them to complement each other and make up for each other's deficiences and become good partners in long-term cooperation.

Third, persisting in implementing the policy of opening up to the outside world, China is actively seeking to expand economic and technological exchange and cooperation with foreign countries. Meanwhile, your country takes the stand of supporting China's opening-up policy, attaches importance to cooperation with China, and has made positive efforts. So, we happen to hold the same view.

Fourth, your country has two major favorable factors for developing cooperation with us: One is that it enjoys a good reputation among Chinese consumers for the good quality of its products, its reliable service, and its good faith in fulfilling contracts. Moreover, German workers, technicians, and engineers are widely acclaimed by the Chinese people for their conscientious attitude toward work and their high sense of efficiency. The other factor is that the FRG Government and business community have adopoted an enlightened attitude toward technological transfer. Of course, if you can overcome the drawback of high prices, it will help add to the competitive edge of your products.

Although gratifying progress has been made in the economic cooperation between our two countries, I do not think that both countries will be content with the existing state of affairs. As I see it, there is still a vast potential for cooperation between our two countries. During our Seventh 5-year Plan, beginning this year, the total volume of China's imports and exports is expected to increase by 40 percent, reaching at least 83 billion by the year 1990. Use of foreign capital and acquisition of advanced technology will also expand in scope accordingly, with emphasis on resources development projects, infrastructural construction, such as energy and transport projects, and technological transformation of the machine-building and electronics industries. In all these fields, the FRG is strong and can achieve a great deal.

As far as prospects of economic cooperation are concerned, our friends present at this gathering may ask whether China can uphold its opening-up policy during a long period to come. I think that why people have such a question in mind is understandable.

It will be impossible for an economically backward country with a large population like China to become prosperous without a long-term struggle for several decades or even a century. For this reason, we set the long-term target of quadrupling our gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production by the end of this century, with the 1980 record as a base figure, and then approaching the economic level of developed countries after about 50 years of efforts.

To meet this target, it is imperative for us to resolve two major problems: first, the need to clearly establish the guiding ideology on the orientation and path of development, and to formulate a whole set of principles and policies suited to China's conditions; and, second, the need to obtain neessary funds, technology, and trained personnel.

Regarding the first problem, I can tell you with assurance, we have, through 7 or 8 years' exploratory work, found the road to build socialism with Chinese characteristics, or at least we have sketched an outline. China has begun to reform the old highly-concentrated economic structure which operates the economy by administrative means and is vigorously developing the planned commodity economy based on public ownership. The reform has already brought substantial benefits to the broad masses of people. The orientation of reform will remain unchanged. This year, our main task is to perfect and consolidate the reform measures hat have already been introduced, and, from next year on, we will make greater strides in reform.

As for the second problem, I would frankly say it is still far from being solved. The development of a country depends mainly on its manpower and its intellectual, financial, and material resources. This is especially so for a big country with a population of 1 billion. Meanwhile, cooperation between countries is also indispensable. No country can proceed with modernization behind closed doors.

One of the important lessons we have learned is that China's economic stagnation and backwardness over the past 3 or 4 centuries were caused by prolonged, self-imposed seclusion. It is based precisely on this realization that we are determined to pursue the policy of opening up to the outside world for a long time to come.

Briefly, the main contents of China's opening-up policy in the economic and technological fields are: Expansion of imports and exports, utilization of foreign funds, acquisition of advanced scientific knowledge and technological know-how from abroad, learning advanced methods of enterprise operations and management, opening coastal cities, establishing special economic zones, and developing various forms of economic and technological cooperation. By the end of last year, China had utilized over $20 billion of foreign funds and approved the establishment of over 2,300 Chinese-foreign joint ventures, more than 3,700 cooperative enterprises, and 120 enterprises with exclusive foreign investment. Of course, this is but a beginning.

Everything is hard in the beginning. Due to lack of experience, some faults are inevitable in the course of opening up to the outside world. And misunderstanding between us and some friends can hardly be avoided while we are summing up experience and correcting our mistakes. Here I can responsibly tell you the door China has opened will never be closed again. Should there be any "change" in our policy of opening up to the outside world, the change will be that the policy be improved further with less flaws and become increasingly conducive to economic cooperation and exchange.

All of you are experts in international economic operation. As to how to develop economic cooperation more successfully between China on the one hand and the FRG and other Western European countries on the other, we are always ready to listen to your views and suggestions. Here I wish to offer some ideas for deliberation.

First, we should uphold a farsighted viewpoint. In light of our past experience, we feel that both your government and the German economic community have shown a deep insight in viewing things. Undoubtedly, this is extremely important to the development of cooperation. China's modernization is a magnificent project which can only be accomplished through the efforts of several generations. There is no doubt that the scope of cooperation between China and foreign countries will keep expanding as long as the economy is developing. For the moment, however, the scope of economic cooperation cannot help but be subject to restriction by our limited resources. In some cases, we are just "unable to do what we want very much to do;" in others, the projects concerned may not yield substantial profits on the part of our partners for the time being. In order to maintain the momentun of stable development in the cooperation between our two sides for a long time to come, we should not judge the gains or losses, benefits or disadvantages on the basis of a short period or a single issue. What is necessary is to make decisions from a broad and long-term viewpoint. From the farsighted point of view, we hope that you and our other friends in Western Europe will practice a policy of larger sales at smaller profits in trade, adopt a more open attitude to technological transfer, and grant more favorable payment terms. The Chinese people attach importance to friendship and good faith. All foreign friends who sincerely cooperate with China will eventually bring about the prosperity and development of their own businesses, while helping China develop.

Second, we should adhere to the principle of equality, mutual benefit, and reciprocity. A striking problem currently existing in the economic relations between China and the FRG is that the Chinese side has more imports than exports, resulting in an increased trade deficit.

This has adversely affected our payment capability and limited expansion of our imports. We do not demand absolutely balanced trade, nor do we stand for a reduction in our imports to solve this problem. As a country with a vast territory, a large population, and rich natural resources, China is developing its economy with a view to meeting the people's evergrowing needs. Such a condition determines that our economy must always be domestic market-oriented. We expand exports with the aim of raising imports. Therefore, in expanding expots, we will not contend with you for your market but will help to expand your market. We sincerely hope that the German side will take positive measures to help China expand its exports, so that the relations of economic cooperation between the two sides will develop more smoothly.

Third, we should have patience and mutual understanding. China's social system is different from that of the FRG and other Western European countries, and there are also differences in various specific rules and in ways of doing things. Therefore, in dealing with each other, it is difficult to avoid things of one kind or another that may fall short of our expectations. I am not going to shield our shortcomings. At present, we lack experience in the implementation of the opening-up policy, we are undergoing the process in which the new system is replacing the old one, and, in addition, long-standing bureautic pratices have not yet been removed. Therefore, dilatary style of work, disputes over trivial things, and poor working efficiency still exist. You must have had personal experience with these phenomena. Honestly speaking, I am even more discontented with such a status quo than you. And we are doing our utmost to improve the situation. Of course, in some cases, the blame should not be placed solely on us. Doing business involves the economic interests of both sides, and it is a general practice to get three different estimates when making a purchase. I think you must understand the knack in this more clearly than I. Under such tentative difficulties, if we are patient in long-term planning in the spirit of mutual understanding, we will surely find a way.

Fourth, we should try our best to explore various forms of cooperation. Different parts of China have greatly different circumstances and needs. In the wake of the reform, the decisionmaking power of provinces, cities, and enterprises has been expanded. Different states and enterprises of your country have their own strong points and; of course, they enjoy an even higher degree of decisionmaking power. Therefore, it is natural for us to develop cooperation in many forms, at multiple levels, and through multiple channels. Here I wish to point out in particular that we welcome enterpreneurs from your country and other Western European countries to make investments in China, incuding direct investments in our provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions, and to establish joint ventures and run cooperative production projects with us. We also welcome you to establish plants with your exclusive investment. We welcome you to China, not only to start tertiary industry projects, but even more to exploit our natural resources and run manufacturing industries. In addition, we welcome you to do more to help us train qualified personnel and send a greater number of experts with real ability and learning to China to pass on their experience and knowledge. The great Chinese writer Lu Xun was correct in saying: "In fact there is no road in the world. Roads emerge because a lot of people have walked on them." I hope that you wil make greater strides and further enhance your pioneering spirit. I am sure that the road will become broader and broader.

I have heard a German saying: "Friendship will be terminated as far as the money matter is concerned." The economic cooperation between China and the FRG will naturally involve money. However, both the Chinese and German people attach great importance to friendship, and their friendship promotes cooperation, while mutually beneficial cooperation can certainly bring about common prosperity, thus furthering friendship. I believe that you, our friends, agree with my view. Let us join hands more closely and make positive and concerted efforts to turn this beautiful prospect into reality. Thank all of you.

[Text] Bonn, 13 Jun (XINHUA) -- FRG Chancellor Kohl hosted a luncheon in honor of visiting General Secretary of the CPC Central Committee Hu Yaobang at the (Schallmburg) palace today.

The two leaders spoke on the occasion. Chancellor Kohl described Hu Yaobang's visit as a "bridge of friendship" between the peoples of the two countries. Traditional friendship exists between the two peoples, and bilateral relations have grown even more close since the establishment of diplomatic relations in 1972. Kohl said that the FRG regards China as "a very important and trustworthy partner" in the politial field.

Kohl said that, despite differences in social systems and historical conditions, the FRG and China share identical views on many political issues. He said that both sides "focus their foreign polcies on consolidating world peace and stability," and that the "two governments call for the realization of the rights of self-determination of the Afghan and Cambodian peoples and the withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan and Cambodia."

Kohl spoke highly of China's achievements in the economic reform and the open policy. He pledged to continue efforts to expand trade and step up economic and technological cooperation and cultural exchanges between the two countries.

In his speech, Hu Yaobang said that Sino-Federal German relations have entered "a new stage of all-round development" since the establishment of diplomatic ties in 1972. He said: "The emergence of such a gratifying situation in Sino-Federal German relations is not accidental. It is because neither conflict of fundamental interests nor pending historical problems exist between our two countries. What is more important is that the two countries have gone beyond their differences in social systems and ideologies in treating each other with sincerity and on friendly terms, and expressing the aspiration to develop cooperation on the basis of equality and mutual benefit." He said that it is the Chinese Government's steadfast policy to develop cooperative relations with the FRG in all fields on the basis of long-term stability.

Turning to the international situation, Hu Yaobang reaffirmed China's support for the FRG's efforts to safeguard peace in Europe and the world as a whole, promote unity and build up the strength of Western Europe, increase contacts with Eastern Europe, push for multipolarization of the world, and enhance friendship and cooperation between peoples of different countries. China is willing to further strengthen cooperation with the FRG in international affairs, he said. The fundamental goal of China's policy, he reiterated, is to oppose hegemonism, safeguard world peace, develop friendly cooperation with other countries, and promote common prosperity.

This morning, General Secretary Hu Yaobang had breakfast with Federal German Foreign Minister Genscher, during which they had a cordial talk.

Kohl's Luncheon Remarks

[Text] Bonn, June 13 (XINHUA) -- Federal German Chancellor Helmut Kohl today said the relations between Federal Germany and China "are advancing on the sound track." Speaking at a luncheon given by him in honor of visiting General Secretary Hu Yaobang, Kohl said, the development of the relations that Federal German and Chinese statesmen are consciencely [as received] and firmly promoting, will have an impact on the future relations in the next country.

Since 1972, the maintenance of diplomatic relations between the two countries has benefited both sides and extended close ties advantageous to either side, Kohl said. "We describe China as a very important and credible partner in the political field," he said. Kohl held that China and Federal Germany always have identical views on political comments, benefits involving both sides and fixing of the objectives.

In order to keep up the cooperation for peace, Kohl said, Federal Germany and China are against acts injuring international peace order. The Federal German and Chinese Governments call for the realization of the rights of self-determination of the Afghan and Kampuchean peoples and the withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan and Kampuchea, Kohl said.

Citing achievements in the smoothly cooperative relations, Kohl said that the economies of our two countries are complementary to each other. This complementarity [as received] has laid a basis to the development of the bilateral economic relations and also provides broad prospects in this regard, he added. It is a primary task for statesmen to point out a way to make people closer, he said, adding that "we are advancing on the sound track."

Hu Gives Press Conference

HK140330 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1816 GMT 13 Jun 86

[Text] Bonn, 13 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Before answering reporters' questions at a news conference in Bonn this afternoon, CPC Central Committee General Secretary Hu Yaobang said that as a result of his 2 short days of visits to Bonn and other places, "I feel profoundly that Sino-German friendship has gone deep into people's minds." "There are great and extremely broad prospects for friendship and cooperation between our two countries, which is based on mutual respect, equality, and mutual benefit."

Hu Yaobang then proceeded to answer reporters' questions. Vice Premier Li Peng and Vice Chairman Fei Xiaotong attended the news conference.

German radio reporter: Did you discuss with the chancellor the Chernobyl nuclear power station accident and the deployment of Soviet guided missiles on China's borders?

Hu Yaobang replied: There was a slight mention of nuclear cooperation. We exchanged some views on the Chernobyl nuclear power station accident. We did not discuss this time the deployment of Soviet guided missiles on China's border. Our friends are very concerned for China to promote safety cooperation with various countries in its nuclear power development. I will ask Vice Premier Li Peng to speak on this matter.

Li Peng: China's nuclear power station construction effort has only just started. (Hu Yaobang: We do not have a single station at present.) Not one is in operation. This provides a condition for us: We can seriously absorb the lesson of the Chernobyl nuclear power station accident in the Soviet Union and can build our stations a bit better. The technology now being adopted by China is also completely different from that at Chernobyl; it is relatively mature technology in which operational experience has been acquired over a long period. China has abundant coal and water conservancy resources, and so we will not rely solely on nuclear power stations to solve our electric power problem. We are welcome to undertake extensive cooperation with a number of countries on the question of nuclear power station safety.

Reporter Li Wai-hing of the Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO asked: some FRG newspapers publish commentaries today saying that General Secretary Hu has made great contributions on two issues: 1) He has spurred the lowering of the average age of the CPC's cadres and brought a large number of young and relatively well-educated cadres into the center of power. 2) He has enabled China's intellectuals to enjoy relatively great freedom again, including freedom in literature and art creation. Would General Secretary Hu kindly give his views on these two matters?

Hu Yaobang: I have made some contribution on these two matters and also on some other issues, but these could not be called great contributions.

Regarding the effort to make our cadre structure younger and better educated, the current state of progress is roughly as follows: There are about 10 million party and state cadres. Over 2 million have already retired due to overage. About 2 million have been promoted from among young people (including middle-aged and young), who have relatively high standards of education and knowledge. This business has not yet been completed, and further readjustment is necessary. I estimate that by the time of the 13th party congress next year, several hundred thousand more will have retired or been promoted.

On the question of policies regarding intellectuals, during several decades of history there were periods when we acted correctly and relatively well, and there were also periods when we made mistakes. In the 1930's, at Chairman Mao Zedong's proposal, the CPC issued a resolution on recruiting large numbers of intellectuals and correctly treating the intellectuals. It can be said that in the 20 years from the 1930's to the 1950's, our policy toward the intellectuals (including writers, artists, and scientists) made them very satisfied. Then, for nearly 20 years, beginning probably in 1957, we made mistakes in treating the intellectuals, and it could be said that we made serious mistakes. Beginning 7 years ago -- that is, since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have not only resumed our correct methods of the past but have also developed and enriched the policies toward the intellectuals. I can say in a responsible way that 95 to 98 percent of the intellectuals are satisfied. Professor Fei Xiaotong, who is with us today, is a Chinese intellectual, and if you like you can ask him to confirm this.

A reporter from a private West German radio station asked: China desires to strengthen its economic relations with Europe. Does China have special desires in this respect regarding the FRG?

Hu Yaobang: We desire to develop friendship and cooperation in the economic field with all countries in the world on the basis of equality and mutual benefit. Chairman Deng Xiaoping has said that our foreign policy is to open up the countries of the West, to the socialist countries, and also to the Third World. Western Europe, and especially the FRG, is one of the countries to which we pay particular attention [sentence as received]. This is because they have fine technology and product quality and relatively good service quality. Both sides strongly desire to cooperate.

Reporter of West German radio: Many German enterprises want to invest in China, but they need certain security guarantees. They would like to know if China's open policy can be sustained.

Hu Yaobang: Foreign investment in China in recent years has amounted to $16 billion. The United States ranks first in this investment. We will not violate the principle of mutual benefit. If certain foreign businessmen are still worried, they should take another look; we have signed investment protection agreements with many countries.

A VOA reporter said: In your talks with Foreign Minister Genscher, did you agree with the views of the FRG on the questions of Afghanistan and Cambodia?

Hu Yaobang: I mentioned our views on the Afghan and Cambodian questions. Herr Genscher did not express views different from mine, nor did he mention the FRG's policies on these matters.

A reporter of the Hong Kong WEN WEI PO: Some people say that China has decided to store West German nuclear waste in exchange for West German technology. Is there any new development in this matter?

Li Peng: China is not prepared to accept any country's nuclear waste for storage in China.

Reporter of the Voice of Germany radio: You just said that one or two countries have similar or identical views on many issues. Does this issue the question of disarmament, and evaluation of the latest Soviet disarmament proposals?

Hu Yaobang: We had a simple exchange of views on the disarmament issue without discussing it in depth. On this issue, China has consistently advocated that the big powers should take the lead, especially the big nuclear powers. China will certainly not lag behind. I did not talk about how we had reduced the number of our forces by 1 million all at once.

Reporter of TIME: Many problems have cropped up in the modernization drive, such as inflation together with unhealthy trends, corruption, embezzlement, and so on in China. Mr General Secretary, how do you propose solving those problems?

Hu Yaobang: The range of price rises in China last year was a bit high, but I do not think it could be called inflation. We have controlled things too rigidly as regards prices over the past several decades, an this was not beneficial for economic reform. Our previous methods of pricing things proteted backward products. There has been no wavering in our resolved for reform. However, the speed of reform will slow down a bit this year and next.

A reporter of the SUNDAY TIMES of Nigeria: Did you discuss the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative plan with Chancellor Kohl?

Hu Yaobang: No. We are not in favor of an arms race in space, but we are in favor of developing the peaceful use of sophisticated space technology.

Roundup of Munich Activities

["Roundup: Hu Yaobang Warmly Welcomed in Munich" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Munich, June 14 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese leader Hu Yaobang today received a warm welcome from the well-wishers of Bavaria when he arrived in Munich, the capital of the southern Federal German state which has developed close relations with China.

Several hundred people were waiting spontaneously in front of the City Hall, when the Chinese Communist Party general secretary arrived there this afternoon. He embraced a three-year-old girl, who ran out of the crowd to greet him.

What a pity it was, Hu said later to Mayor Georg Kronawitter, that he couldn't speak German to her. "It may be too late for me to learn a new language, but I would like to have my grandchildren learn your fine language from those Chinese students who are now studying in your city."

In the evening, speaking at a banquet held in his honor by Minister-President of Bavaria Franz-Josef Strauss, Hu reiterated that the expanding cooperation between China and Europe will undoubtedly make a greater contribution to safeguarding world peace and stability.

Hu also praised Minister-President Strauss for his far-sightedness on international issues. He noted that even in the early 1970s, Strauss had claimed that the days of superpower-domination in handling world affairs were over. He had called for the development of Sino-Federal German relations and for a more active Sino-West European joint role in handling world affairs.

"In Europe," General Secretary Hu said, "important progress has been made towards a united and strong Western Europe" while at the same time Eastern and Western Europe are increasing diplomatic exchanges. The present situation has proved, and will continue to prove, that a united and strong Europe is an important force in safeguarding world peace, he added.

Hu said he was very pleased to be in Munich because Bavaria has very close relations with China. In the past decade, Strauss has visited China three times and Bavaria has forged a partnership with China's Shandong Province and held a single-state economic exhibition in Qingdao. He assured Strauss that relations between China and Federal Germany will grow with long-term stability.

In his welcoming speech at the dinner, Strauss reaffirmed his deep conviction that a strong and independent China constitutes a factor of stability and peace in east Asia and in the world at large. Strauss, who met late Chairman Mao Zedong and Premier Zhao Enlai during his first visit to China in 1975, also expressed his satisfaction between China and Federal Germany and Bavaria in particular in the past decade.

Hu arrived in Munich after enjoying a boat-trip on the Rhine from St. Goarshausen to Bingen. Flanked by forests, vineyards and imposing fortresses, that part of the Rhine is regarded as the most beautiful of the 1,320-kilometer-long river.

Earlier today in Bonn, Hu met for a second round of talks with Social Democratic Party chairman Willy Brandt, who with Chancellor Helmut Kohl invited the Chinese leader to Federal Germany. Hu arrived in Bonn Thursday for a four-day visit after a trip to Britain.

Both leaders expressed satisfaction with the exchange of visits and cooperation between the two parties since Brandt's visit to China two years ago and explored ways to further develop friendly relations between two countries. They also exchanged views on relations between Eastern and Western Europe and other international issues of common concern.

Tomorrow, Hu is to visit an agricultural institute and a Barvarian farmer family in the suburbs of Munich before leaving for France to continue his four-nation European tour. He will also travel to Italy.

Visits Animal Hubandry Center

[Excerpt] Munich, June 15 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Communist Party leader Hu Yaobang, "impressed" by the developed animal husbandry here, said today there are "bright prospects" for further cooperation between China and Federal Germany in this field. This morning, Hu visited an animal husbandry research center in the suburbs of Munich. The center, the largest of its kind in the country, provides services to farmers including information delivery and disease prevention. The center also helps train personnel from other countries people from 17 nations, including China, are studying at the center.

During his visit, Hu said that he hoped the Chinese trainees would play an important role in developing China's animal husbandry when they return to China. The general secretary also expressed the hope that growth of the sheep and cattle population in Federal Germany and China would increase. Bavaria has a long history of animal breeding, about 90 percent of farmers there engage in animal husbandry.

Later, Hu visited a small village and spoke with a farmer in his home. Afterwards, Hu had his luncheon at a lake-side hotel where, sipping a mug of Bavarian beer, said it is one of the best in the world.

In the afternoon, Chinese Vice-Premier Li Peng discussed expansion of technical cooperation with Carl H. Hahn, chairman of the board of directors of the Volkswagen Company, Karl Heinz Kaske, chairman of the board of directors of the Siemens Company, and the chairman of the Federal German airline, Lufthansa, Heinz Ruhau.

French Officials Welcome Visit

[Text] Paris, June 13 (XINHUA) -- French officials say Chinese Communist Party leader Hu Yaobang's upcoming visit to France is "very important" and marks a "great stage" in the development of Franco-Chinese relations. Hu, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, is scheduled to arrive Monday for a four-day official visit to France. He is now in Federal Germany on the second leg of his current four-nation European trip, which has taken him to Britain and will end in Italy.

In an interview with XINHUA Friday, an Elysee Palace official, who asked not to be named, said French leaders hope to see new developments in relations between the two countries, which were established by the late leaders Charles de Gaulle and Mao Zedong in 1964.

President Francois Mitterrand, said an Elysee spokeswoman, pays "particular attention" to the Franco-Chinese relations. Since Mitterand's China visit in 1983, bilateral relations have been strong, she said.

The two countries have similar views on major international events, but that is not enough, and President Mitterand is anxious for concrete results in bilateral relations, the spokeswoman continued. She expressed the hope that political consultations between leaders of the two countries would be as wide-ranged and deep as possible. Franco-Chinese trade has increased considerably, and is likely to increase even further following several important contracts signed in 1985. France will import more goods from China, the Elysee spokeswoman said.

An information official from the prime minister's office said the long history of Chinese civilization has "great attraction" to Prime Minister Jacques Chirac, who is interested in many aspects of Chinese culture.

Meanwhile, Francois de Villepin, president of the France-China committee, told XINHUA in an interview Friday that Hu's visit will strengthen China's links with France and Western Europe at large. He said General Secretary Hu's current European trip would help further improve China's economic and trade relations with West European countries. De Villepin said he hoped China's policy of opening to the outside world would continue but also strengthens its trade links with the West.

Three days before Hu's arrival, Paris is gearing up to give a warm welcome to its Chinese guest.

[BEIJING REVIEW on Hu's Tour]

[Article by Mu Youlin: "Hu Makes First Tour of Western Europe"]

[Text] Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party, will leave on June 9 for Britain, Federal Germany, France and Italy, the first official visit to Western Europe by a Chinese top leader in this capacity. Hu's tour is an event of far-reaching significance in the history of China's relations with Western Europe. It heralds a new stage in China's friendly cooperation with these countries.

Although their social systems and ideologies differ, China and Western Europe do not have conflicts of fundamental interest, nor are there any major obstacles to the development of their relations. Rather, they have the common goals of safeguarding world peace and further developing their own economies. They also share other intersts and common ground on many major international issues.

Both China and Western Europe sustained heavy losses during World War II. This common experience explains why neither wants to see war again. Both China and Western Europe are conscious of the heavy responsibilities of safeguarding world peace and stability. Both hope to see an improved East-West relationship. Both are working for the relaxation of international tension and oppose the arms race.

China's independent peaceful foreign policy and its refusal to form an alliance with any powers or groups of powers have contributed to world peace and stability. Western Europe is seeking to grow stronger through unity and is developing a "European consciousness."

China maintains that a united, powerful Western Europe is beneficial to Europe's security and stability and vital to world peace. China hopes Western Europe will continue its efforts for unity and will exert a still greater influence on world affairs. Western Europe in turn holds that a powerful and prosperous China is a balancing force in the world and poses no threat to Western Europe, but rather promotes Western Europe's independent development. Both are against power politics and advocate that countries large, medium or small should equally play their roles in world affairs and spur the world towards multi-polarity.

China, as the largest developing country with rich resources and a vast market, is pressing ahead with its modernization programme on an unprecedented scale. Western Europe, where industrially developed countries are concentrated and which possesses advanced technologies and abundant funds, is working to invigorate its economy and develop its sophisticated technologies. Each having its own economic advantages, China and Western Europe can complement each other, and should be partners rather than competitors. In the past few years, China's open policy has sparked the interest of Western Europe, and the prospects are bright for economic and technological cooperation between Western Europe and China.

In brief, China and Western Europe share the same or similar interests in politics and economics, and each has the desire to develop long-term and stable relations of friendship and cooperation, relationships which have a solid political foundation and favourable objective conditions. Such cooperation has had a good beginning and its potential for development is great.

General Secretary Hu Yaobang visits four West European countries with the desire to promote mutual understanding, strengthen friendship, expand cooperation and defend peace. While in these countries, he will exchange views with government and Party leaders of the four nations on international issue of common interest and the further development of bilateral relations. He will also travel places in each of these countries, meet local people and aquaint himself with the achievements and experience gained by these countries in various fields. It is hoped Hu's visit will strengthen mutual understanding on major issues, promote friendship between the peoples of China and Western Europe, and boost cooperation and exchanges in the economic, technological, cultural and scientific fields. The visit is not only in the interest of the peoples of China and Western Europe, but will also help uphold world peace and stability.

BUDAPEST TV INTERVIEWS WU XUEQIAN ON ECONOMIC REFORM

LD122302 Budapest Television Service in Hungarian 1955 GMT 12 Jun 86

[Text] For decades there has been no PRC foreign minister in our country. To be more precise, not since the 1957 visit by the great statesman Zhou Enlai. Now, since a decisive improvement has taken place in relations between Hungary and China and the relationship has become cordial, Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian, who is also a member of the CPC Politburo, has paid an official visit to our country. He was also received by Janos Kadar who spent nearly 2 hours with him. Minister Wu spoke in very warm terms about this meeting in the interview he gave to us. We will now quote other extracts from this conversation.

[Reporter] We here in Hungary are occupied with reforming our economy. We know that a large-scale economic process is going on in your country too. From our own experiences we know that at such times there are positive results, but negative developments also occur. How do you see these issues connected with the economic reform in the Chinese context?

[Wu Xueqian] Our economic reform has been going on for 5 or 6 years now. In the Seventh 5-Year Plan which is just starting we want to continue this reform further. We can say that in its phase so far reform has achieved major results in the villages. In the Seventh 5-Year Plan we basically want to realize this general economic reform in the towns. One of the objectives of our reform is to revive our country's economic life; to make it possible for our country -- as the result of a struggle over several decades -- to become a modern socialist country with Chinese characteristics. In the course of the reform we are sticking to two directives. One is that we keep to reform steadfastly and firmly; in other words, we want to carry out the reform whatever happens. On the other hand, it is also important that in introducing concrete reform measures we should advance with circumspection and deliberation. If we come up against difficulties in the course of reform, if problems of one kind or an other emerge, then we must sum up our experiences in time and make the necessary corrections.

[Reporter] What are the difficulties and the problems which you were so kind as to mention?

[Xu Xueqian] Our main problem is we have not yet fully carried out reform. Therefore, we are in a situation where the new and the old economic mechanisms are in force simultaneously. When in the course of reform, certain problems such as price movements occur, then both the new and the old mechanisms find expression.

[Reporter] Could you please give us more concrete details about the difficulties and problems that have arisen since reform began?

[Wu Xueqian] If we want to be specific, there are a great many. Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang mentioned these in his report. I will give some specific examples. One of the most important tasks we must perform today is handing down spheres of authority. We must achieve independence at our enterprises in the real sense of the word; they should dispose of their own profits, bear their losses themselves, and should be able to act independently in issues affecting the enterprise's work of economic production.

Apart from this the central plan directions must be replaced by plans which are in the form of a briefing. We must change the state of affairs where we centralized everything too rigidly. These are the most important problems which we must face today in the course of the general reform.

XINHUA ANALYSIS VIEWS WARSAW PACT PROPOSAL

["News Analysis: The New Disarmament Proposal From Budapest Summit" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Beijing, June 13 (XINHUA) -- It is not a bad time for the Soviet Union and its allies to make disarmament proposals: U.S. President Ronald Reagan is vowing to pull out of the SALT II Treaty, making many of his friends wonder how committed he is to arms control.

Now that leaders of the seven-member Warsaw Pact closed their two-day summit in Budapest with a major East-West troop reduction proposal, the United States and its NATO allies will have to sit down to scrutinize this arms reduction appeal before penning their own versions.

The Warsaw Pact proposal, which calls for an East-West troop reduction of 100,000 to 150,000 soldiers for each side over the next one or two years and a 25 percent cut in troop strength by the early 1990's, appears to be more dynamic than earlier proposals. It contained details of a general reduction call made by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev on April 18 when he addressed a Democratic German Communist Party congress, and suggested a clear timetable for the reductions.

The Warsaw Pact also broadened its former stand on disarmament by agreeing to verification measures for arms reduction, including on-site inspection of disarmament and troop reduction efforts.

The issue of verification has long been a sticking point in the sterile Vienna negotiations of the past 13 years.

In NATO's eye, however, the latest initiatives -- which may to some extent reflect the wishes of Europeans who do not want to see an armed confrontation between the worlds two biggest military blocs -- would squeeze the U.S. Armed Forces out of Europe while maintaining a strong Soviet military presence there.

It is evident that the proposed equal troops cuts for both NATO and the Warsaw Pact would leave the Soviet Union with an advantage because the number of troops the Soviet Union now has stationed on the continent is much larger than that of the United States.

The United States has about 300,000 servicemen in Western Europe, but in Democratic Germany alone the Soviet Union has the same number of soldiers.

NATO may also consider it disappointing that the proposal failed to mention medium-range missiles stationed east of the Ural mountains when it offered to withdraw the Soviet rockets installed in Democratic Germany and Czechoslovakia in exchange for the U.S. dismantling of its medium-range missiles in Western Europe.

Washington has repeatedly stated that any deal on missiles in Europe should bring into account Soviet medium-range nuclear weapons based in Asia because these weapons may easily be moved into Europe in case of emergency.

But despite all these differences, the proposal may signify a step toward reaching some kind of agreement, particularly in areas like verification.

NATO quickly responded to the proposal, saying the reduction plan is "welcome," and refrained from calling it a propaganda ploy.

Western European countries are expected to probe further what they may think are constructive points in the proposal by the Warsaw Pact, which groups the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia, Bulgaria, Hungary, Poland, Democratic Germany and Romania. However, whether the proposal can break the decade-old deadlock of East-West disarmament talks remains to be seen.

One think is sure, however: the proposal will put more pressure on the U.S. Administration for action on disarmament as major NATO members, including Britain, have expressed opposition to the U.S. decision to scrap the 1979 U.S.-Soviet Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT II).

CONDEMNATION OF SOUTH AFRICA'S STATE OF EMERGENCY

"The Chinese Government and people will as always, unswervingly side with the people of South Africa and give them continued support in their just struggle until their victory," the statement said. AFRICAN DIPLOMATS SEEK GUARANTEES FOR STUDENTS

[Text] Beijing, June 11 (AFP) -- A committee of African diplomats here is to ask the Chinese authorities for guarantees that African students will be protected in future, following a clash between African and Chinese students at a northern university. "The sole aim of this committee is to obtain guarantees from the Chinese authorities on the protection of African students, so that they can return peacefully to their respective universities," one African diplomat told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE Wednesday. "Our aim is not to declare war on the Chinese authorities," he added. The diplomats said that the committee had asked to meet with Chinese authorities, but had yet to receive a reply.

The committee was formed following a five-hour clash between African and Chinese students at the northern university of Tianjin May 24 after a party held by the African students. Some of the African students fled to Beijing after the incident, when Chinese officials warned that Chinese students planned to attack them again.

Some 300 African students staged a street protest in Beijing Friday to protest "the racist aggression" which they said they had suffered. The following day, the Chinese authorities said that the African students were to blame for the Tianjin clash, as they had started it by throwing bottles at Chinese students who asked them to make less noise. The Chinese students responded with bricks and bottles, and a five-hour exchange of stones and glasses followed, Chinese officials said.

The African students rejected this account, and said that they were the victims of a "premeditated racist attack."

The African diplomats' committee was formed after the Tianjin clash, but before Friday's demonstration, during a regular informal three-monthly meeting attended by all African diplomats posted here, one of them said Wednesday. Several African students at Beijing's language institute have refused to attend classes since the Tianjin incident, students told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE.

An Education Ministry representative Saturday pledged to ensure the students' safety if they returned to Tianjin, and to provide a new site reserved for foreign students by the beginning of August. But the students were not sufficiently reassured to agree to return, student sources said. There are some 3,500 foreign students in China, about half of them from Third World countries, mostly Africa, according to Chinese figures.

Dissatisfied With Results

[Text] Beijing, June 13 (AFP) -- African diplomats failed in a bid to get guarantees from Beijing on the protection of African students in China after a recent clash at a northern university, an African diplomat said here Friday.

"No progress has been made and African diplomats are dissatisfied at the lack of results" of a first meeting Wednesday between a committee of African diplomats and Chinese authorities, the source said. The committee was set up last week to press for guarantees on the protection of Africans studying in China in the wake of a five-hour clash between African and Chinese students at a university last month.

On May 24, several hundred Chinese students besieged a group of foreign students, mostly Africans, at a university in Tianjin, 75 miles (120 kilometers) from the capital. The African students said they were the victims of a premeditated racist attack, but Chinese authorities denied there was any racist element and blamed the Africans for provoking the fight.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman said Friday that during the meeting between the nine African diplomats and Assistant Foreign Minister Zhou Jue, everyone agreed that "the unpleasant incident that happened in Tianjin is an isolated one and will in no way affect the friendship and friendly cooperation between China and Africa."

The spokesman said the two sides "expressed their confidence that both the Chinese students and African students will take to heart the friendship between China and Africa, show understanding and exercise restraint so that the incident will be settled promptly and properly."

The African diplomat added that the Chinese officials agreed during the meeting to meet a delegation next week of 36 African students, one from each African country represented in China.

There have been several incidents between Chinese and African students, including a clash in Shanghai in 1979 which left several people injured.

Zheng noted the fast expansion of bilateral trade and wider scope of economic and technological cooperation over the past few years. He expressed the hope that Canada will help China reduce its deficit in bilateral trade and provide Chinese commodities with an easier access to the Canadian market so as to achieve the aim of a long-term growth of bilateral trade. Over the past few years, he said, Canada's direct investment in China has increased. But, there still exist great potentials for it. He hoped that Canada will invest more in China and help China in expanding its export-oriented enterprises.

Kelleher said China has become Canada's fifth largest trading partner. It is Canada's hope that bilateral economic relations and trade will be further developed. Canada, as an industrially developed country, sees its responsibility of helping those less developed countries increase their exports, he said. Canada will do its best to reduce China's deficit and increase its direct investment in China. The Canadian Government supports China in resuming its legitimate seat in the General Agreement and Trade, he added.

This evening, Zheng gave a dinner for Mr. and Mrs. Kelleher and their party in the Great Hall of the People.

CONTADORA, U.S. C. AMERICAN POLICIES VIEWED

["Roundup: Central America's Knotty Peace Process One Step Forward (by Lin Liangyou)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Panama City, June 9 (XINHUA) -- At the June 7 meeting of foreign ministers from 13 Latin American nations, a new draft peace proposal was advanced by the Contadora Group, pushing the thorny Central American peace process one step forward.

The five Central American nations -- Nicaragua, Guatemala, El Salvador, Costa Rica and Honduras -- were scheduled to sign the Central American peace and cooperation draft treaty, proposed by the Contadora nations of Panama, Mexico, Colombia and Venezuela, at a meeting in Panama on June 6.

Prior to the meeting, however, Nicaragua and the other four Central American nations failed to agree on the crucial issues of disarmament and reduction of international military maneuvers. Nicaragua insisted that military maneuvers be stopped and that talks on limitation of offensive weapons begin soon after the signing of the peace treaty.

The other four nations, however, opposed a halt to military exercises and called for a ceiling of armaments in Central American countries before the peace accord is ratified. The failure to reach an agreement cast a pall of gloom over the meeting, caused concern about Central America's future, and even created doubts in some people's minds about the continued existence of the Contadora Group itself.

Facing these difficulties, the Contadora Group refused to give up its long-time peace efforts. Joined by the Lima Group of Argentina, Uruguay, Brazil and Peru and taking all differences into account, the Contadora Group proposed a new draft treaty, which reiterated that Central American nations should restrict their military exercises for the time being, and eventually end such exercises once they reach an agreement on disarmament.

In the current draft, the Contadora Group also called on these countries to freeze arms purchasing in preparation for a gradual arms reduction to begin after their parliaments approve the peace treaty. This new proposal further extended the deadline for the signing of the peace accord.

In a bid to break the impasse in the region's peace process, the Contadora and Lima Groups issued a three-point joint communique, suggesting that Central American nations should neither allow their territories to be used against any other country nor provide military and logistical assistance to non-governmental forces and subversive groups. The communique also proposed that no nation should establish military and political alliances that would directly or indirectly threaten peace and security or incur East-West confrontation.

It further suggested that no big powers should offer military or logistic assistance to non-governmental forces and subversive groups in the region, nor should they use these forces or groups as a tool to overthrow governments.

The communique urged all nations having a common interest in Central America to show their good-will by undertaking the obligations set by the treaty. Observers here, believing these points are important, pointed out that if all the principles are strictly abided by, negotiations will certainly be accelerated and an agreement can be expedited.

The first reactions to the new draft treaty and communique were positive. Participants at the meeting praised the Contadora Group's contribution to Central American peace and expressed the hope that the group would continue its peace efforts.

The three-and-a-half-year-old Contadora Group has made painstaking efforts to seek regional peace such as proposing four drafts of the peace treaty. Unfortunately, the treaty has not been signed and Central American peace has not been achieved.

Although the Central American nations all expressed a desire for peaceful coexistence, their deep-rooted differences have led to distrust and even head-on conflicts on a number of specific issues. Moreover, outside intervention and influence, especially from the United States, have made the already complicated problems even knottier. Shortly before the Panama meeting, the U.S. had staged frequent military maneuvers in Central America while officials such as President Reagan's special envoy Philip Habib and a congressional delegation visited the Central American nations. In the U.S., the Congress is again about to discuss the Reagan-proposed 100 million dollars in aid to Nicaragua's anti-government rebels.

In the meantime, the Reagan administration has begun a new round of lobbying the Congress to pass the motion.

Peace, the common wish of the Latin American nations, requires that Central American nations settle their conflicts in their own way and avoid incurring East-West confrontation in the area. With the new peace proposal by the Contadora Group and the willingness of Central American nations to continue talks, the future of the Central American peace process seems brighter than before, but whether peace can come true in this part of the world remains to be seen.

NPC STANDING COMMITTEE MEETING OPENS 16 JUN

[Text] Beijing, June 16 (XINHUA) -- The Sixth National People's Congress Standing Committee opened its 16th meeting here today. It will last ten days.

The "Land Law of People's Republic of China (draft)", the "Regulations Governing Offences Against Public Order of People's Republic of China (revised draft)", the "Enterprise Bankruptcy Law of People's Republic of China", and the "Regulations of People's Republic of China on Diplomatic Privileges and Immunities (draft)" were reported at the meeting.

Wang Bingqian, state councillor and minister of finance, will give a report on 1985 final state account which is to be examined and approved by the meeting. A report on 1985 auditing work by Lu Peijian, auditor-general of the Auditing Administration, and a report on construction and development principle of China's nuclear power stations by Minister Jiang Xinxiong of nuclear industry are to be delivered.

On the agenda are also reports on President Li Xiannian's visit to Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Egypt, Somalia, and Madagascar, and on the visit of a National People's Congress delegation to Australia. Several removals and appointments are to be passed by the meeting.

To Discuss Bankruptcy Law

[Text] Beijing, June 16 (XINHUA) -- The draft of China's first enterprise bankruptcy law was submitted for deliberation today to the 16th session of China's National People's Congress (NPC) Standing Committee.

This is believed to be a major step in China's current economic reform aimed at abolishing the former Chinese practice of "eating from the common pot".

Explaining the draft law to the NPC Standing Committee, Zhang Yanning, vice-minister of the State Economic Commission, said that it is imperative for the country to have a law on enterprise bankruptcy.

Because of bad management, he said, a small number of state-run enterprises have suffered financial losses for years, which is detrimental to the steady growth of the country's socialist economy.

The guiding light for the draft enterprise bankruptcy law is to maintain the order of the socialist commodity economy, protect the lawful rights and interests of both creditors and debtors, to promote competition, and to improve the management of enterprises to improve economic results, he noted.

He explained that the draft takes into consideration an enterprise's bankruptcy together with its readjustment and reorganization, and establishes an enterprise bankruptcy system that will improve the socialist insurance system. The bankruptcy law will promote the enforcement of law over economic management, help enterprises become socialist commodity producers who bear profit-and-loss, and help them in dealing with creditor's rights and liabilities in economic activities with foreign countries, he added.

13th CPC Congress Planned

[Text] Beijing, 13 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Wu Xingtang, spokesman for the International Liaison Department of the CPC Central Committee, today said that some aged leading cadres will retire and be replaced by some young people at the 13th CPC National Congress to be held next year.

Wu Xingtang made the above statement at a press briefing this afternoon when asked by reporters whether there would be any personnel changes during the 13th CPC National Congress.

Wu said: In recent years the CPC has implemented the policy of four transformations regarding cadre appointment; namely, the policy of recruiting cadres who are more revolutionary, younger in average age, better educated, and more professionally competent. This precess was initiated during the 12th CPC National Congress in 1982 and was stepped up at the National Conference of Party delegates last year. A new step will be taken at the 13th CPC National Congress next year.

Wu Xingtang pointed out: The CPC, as a big party, and China, as a large country, still need a few tried and experienced revolutionaries with high prestige to take the helm. Therefore, specific personnel changes and appointments have yet to be decided for the 13th CPC National Congress and the succeeding CPC Central Committee plenary session.

Wu Xingtang also revealed that a 6th Plenary Session of the CPC Central Committee might be held this fall to set the main agenda for the 13th CPC National Congress.

Opposition to Reform Denied

[Text] Beijing, June 13 (AFP) -- There is no faction within the Chinese Communist Party opposing the country's economic reforms, a party spokesman said here Friday.

Asked about difficulties in implementing urban reforms reported in the Chinese press, spokesman Wu Xingtang replied: "There is no such faction that is opposed to the reform in our party."

However, he admitted that it was "not surprising" that there were differences of opinion, and said debate and the airing of views about reform was "normal."

He recalled that the party had asked for five years of grace before any verdict was passed on urban reforms begun in 1984.

Mr Wu said some party members had chosen to "wait and see" the results of urban reform, and added: "They should be allowed to do so."

On a number of occasions recently the Chinese press has reported difficulties encountered by the advocates of reform -- often younger party officials -- several of whom had been edged out by officials that were more "conservative" or even downright hostile to reform.

The reforms included the decentralization of the Chinese economy, with greater autonomy for businesses, and more decisionmaking power for their bosses.

Observers said there were differences among the Chinese leadership about the speed and scale of reform.

Turning to the party's 13th congress which should in principal be held in the autumn of next year, Mr. Wu said it would once again concentrate on infusing younger blood into the party — a process begun at the last congress in September 1982.

"I am sure that this work will be carried out even further," he said in what was the first official statement on the themes to be discussed at the congress.

He said the ground for the meeting would be laid at a plenum of the party Central Committee this year.

Asked about recent articles in the Chinese press expressing the need for reform of the Chinese political structure, Mr We replied that the strengthening of democracy and socialist law were among the tasks on which the party was engaged.

He said steps to strengthen "inner party democracy" and Chinese law had already been taken, but gave no details.

Socialist law is a something "new to us," Mr Wu said, adding: "We lack experience, so we are exploring."

ENGINEER ON PRC ENTRY INTO SATELLITE MARKET

[Text] Beijing, June 15 (XINHUA) -- China has no intention of competing with Western countries in its satellite launching services, said Wu Keli, deputy general manager and senior engineer of the China Great Wall Industry Corp. (CGWIC).

He told Chinese English language weekly "BEIJING REVIEW" that China contracted to do this business in order to make up for the shortage of carrier rockets.

Refuting recent Western press accusation that China was taking advantage of U.S. and French failures in recent launchings of spacecraft and satellites, he said: "This is sheer coincidence. Soon after the Chinese official announcement that China was to undertake satellite launching business for foreign countries in October 1985, many countries, including Sweden, Indonesia, Australia, Italy and Argentina, contacted the CGWIC for information about the carrying capacity of the Long March-3. Some of them have already asked China to launch or help design satellites for them."

The senior engineer said that in recent years the number of satellites planned to be launched by other countries has greatly outstripped the capacities of the world's available carrier rockets and many Third World countries have planned to send up their own satellites. This is a good opportunity for China to expand its services. "But China has no intention of competing with Western countries in this field. We contract to do this business in order to make up for the shortage of carrier rockets," Wu said.

He said that the People's Insurance Co. of China will provide insurance services for the launches carried out in China. Satellites to be launched by China would be exempted from customs examination and the clients may send their representatives to supervise, protect, test and install their satellites in China. The Chinese side is responsible for the security after the satellites enter China. With the approval of the clients, the Chinese side may also provide testing and installation services.

China has launched 18 satellites and only one failed. After the Long March Z-2 carrier rocket failed in launching its first satellite, the engineers and technicians involved in the work not only uncovered the causes and fixed the breakdown immediately, but also launched another satellite within 40 days.

Wu said that China is currently developing carrier rockets with larger thrust, and plans to send up larger satellites into space in the next five years.

The latest issue of BEIJING REVIEW disclosed that Mr. Paul S. Visher, president of the United States Hughes Aircraft Co. [name and title as received] recently proposed to CGWIC that a satellite launching ground for long-term cooperation be set up on a Haiwaiian Island where the Chinese rocket carriers and launching technology shall be exploited to launch American civilian satellites in cooperation with the American company. The suggestion has received positive response from the Chinese side, and negotiation on related substantial questions between both sides is expected to be held soon.

JINGJI RIBAO URGES SUPPORT FOR REFORMERS

[Commentator's article: "We Should Not Demand Perfection in Reformers"]

[Text] In the mighty torrent of reform, there have emerged a number of pace-setters who are bold in making innovations and blazing new trails. However, just when they are hacking a way forward through all difficulties, some nitpickers deliberately find faults from them and demand perfection in them in an attempt to put them in an extremely awkward situation and to lead the burgeoning reform to a state of stagnation or chaos. This is a question calling for our thoughtful attention.

As long as we do certain work, we can hardly avoid mistakes. There is no one on earth who has never made any mistakes. Going with the tide of historical development, reformers have the courage to assume responsibilities and fear no dangers. Those mediocrities and yes-men who dillydally everyday and do not do any work, of course, do not commit mistakes. They are more "secure" than reformers, but what can they do for the country? It is really surprising that some of our comrades often praise these people as "being reliable and dependable," but whenever reformers commit mistakes, they keep picking on them. Such partial viewpoints and pernicious practices must be corrected.

As the saying goes, "a tall tree catches the wind." This is the case in the current reform. Some industrial enterprises with marked economic results are endlessly investigated by investigation and work groups. It seems that the better the work is done, the more problems there are and the more investigations should be conducted. Such a situation is completely abnormal and should be changed.

It is our hope that vast numbers of people, and in particular leaders at various levels, will throw in their lots with reformers, giving them more support and not nitpick at their minor faults. As long as they commit mistakes in work, we should enthusiastically help correct them and encourage them to sum up experiences and draw lessons so as to continue to make progress in the mighty torrent of reform.

END TO ATTACKS ON INNOVATIVE MANAGERS URGED

[Text] Beijing, June 16 (XINHUA) -- Groundless attacks on successful managers must stop immediately and those managers who use creative means to implement the economic reforms should be encouraged, according to today's PEOPLE'S DAILY.

The paper published several stories and a commentary which showed that some managers were being criticized for small faults without recognizing their larger contributions.

Three examples were given to show the problem. Last Friday, for example, workers at the Zhengzhou automobile factory warmly welcomed back their former director, Song Beifang. He had been removed from his post earlier this year because he applied for his factory to be removed from the control of a transport company. Song was demoted because he wanted to decide the types of products to produce, the outlets for his products, and to implement other creative methods to boost the factory's production.

In another case, the Fuzhou Municipal Communist Party Committee demanded that local authorities immediately halt the endless investigations of seven new leaders who had brought a watch factory great profitability after many years of losses. The factory had made no profit between 1976 and 1983, yet made over one million yuan in the last two years due to the reforms made by the new leaders in the management of production.

The watch factory investigations were launched merely on the basis of a few anonymous letters. Investigators discovered no big problems at the factory, but normal production was interrupted and managers were discouraged from making further reforms, the paper said.

A detailed description was given of a case involving the removal of a manager at the Shenyang trolley-bus company. Although the manager helped the company make a profit of 1.64 million yuan in his first year, he was removed last year because he bought a western style suit with public funds and made some other minor mistakes. Those who were on the side of the manager were also blamed.

The paper said that some people were unable to bear the success of the reformers and therefore were looking for small flaws. They blamed the reformers for abusing power and some even purposely laid obstacles for them.

The paper quoted a senior party official as saying "mistakes in the course of reforms are allowed, but not implementing the reforms is unbearable."

One must not grasp a single fault of the path-breaker and irresponsibility criticise him as using the reforms to make personal gains, while overlooking his overall merit, it said.

The paper urged local officials to have a more realistic attitude in analyzing the mistakes of the reformers and help them correct their shortcomings.

Endless investigations on almost the same problems are unnecessary, it said. Those people under investigation are often discouraged and hesitant to try new creative policies.

The commentary criticised some leading officials for being overlenient with some cadres who made no progress in their work and thought nothing about how to make improvements.

JINGJI RIBAO URGES PUNISHMENT FOR BUREAUCRACY

[Commentator's article: "Criminal Responsibility for Serious Bureaucracy Should Be Investigated"]

[Text] While cracking down on serious economic crimes and straightening out the party's style, major headway has been made in the investigation and handling of major and important cases in the central areas and localities. Not only do these major and important cases include incidents like serious bribery, graft, embezzlement, theft, illegally buying and reselling foreign exchange at a profit, grave political liberalism, and so on, but they should also include those heavy political and economic losses caused by serious bureaucracy. We must no allow bureaucracy or anything harmful to the state and the people to go unchecked.

Opposing bureaucracy has been our task for a long time. When discipline is tightened, the situation will improve; but when discipline is relaxed, it will slip back into the old ways. In some departments and organs, bureaucracy is not only the "umbrella" for some serious economic crimes, but also the direct or indirect "chief culprit" of serious econmic waste and loss. There are some ignorant and irresponsible people who do not want to conduct investigtions but are ready to listen to reports and sign documents. In the event of causing losses up to over a million yuan, they do not have a serious sense of responsibility or right and wrong, but remain unruffled or even try to turn big problems into small problems and small problems into no problems at all under the sway of "bureaucracy." The damages they cause to the reform and the four modernizations drive are not smaller than other economic crimes.

Therefore, it is necessary to further strengthen discipline and the legal system and handle the major cases of loss caused by serious bureaucracy. Those who ignore the interests of the state and the people and who "neglect their duties" should be punished according to the law, so as to educate the vast number of cadres to improve their work style, perform their duties, and prevent various economic losses caused by bureaucracy, as well as major losses in other fields.

Of course, in handling the major and important cases caused by bureaucracy, we must draw a clear demacration line of policy and make a distinction between the general and minor losses which are caused by inadequate investigations and studies or misjudgments, and the losses caused by serious dereliction of duty. When problems crop up, we should not regard bureaucracy as an excuse to cover up mismanagement and wrong decisions instead of trying to solve the problems or attempting to conceal the negligence. Furthermore, we should not confuse matters of general workstyle with serious bureaucracy. In particular, the economic and legal responsibilities of those people who are seriously indifferent to and ignore the interests of the people must be affixed. This is in keeping with the fundamental interests of the reform and economic construction and conductive to urging some cadres to rapidly change their workstyle and to reducing the damage of bureaucracy to a minimum.

COMMUNICATIONS MINISTRY TO CURB UNHEALTHY TRENDS

[By reporter Zhang Jinsheng]

[Excerpts] The Ministry of Communications recently decided to conduct a general inspection of all enterprises under its administration in order to curb four prevailing unhealthy tendencies. To educate the masses of cadres and workers and staff members under the ministry to consciously resist unhealthy tendencies, it will thoroughly investigate and solve important major cases and typical incidents that the masses have vehemently criticized. Thus, the ministry hopes to markedly improve social conduct in all the enterprises under its administration.

The Ministry of Communications called on departments in charge of transport throughout the country to earnestly investigate and curb the four following unhealthy tendencies:

1. Seeking personal interests by putting vehicles, ships, and harbor berths at one's disposal. For example, some drivers use public vehicles and ships as transportation for the purpose of making money.

2. Abusing aministrative power to seek private interests for individuals or groups. Some highway and water transport supervisers and highway administrative officers abuse their authority to issue licenses and number plates, to set up vehicle inspection roadblocks, and to handle traffic accidents, for intercepting vehicles without good reason in order to give vehicle and ship operators a hard time. These officers and supervisers treat vehicle and ship operators rudely and with a despotic work style. They indiscriminately collect fees, exact fines, extort money, an accept bribes from them.

3. Seeking personal gain by reselling vehicle and ship tickets for profit. Some passenger transport port administrations and stations have used vehicle and ship tickets to establish relationships with other units by increasing handling fees.

4. Treating passengers with rudeness and unloading goods carelessly.

The Ministry of Communications emphasized that to eliminate the unhealthy tendencies in the entire transportation trade, we must be firm and must try never to evade contradictions. We must face the problems boldly and investigate thoroughly typical cases of unhealthy tendencies. Leading organizations must try not to cover up their shortcomings. The purpose of eliminating unhealthy tendencies in the transportation trade is to improve the work style of its workers and staff members, to promote observance of rules and discipline among them, to encourage them to serve the public cleanly, to operate their businesses in a civilized manner, to treat passengers politely, and to serve people wholeheartedly.

STORAGE PLANT OFFICIALS SENTENCED FOR NEGLECT

[Text] Beijing, June 13 (XINHUA) -- Two officials who caused great economic losses through neglect of their duties have been sentenced to two years and 18 months in prison, respectively, a local court announced here today.

Former Director Pan Fengcai and Deputy Director Shi Xiwen of the Nanyuan cold storage plant in Beijing, neglected their duties from last year to the beginning of this year, resulting in 700 tons of vegetables going rotten and causing losses of 300,000 yuan.

The Fengtai district court tried the case June 4 and sentenced them to imprisonment in accordance with the criminal law. The defendants did not appeal their sentences, local court officials said. Wang Louzeng, the former Communist Party secretary of the cold storage plant, was transferred last August and his case will be handled separately, they said.

GUANGMING RIBAO EXPLORES ECONOMIC REFORM

HK131130 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 24 May 86 p 3

[Article by Zeng Guoxiang: "Economic Reform Under Dual Mechanism"]

[Text] The Arduousness of Economic Reform Under Dual Mechanism

China's economic structural reform has entered a stage of transforming the traditional system into a new economic system. Two systems and two mechanisms will co-exist in this stage. It will be an arduous task to further promote economic reform under the dual systems and dual mechanism. This is mainly manifested in the following fields:

1. Enterprises have turned their operations from merely seeking output value and growth rates to paying much more attention to their profits and the welfare of their staff and workers. On the one hand, enterprises demand increasing energy supplies and the supply quota of raw materials under mandatory planning, on the other hand, they demand less mandatory planning in products in short supply. Thus, the government finds it difficult to control the short-term operations of enterprises. How to adopt a series of measures of coordinating reform so as to flexibly and effectively guide and restrict enterprises' short-term operations is an important task for continuously developing economic reform in depth.

2. Intersection of the new and old mechanism has appeared in economic operations. The new economic operation mechanism demands that enterprises compete with each other under the same market conditions, and demands that the principle of distribution according to one's work be carried out in individual consumer goods. But direct intervention in enterprises' production and operations by the old system still exists. Due to the disparity in external conditions, enterprises have different economic results. Moreover, the practice of "eating out of the same big pot" in distribution has not yet been eliminated. The co-existence of two economic operation mechanisms will inevitably result in conflicts and disharmony and bring difficulties to economic reforms.

3. General economic management departments and responsible professional departments at all levels have relaxed their control over enterprises' direct administration on sale, but goods supply departments have still restricted control over it. General economic management departments have relaxed their control over enterprises' direct administration over production, but have still restricted their control over fixed assets investment (including funds for technological transformation). As a result, some large and medium-sized enterprises directly under the departments have not yet enlivened their production. Meanwhile, the general size of social fixed assets investment has time and again been out of control, and it is difficult to genuinely form a market for the means of production.

4. The direct management mechanism in vertical administrative distribution of material objects is still in a dominant position. The indirect management mechanism with the organic combination of economic policies and levers is still being shaped. The mechanism of economic policies and levers has not yet combined with the planning mechanism, and has not yet played its role in flexibly regulating the commodity market and capital market. As the planning mechanism is rigid, the production structure and product mix cannot be readjustted promptly and effectively.

Establishing and Developing a Market of Means of Production Is the Key to the Replacement of the Old System by the New One

To expand the decision-making power of enterprises in production and business operation, it is first of all necessary to create the external conditions of a commodity market for enterprises. Without a market for the means of production, it will be difficult to enliven enterprises and bring into play the role of the economic operation mechanism, and there will be no foundation for the government to switch from direct economic management to indirect economic management. There are basically two ideas about establishing and developing a market of the means of production. One is that the pricing departments of the government increase by a big margin the prices of energy and raw materials so as to narrow the difference between the prices set by the state plan and market prices, and to balance the supply and demand in market. The other is that the state readjusts the unreasonable prices of several major raw materials, gradually reduces the portion of the means of production assigned by the state under mandatory planning, increases the portion of products which enterprises have the right to market by themselves and gradually relaxes the market for the means of production.

I believe that to establish and develop a market for the means of production, the essential thing is to gradually reform the planned goods supply system under which the means of production are distributed in a vertical way according to administrative relationships; to gradually reduce the quota of the goods to be distributed under mandatory planning; to develop lateral economic ties and cooperation in the exchange of goods between areas, and between cities and departments; and to gradually set up in large and medium-sized cities markets for trading the means of production where production enterprises and enterprises circulating goods can trade in means of production. Expanded, the difference between the two prices [free market and fixed] will be gradually narrowed.

It must be pointed out that the basic reason for the shortage of several major energy supplies and raw materials over the past few years is that the social fixed assets investment was too big and the general demand exceeded the general supply, resulting in a wide gap between the prices of means of production beyond the state plan and the prices of means of production covered by the state plan. Therefore, the only way out for easing the market for the means of production is to effectively control the general size of social fixed assets investment and the general size of banking credit. To expand the decision-making power of enterprises in supply, production, and marketing, and to develop the future commodity market of means of production centered on enterprises on this basis will not be too risky.

Tiered Control Should Be Stressed in The Stage of Replacing the Old System With the New One

In the stage of replacing the old system with the new one, the inherent operation mechanism of the traditional system and its defects cannot be eliminated once and for all, nor can the new economic system and its operation mechanism be established overnight. In addition, ours is a big country with different economic conditions all over the land, the tiered control and regulation of macroeconomy is therefore very important.

Under the complicated circumstances of the two systems and two mechanisms affecting each other, the appearance of every relatively important reform measure will inevitably have a large or small impact on economic and social life. To minimize the impact, governments at all levels must take up the responsibility for macroeconomic control, and have corresponding limits of authority. For example, first, gradational management in central and local finance must be established on the basis of introducing different taxes, namely, the central tax, the local tax, and the shared tax for central and local finance. The central tax should be submitted to the central authorities, the local tax should be retained by the local authorities, and the shared tax should be distributed proportionally. Second, in instituting gradational management in central and local finance, it is necessary, in accordance with the principle of the financial power of a department corresponding with its administrative power, to specifically define the administrative power, financial power, and the scope of income and expenditure of central and local financial authorities, and do gradually legalize and regularize their power. The central finance should be mainly responsible for national defense expenditure, and the building of basic installations such as important energy and raw materials projects.

The investment of profit-making processing industrial enterprises comes mainly from the lateral circulation of funds between enterprises. Provincial finance should be mainly responsible for investment in basic installations, such as traffic and energy projects in the province. City level finance should be responsible for administration fees, and the investment of basic urban installations, such as postal facilities, telecommunications, roads, houses, culture, education, public health, and environmental protection. Enterprises should be responsible for investment of production and business operation. Legislative power should be granted to local financial authorities in levying local taxes, such as the provisional business operation tax and land use tax. Concrete methods should be implemented after being reported to the higher responsible departments for the record. Local financial authorities should, in conjunction with general economic management departments of the state, grant power to state-run large and medium-sized enterprises in reducing or exempting their regulatory tax.

Leaders Attend, Speak

[By reporters Gai Yumin and Sun Yong]

[Text] Beijing, 13 Jun (XINHUA) -- The national meeting of representatives of units advanced in resettling Army cadres transferred to civilian work and advanced individuals from among the transferred cadres concluded today at the Great Hall of the People. The meeting conferred pennants and certificates of honor on 103 advanced units and 248 advanced individuals.

Wan Li, Tian Jiyun, Yang Shangkun, Yang Dezhi, Yu Qiuli, Qin Jiwei, Song Renqiong, Hong Xuezhi, and other comrades received the meeting representatives and had a picture taken with them.

Yu Qiuli, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and deputy secretary-general of the Central Military Commission, addressed the meeting. He highly praised local party committees and governments at all levels, relevant departments, and especially departments in charge of placing transferred cadres for their painstaking and meticulous work and fruitful efforts in placing Army cadres transferred to civilian jobs. He also extended warm regards to the transferred cadres who have contributed to socialist construction in various departments. He said that the key to successfully implementing the Army structural reform, streamlining, and reorganization lies in the resettlement of transferred cadres. As for localities, the main task is to assign appropriate jobs for the transferred cadres as much as possible and make an earnest effort in organizing job training programs for them in the light of jobs assigned to them. As for the Army, it should make allowances for the difficulties experienced by localities; and Army units may find jobs in their own units for some of the cadres who are transferred as a result of streamlining. With regard to transferred cadres, it is necessary to enhance administration; pay great attention to involving them in the regular activities of the party; and attend to their ideological education, elementary education, and vocational training. He expressed the hope that the transferred Army cadres will keep up and carry on the glorious tradition of plain living and hard work, submit themselves to the assignments given them by their organizations, and go to the places where the party and people need them most to contribute to the four modernizations.

Tian Jiyun, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and vice premier of the State Council, also spoke at the meeting. He called for carrying out the work of resettling transferred Army cadres well this year to contribute to developing the national economy and to maintaining a stable and unified political situation.

Among the advanced individuals honored at today's meeting were people who valued the interests of the party and the people above everything else and have begun work at the grass roots, people who were determined to carry out reforms and achieved breakthroughs in their work, as well as people who have kept up and carried on the glorious tradition of the People's Army and have played an exemplary role in promoting spiritual civilization. Among the collectives honored were local units advanced in the work of placing transferred Army cadres as well as Army units responsible for transfer work.

187,000 to Demobilize in 1986

[Text] Beijing, 13 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) China will have a total of more than 187,000 PLA cadres transferred to civilian work this year.

In the past 10 years, arrangements were made for the placement of more than 1.2 million demobilized PLA cadres and more than 1.6 million dependents of PLA officers, said Yu Qiuli, deputy secretary general of the CPC Central Military Commission, at the national meeting of advanced units of demobilized Army cadres and representatives of progressive demobilized Army cadres which closed today.

Yu Qiuli asserted that the settlement work in the past 10 years was satisfactory. There were more demobilized Army cadres in the past few years than before due to the special case of PLA streamlining and reorganization, he added. The number of demobilized PLA cadres will drop substantially in the wake of the completion of the streamlining and reorganization process and the perfection of the cadre work system.

Meeting Ends

[By reporters Sun Yong and Gai Yumin]

[Text] Beijing, 14 Jun (XINHUA) -- The national meeting on resettling demobilized military cadres that ended today stressed that, since this is the second year of the reform of the military system and of streamlining and reorganizing troops, as well as a crucial year in resettling surplus military cadres, party committees and governments at all levels should continue their close cooperation with the troops and strive to properly accomplish this year's resettlement work.

According to reports, there are more demobilized cadres waiting to be resettled this year than last year. However, the quality of this year's demobilized cadres is better than ever. Among them are combat-tried party-member cadres; personnel who have made outstanding contributions to Army building; military and political work cadres; we well as a great number of demobilized technical cadres.

Over 88 percent of these demobilized cadres are under the age of 39, 83.7 percent of them have an educational level of senior high school, and 10.2 percent of them are college educated.

In his speech at the meeting, Jiao Shanmin, member of the State Council Group on Resettling Demobilized Military Cadres, and vice minister of labor and personnel, said: Resettling demobilized cadres should be aimed at promoting economic development, and demobilized cadres waiting to be resettled should subject themselves to the needs of economic development. For this reason, all localities, while insisting on the principle of resettling demobilized cadres in their native place or where they were recruited, may select some demobilized cadres from different prefectures, cities, and counties for unified assignment in order to meet the needs of newly developed areas, key development projects, and some newly established units or units being expanded.

Comrades attending the meeting earnestly studied the central authorities' policies and principles on resettling demobilized military cadres, have unified their thinking, and gained a clear idea on this year's resettlement tasks. They held that resettling demobilized cadres is a task with great political significance which has something to do with the basic interests of the entire party, entire nation, and all the people, and that they will properly accomplish the task no matter what difficulties lie ahead. Military comrades attending the meeting pledged that they will, with high sense of responsibility, actively assist localities in resettling demobilized cadres, do whatever they can to help demobilized cadres solve practical problems, educate them to subject themselves to the needs of the nation's economic development so that they would willingly accept the party's assignments and work for the four modernizations in places where they are needed most.

RENMIN RIBAO SURVEYS EXPORT PRODUCTION SYSTEMS

[Feature article by reporters Lu Zhenhua and Feng Xiao: "The Role of 'Joint Efforts' -- Investigation of the System of Export Commodity Production Set Up by Zhucheng County"]

[Excerpts] In early May, the experts and foreign trade workers who attended the national symposium on export production systems, time and again cited the experience gained by Shandong's Zhucheng County in developing production of commodities for export. In order to see how things really stood there, as soon as the symposium was closed, I hurried to Zhucheng City.

As soon as I reached the county, I heard two pieces of exciting news: 1) Zhucheng County scored a third stage in the development of its agriculture -- a switch from the type of agriculture that produces commodities for domesticsales to that which produces commodities for exports to earn foreign exchange -- after the switch from a self-sufficient type to the former type. In 1985, the value of its export commodities rose to 90 million yuan, accounting for 9 percent of the county's gross industrial and agricultural output value and an increase of 3,000 percent compared with 10 years ago. 2) In the past, foreign businessmen refused to buy chickens producted by Zhucheng, but after a little more than 1 year's efforts, the quality of its chickens had been improved so much that they reached international standards.

Last year, it exported 1,732 metric tons of chickens, ranking the first among all the counties in the nation. Now, foreign businessmen have come, one after another, to ask for long-term supply, because the county had become famous for its quality chickens.

Why has there been such a tremendous change in the county's export production?

Separate Forces Have Become Combined Forces

Zhucheng County is situated between Shandong's Qingdao and Weifang cities and is thus provided with fine geographic conditions for exporting its commodities. However, in the past, as its foreign trade department and production units each acted independently, production enterprises and specialized households always feared that the foreign trade department would urge them to produce beyond their capacity when there was a favorable market and force them to cut production when there was an unfavorable market. The foreign trade department worried that it might fail to get the supply of the goods it needed and thus got nothing from its investment in the production units. As the two sectors failed to combine their forces, Zhucheng's production of export commodities fluctuated widely.

What we saw in the townships and towns in Zhucheng County was quite another scene: new design cloth was being loaded on trucks for export. Trucks carrying mixed food were heading toward the chicken farms. Peasants were busying themselves around the cages in which they breed minks and long-hair rabbits. On the farmland around their villages, tobacco and asparagus grew luxuriously green. The county was vigorously developing the production of all its 80-odd export commodities.

This has been achieved through combining forces. Over the past year, in light of international market demands, the Zhucheng County Foreign Trade Company took the initiative to provide funds, materials, goods, and technology to help the development of export production. Last year, the county not only set up the production basis for the export of agricultural, sideline and local special products, including chicken, beef cattle, mink, rabbits, tobacco, dried and fresh fruit, peanuts, and large peppers, and developed a number of households specialized in producing goods for export, but also set up over 30 chemical, paper, textile, garment, pottery and handicraft factories specialized in producing goods for export.

After the industrial and trade sectors combined their separate forces, export commodities rose from 5 categories and 16 kinds to 10 categories and 83 kinds. The supply of goods constantly met the demand and the rate of breached export contracts was reduced. It has thus established its reputation. It has quickly improved the quality of its products for export and thus made its goods more competitive and able to be sold far away to over 20 countries and regions and improved its economic results. Peasants have begun to switch their field of vision from the domestic to the world market. They are now saying: "Compare your goods with other goods in the international market if you think you are so good in production!"

From Specialization to Export Production System

The establishment of an export production system is indeed a historic landmark in Zhucheng's export production progress. In the past, most of the households there conducted their farming and animal breeding for the production of agricultural and sideline products for export separately.

Each of them did everything from management to sales on its own. As a result, their production costs were high and the quality of their products was poor and could not meet export demands. Later, they specialized their production and put the service to provide seeds and technology and the processing industry under the unified management of the foreign trade department. This provided conditions for improving the county's export production capacity. Could the county go further and establish its export production system? During a year's exploration, the relevant departments in the county succeeded in setting up three regional export production systems each for a single item of commodities such as chickens, rice, and long-haired rabbits.

Diverse Forms of Joint Ventures

Zhucheng's export production systems have broken many old conventions and both horizontal and vertical joint ventures have been established. In the combines set up for these joint ventures, there are factors of the economy owned by the whole people, and the collective and individual economies.

We visited some joint venture enterprises. The first of them was a chicken breeding farm with advanced technology. This is a joint venture invested in and managed by the county foreign trade department, the Weifang City foreign trade department, the provincial export commodity base construction company, and Shantu village. They have imported fine breed chickens and brood hens. All the parties in the joint venture are masters of the enterprise: they jointly manage it, and share its risks and profits. In the first year after its establishment, it produced over 1.2 million young chickens. This year it plans to produce 3.7 million young chickens.

We focused our investigation on Daliyuan chicken farm at the county town which was another type of joint venture. There were 2 rows of 12 houses for breeding chickens. This farm was set up by Li Shuye's and 10 other peasants' households with a joint investment of 110,000 yuan. Food and water were both fed to chickens by semiautomatic equipment. Each of the big houses had only one or two workers on duty at each shift. In 1985, the farm bred 100,000 chickens and earned 70,000 yuan profit. This year it will recover all the investment. There are already 15 similar combines in the county.

AGE RULE CAUSING UNDERUSE OF SCIENTISTS' TALENTS

[Text] The talents of about 40 percent of China's scientists and technicians aged above 50 are being underused because of the compulsory retirement age, a sample investigation has discovered.

The investigation, carried out in 20 key enterprises in 12 provinces and municipalities, found that only 58 percent of scientists and technicians in the age group could give full play to their skills, while 23.7 per cent could do so "partly" and 18.3 per cent not at all, according to CHINA SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY NEWS.

The paper attributed this to the indiscriminate use of the age limit for the retirement of Chinese cadres. According to State regulations, scientists and technicians should retire by 60. However, most enterprises lower the age limit to 55, creating a whole class of "probationary" cadres due for retirement.

The institute which organized the research under the Chinese Science Association calls for more careful use of such cadres, the paper said.

OFFICIAL INTERVIEWED ON MACHINE-BUILDING INDUSTRY

HK100947 Beijing Domestic Television Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 6 Jun 86

[From the "Economic Life" program: "Interview With He Guangyuan, Vice Minister of Machine-Building Industry" -- date, place not given -- recorded]

[Excerpts] [Unidentified reporter] Vice Minister He, the Seventh 5-Year Plan is being fully implemented. We would like you to talk about what contributions the machine-building industry, as an equipment sector of the national economy, will make to the development of the national economy during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan.

[He] The machine-building industry is an equipment and supply sector of the national economy. At present, the machine-building industry accounts for one-fourth of the increase in production output, output value, profit, and so on of enterprises. It is really a big sector. Departments and units under the machine-building industry are important component parts of the mchine-building industry of the whole country. During the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we will make our efforts in the following three aspects:

1. We will satisfy the demands of economic construction and the people with our advanced machinery products. We will make a fairly great breakthrough in terms of quality, variety, high standards of production, and the capability of manufacturing complete sets of equipment. During the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we will develop 10,000 kinds of new products, and provide 440 sets of large equipment. Due to the efforts exerted during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, the demand for machinery products by various departments will be basically satisfied domestically. By 1990, the quality and function of 50 percent of our machinery products will reach the level of the late seventies or early eighties in the industrially developed countries. Some of our products will reach the world advanced level. Our total output value will reach 110 billion yuan, an increase of 51 percent over 1985.

2. We will make a great breakthrough in expanding the export of machinery products. In the meantime, we will lay a solid foundation for further expansion of exports during the nineties. To do so, we should manufacture marketable products and attach importance to opening up international markets. By 1990, the export volume of our machinery products will reach $1 billion, an increase of about 240 percent over 1985.

3. We should markedly enhance our economic results and provide more funds for the state. By 1990, the profits and taxes we turn over to the state will reach 21 billion yuan, an increase of more than 40 percent over 1985.

[Reporter] What measures will you take in order to attain the above-mentioned objectives of struggle?

[He] We will fight three tough battles and take five measures. These three tough battles are: 1) We will devote our main efforts to enhancing our capability of producing large complete sets of equipment. We should conscientiously digest technology we have imported. We should fight a tough battle in order to increase the level of our products. 2) We should make a breakthrough in strengthening our technical management, and in working out strict discipline in order to promote the work of technical management, establishing and improving the system of quality control. We will fight a tough battle of enhancing product quality in this regard. 3) We should firmly grasp the work of establishing an export base, and implement the relevant policies. We should open up international markets, and fight a tough battle aimed at expanding the export of our machinery products.

The five measures to be taken are: 1) We should firmly grasp management, and fully enhance the level of our enterprise management; 2) We should lay a firm foundation, in terms of basic technology, basic components, basic skills and basic machinery; 3) We should accelerate technical reform, and actively promote specialized cooperation in order to further improve the quality and structure of our enterprises; 4) We should exert our main efforts to economize on raw and processed materials and energy, and develop more products which need less energy to comprehensively enhance the social and economic results of our enterprises; 5) While grasping the work of training personnel, we should also do well in utilizing them. We should strengthen the work of training talented personnel, and enhancing the quality of our workers and staff members. Devoting our efforts to these five main aspects, I believe that the quality of our machine-building industry will be markedly improved.

[Reporter] The Ministry of Machine-Building Industry is one of the three experimental units of the State Council in structural reform. What experience have you achieved over the past 18 months, and what will you do during the period of the Seventh 5th-Year Plan?

[He] We have achieved certain experience in the reform of the management system of the machine-building industry. We have transferred all basic machine-building industry to the lower levels, and created conditions for separating government administration from enterprise management. We have taken an important step in the overall management of the machine-building industry as a whole.

During the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we will continue to give first priority to reform, and implement document No 24 issued by the State Council. We should further reinvigorate enterprises, and provide medium and large enterprises with more vigor and vitality. The key to our success in this respect lies in grasping well in the work of implementing various measures, and truly delegating power to enterprises concerned. We should take a new step in establishing lateral economic links.

AUDITORS UNCOVER SERIOUS FINANCIAL VIOLATIONS

[By staff reporter Zhu Ling]

[Text] Auditors throughout China uncovered serious violations of State financial regulations involving more than 674 million yuan ($211 million) in the first quarter of this year, CHINA DAILY was told yesterday.

The cases involved massive overspending on capital construction, fraud and tax evasion, mainly by concealing profits and partially reporting taxable income.

Of the total sum involved -- which was actually 80 million yuan less than the same period last year -- 235 million yuan is owed to the State Treasury and so far, 50 percent of the money has been traced back. The State Audit Administration altogether verified the books of 9,044 businesses in the first quarter of the year.

An administration official said that in the first three months of the year, 57 serious violations involving more than 1 million yuan each and 18 graft cases involving more than 10,000 yuan each were discovered.

The official said the situation was particularly bad in the field of capital construction as many businesses were obtaining funds in any way they could to expand construction despite frequent government demands for strict controls on the scale and size of capital construction. The government already devotes the lion's share of the state's revenues to fund capital construction every year.

In the first three months of this year, it was discovered that more than 110 million yuan was illegally collected to spend on capital construction projects.

Another serious problem is the false declaration of production costs, the hiding and falsifying of profits and partial reporting of taxable income by some industrial and agricultural firms.

Between January and March this year, violations involving 164 million yuan were uncovered.

The State Audit Administration was set up in September 1983 as part of the nation's effort to improve financial control. Last year, its 28,000 staff exposed violations involving 7.7 billion yuan.

The office has the books of about 2 million businesses across the country to audit regularly and its limited staff has only checked about 3 percent of them since it was opened.

Between September 1983 and the end of 1985, the office discovered cases of fraud, waste and tax evasion involving 8.9 billion yuan after checking the accounts of more than 58,000 businesses.

The auditors have also been watching the use of international loans in China, as one of the administration's priorities is to ensure that they are being used efficiently and lawfully. About 2,200 auditors have been involved in this work.

The official stressed that the administration's top priority this year was to ensure economic discipline and watch out for businesses which were spending too much on bonuses and consumer goods.

He said that the indiscriminate use of the bonus system, which had become widespread over the past two years, had now been brought under control.

STATE CRACKS DOWN ON 'SHODDY GOODS' PRODUCERS

[By staff reporter Nie Lisheng]

[Text] The State is taking legislative steps to penalize producers and sellers of shoddy goods and to hold them responsible for damages incurred by consumers.

The action is included in a set of regulations recently approved by the State Council concerning responsibility for the quality of industrial products. The regulations will go into effect on July 1.

The regulations prohibit all factories and shops from producing or selling substandard goods, including outdated items that have been banned by the State or goods that have not yet been approved by State quality-control institutions.

Producers and sellers are also strictly forbidden to market shoddy or fake goods or to pass them off as famous brand, fine-quality goods by usurping trade marks, or to engage in tie-in sales requiring poor products to be bought along with good ones.

Poor quality has become a major problem as some enterprises seek to increase production and profits at the expense of quality.

Since the third quarter of last year, the State Economic Commission has conducted three quality surveys. Each time it found at least one-third of products were not up to State standards.

But since China has had no effective regulations pinpointing responsibility, producers and sellers blame others to avoid punishment. As a result, consumers have suffered.

The new regulations stipulate that:

-- If parts or components of products fail to work but can be repaired, producers must repair them within an agreed time.

-- If these parts of components are beyond repair, the factories should take them back and provide consumers with good ones.

-- If products fail to function because of design defects, producers should provide consumers with refunds or compensate them for economic losses.

State industrial and commercial institutions will have the task of penalizing persons or enterprises found guilty of:

-- Producing and selling shoddy or fake goods in the guise of fine-quality or famous-brand merchandise.

-- Producing and selling goods without identifying their markers or those that have not received a certificate testifying to their quality.

-- Producing and selling outdated products or goods that have been turned out without State production licences or that are made of raw materials or components that fail to come up to State standards.

All profits from the above production and sales will be confiscated and an additional fine of up to 20 percent of the profits will be imposed.

PROCURATORS ON HANDLING DERELICTION OF DUTY CASES

HK110131 Changsha Hunan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 10 Jun 86

[Excerpts] A forum of procuratorates of 16 provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions on handling cases of dereliction of official duty concluded in Yueyang on 10 June.

Zhang Siqing, deputy chief procurator of the Supreme People's Procuratorate, stressed at the meeting: We must certainly not absolve the criminal behavior of dereliction of duty as bureaucraticism or an unhealthy trend. We must draw clear policy demarcation lines in law and deal severely with such cases, to ensure the further development of opening up to the world and enlivening the domestic economy.

Zhang Siqing said: State work personnel who approach their work in a gravely irresponsible attitude and fail to carry out or correctly carry out their duties, resulting in serious losses to public property and the interest of the state and the people, are guilty of dereliction of official duty. We cannot deal with dereliction of duty as bureaucratism or an unhealthy trend, and allow them to escape punishment and remain at large. Nor should we treat as a crime ordinary bureaucratism and unhealthy trends that have not caused serious losses.

At present we must in particular investigate and deal with seriously cases of dereliction of duty in purchase, sales, and credit and loans activities.

During the meeting, (Jiang Feng), director of the law and discipline inspection office of the provincial people's procuratorate, spoke on the province's situation and experiences in handling cases of dereliction of duty since last year.

MINISTER ADDRESSES WATER CONSERVANCY MEETING

[By reporter Cui Lisha]

[Text] Beijing, 11 Jun (XINHUA) -- At the rural water conservancy work meeting that ended today, Qian Zhengying, minister of water conservancy and electric power, said that in order to realize the targets set for agriculture in the "Seventh 5-Year Plan" and build strength for future advances in accordance with the demands of consolidation, renovation, and appropriate development, efforts must be made to increase the nation's irrigated land by 20 million mu by 1990 on the basis of the current 720 million mu. Also, an additional 20 million mu of flooded land must be drained.

In her speech delivered at the meeting, Qian Zhengying summed up the major achievements in water conservancy construction scored over the past 37 years since the founding of the PRC. She further pointed out the main existing problems in water conservancy construction by citing the disrepair and declining efficiency of some aging water conservancy works and the increasingly strained water resources in northern China. She maintained that some localities have relentlessly drawn on the water conservancy facilities and underground water. But such plundering of resources cannot go on forever. If the above two problems are not properly addressed with drastic measures in good time, flood and drought are likely to return to some localities and upset the ecological balance, thereby adversely affecting national economic development.

Qian Zhengying continued: The reason I raise this problem now is not to show the grim prospect for water conservancy construction, but to attempt to work out new ways to raise water conservancy work to a new level so that it will become compatible with national economic development. She stressed that we must first enhance our understanding of water conservancy work and strengthen leadership over it. The various localities must seek to clearly understand the actual conditions of water conservancy works and report to the upper authorities, asking that the handful of waterworks that are truly inefficient be scrapped.

However, it is necessary to firmly repair, maintain, and fully bring into play the efficiency of a large number of water conservancy works that are closely related to the safety of the people and production. We must determine whether such facilities should be further developed according to needs and feasibility. Beginning this coming winter, the whole country must carry out major water conservancy repair and renovation projects in a continuous and planned manner. Moreover, we must set up a labor accumulation system by which the various localities provide for the annual labor input and labor accumulation for rural water conservancy constructon according to the needs of projects and the actual capabilities of rural residents. Furthermore, we must increase investment in water conservancy construction through various channels so water conservancy investment can be restored to 1980 levels as soon as possible. At the same time, localities that possess more water conservancy facilities must correspondingly set up and perfect the grass-roots water conservancy management organizations of the various districts and townships. This is the key to properly managing and utilizing water conservancy works.

Dwelling on water conservation, Qian Zhengying pointed out that water conservation is a strategic task in water conservancy work, and stressed that the whole society must be educated to conserve water. She said: China's average per-capita share of water resources is equivalent to only one-quarter of the world per-capita share, and its distribution is highly uneven. With an average per-capita share of water resources less than a quarter of the national average, water shortages have become a prominent problem in northern China and in some coastal regions. Hence, it is necessary to work out economic and technical measures for water conservation, firmly grasp water conservation work in the industrial cities, and strive to develop agriculture, which consumes less water. To smash the practice of "sharing water from the same big pot" and to promote water conservation, we must employ the economic lever of collecting water fees. We must also enact a water law as soon as possible, and the various provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities must establish departments for the unified management of water resources.

MEETING URGES INCREASING RURAL BUYING POWER

[Text] Beijing, June 12 (XINHUA) -- Peasants' earnings must continue to rise if China is to sustain its economic expansion, Du Runsheng, director of the China Rural Development Research Center, told a meeting here.

He said: "The consumer demands of our 800 million peasants constitute the driving force behind industrial production."

The meeting was organized by the rural development research center, an advisory body set up in 1982, which is attached to the State Council.

Du said: "One can hardly expect China's industrial market to expand if peasants' purchasing power remains stagnant."

He pointed out that rural economic reforms introduced since 1980 had boosted productivity and enabled surplus labor to switch to industry and service trades.

As a result, average annual peasants' earnings had soared from less than 90 yuan in the early 1980s to about 400 yuan last year.

To boost earnings and rural production further, Du called for higher prices for farm produce, an expansion of rural industry and an increase in government spending on agriculture.

Every effort must be made to ensure the proper use of and protection of soil, water and forestry resources.

The indiscriminate misuse of farmland -- such as using it for building purposes -- must be cracked down on, said Du.

He stressed that the contract responsibility system, under which families earn more for producing more, should be continued, and that peasants should be encouraged to join forces and form production co-operatives.

'EMERGENCY CALL' ISSUED ON GAS WATER HEATERS

[By staff reporter Nie Lisheng]

[Text] The State has issued an emergency call for safety precautions over the use of water heaters after more than 20 people died of gas poisoning around the country.

The fatal accidents occurred either because of excessive carbon monoxide emissions or because the heaters had not been installed in a place with good ventilation, said an "urgent circular" prepared by the State Economic Commission and four other government departments released yesterday by the Consumers' Council of China Quality Control Association.

Because of design faults, nearly half of the home-made heaters were said to be not up to the State requirement that the fumes from the heaters should contain no more than 0.05 per cent carbon monoxide, a chemical formed because of incomplete combustion. Some types of heaters have been found to emit 10 to 30 times that amount.

Most Chinese houses and apartments are still not spacious enough to have a specially-designed place for the gas water heaters, which are often installed in a small bathroom with poor ventilation.

China now has six major water heater factories with an annual output of 170,000 mostly small "instant" heaters. An estimated 200,000 such heaters have been sold.

The notice ruled that manufacturers must conduct strict safety checks on carbon monoxide emissions before they are sold.

In turn, the notice said, consumers must not install the heaters directly in bathrooms but in a well-ventilated outside place with a duct leading hot water inside.

At a press conference yesterday, the State Economic Commission also disclosed that it will be conducting a nationwide safety inspection on 20 kinds of electric appliances amid concern that their poor quality has also caused many deaths.

Last year alone, there were four reported fatal cases of electric shocks with the use of defective electric fans, an official of the commission said. Fatal and fire accidents in connection with washing machines, electric cookers and blankets were also said to be frequent.

The problem seems to have become worse this year. In January, another three fatal accidents involving the use of electrical appliances were reported in Beijing and Shanghai.

TIAN JIYUN ADDRESSES RURAL WATERWORKS FORUM

[Text] Beijing, 10 Jun (XINHUA) -- It is necessary to attach great importance to and further intensify the construction of rural irrigation works, and increase investment in agriculture in order to build up our strength for future advances, achieve greater growth in China's agriculture, and fulfill the targets set in the Seventh 5-Year Plan, said Tian Jiyun, vice premier of the State Council, after hearing briefings at a forum on rural irrigation works yesterday.

Tian Jiyun said: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, China's agriculture has undergone a remarkable transformation. Many factors are involved in this transformation, which can be attributed mainly to the line, principles and policies formulated by the party since the 3d Plenary Session of its 11th Central Committee, as well as to the economic structural reform. All of these have fired the enthusiasm of hundreds of millions of Chinese peasants. At the same time, the transformation is also inseparable from state investment and the arduous struggle of the masses of people in building irrigation works over a protracted period of time. Human enthusiasm can be conducive to the development of productive forces only under certain production conditions. As irrigation is the lifeline of agriculture, without irrigation works such a remarkable transformation would be impossible. Our fruitful results in rural irrigation construction over the past 3 decades or so should be fully acknowledged. We must cherish and consolidate our achievements, and further intensify rural irrigation construction in order to steadily increase the output of grain, cotton, edible oil crops, and other cash crops, and develop the rural economy in all fields.

Tian Jiyun emphatically pointed out: Fundamentally speaking, to achieve greater growth in Chinese agriculture and advance it to a new stage, it is necessary to study and solve the strategic question concerning the building up of our strength for future agriculture advances. To do so, it is necessary to, first of all, persist in reform, continue to improve various rural reform measures and the household contracted responsibility system with remuneration linked to output, promote lateral economic ties, and provide better service before and after production so that the policies can be more effectively implemented and the enthusiasm of the broad masses of peasants further harnessed. Great potential in this aspect awaits our exploitation. Second, it is necessary to further straighten out the prices of farm products and perfect the procurement and marketing policy. Third, scientific methods must be adopted in farming. Fourth, investment in agriculture should be increased. Without increasing a certain amount of investment, it will be difficult to fulfill the targets set for agriculture in the Seventh 5-Year Plan. Tian Jiyun said: An important aspect of increasing agricultural investment is to intensify rural irrigation construction.

It should be pointed out that despite our remarkable achievements scored in rural irrigation construction, China's agricultural foundations remain rather weak. Farming in quite a few places is still dependent upon the weather; agricultural production being seriously affected by drought or flood. As a result of insufficient investment and poor maintenance in recent years, the efficiency of water conservancy works in some localities has gradually declined. It will be difficult to continue to use the old facilities without proper maintenance. This is a question that merits our serious attention. From now on, we should gradually increase investment in agriculture and improve the rural irrigation works with all the available financial and material resources.

Tian Jiyun said: Although we should increase investment to build new water conservancy works, we should also properly manage the existing facilities and keep them in good condition so that they can be more effectively used. This is an important issue and practical way to improve rural irrigation works. We have already built up certain foundations for our water conservancy works, but quite a few problems remain. A glaring one is the anarchy at some irrigation facilities, resulting in damage and inefficiency. This problem should not be handled lightly. Improper maintenance, management, and use of the existing irrigation facilities is tantamount to an irresponsible attitude toward the people. All localities should regard this as a pressing task and pay close attention to doing it well. Tian Jiyun called on the departments in charge of water conservancy facilities to improve their work in the spirit of reform. He pointed out: In carrying out rural irrigation construction, it is necessary to accumulate certain labor forces, proceed from the actual situation in improving the grass-roots irrigation management organizations and personnel and introducing the responsibility system, adopt measures suited to local conditions to promote diversified undertakings, and apply economic and administrative means to conserve water. In short, it is necessary to persist in reform and advance in an enterprising spirit to improve further our rural irrigation works.

The overseas investment has been attracted not only to service trades, but also increasingly to productive projects in petroleum, chemical industry, transportation, posts and telecommunications, light industry, textiles, machine building, electronics, metallurgy, building materials, medicine, and agriculture, animal husbandry and fisheries, the paper says.

YU QIULI CALLS ON ARMY VETERANS IN HANGZHOU

OW100351 Hangzhou Zhejiang Provincial Service in Mandarin 0900 GMT 9 Jun 86

[Text] Yu Qiuli, director of the PLA General Political Department, called on some veterans of the Red Army and the 8th Route Army in Hangzhou on the afternoon of 6 June. Yu Qiuli asked them individually about their daily life and well-being and wished them good health and a long, happy life. Yu Qiuli said: Old comrades are now staying at the second or third line so that young people can work at the front line. This is conducive to the training of cadres, and it is also necessitated by the revolutionary cause. Old comrades should enthusiastically support and assist young cadres in solving problems and surmounting difficulties. At the same time, the young cadres should be given a free hand in work and should not always be spoon-fed. As far as the young comrades are concerned, they should accurately appraise themselves, be modest and prudent, and show respect for old comrades. While calling on veterans of the Red Army and the 8th Route Army, Director Yu Qiuli was accompanied by Guo Linxiang and Zhou Wenyuan, deputy directors of the General Political Department; Xiang Shouzhi, commander of the Nanjing Military Region; and Fu Kuiqing, political commissar of the same military region.

HU YAOBANG CRITICIZED FOR SUN YAT-SEN REMARK

[Text] Taipei, June 13 (CNA) -- Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yao-pang, known for his habit of shooting from the hip, got himself into trouble again by referring to Dr. Sun Yat-sen, founding father of the Republic of China, as "once the founding father of our country." Hu made the remark in London last Sunday when he was visiting the place where Dr. Sun had been imprisoned by Manchu officials after being kidnapped. Upon seeing a bronze bust of Sun in the room, Hu said, "he was once the founding father of our country." The official HSINHUA NEWS AGENCY, which duly reported Hu's remark, issued a notice on the following day that the remark should be delected. Peiping also pretends to honor Sun as part of its united front ploy, describing him as a "forerunner of revolution" instead of the father of modern China.

PRC INTELLIGENCE RESEARCH FOCUSES ON DEFENSE STRATEGY

HK131248 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 13 Jun 86 p 7

["Special dispatch from Beijing": "Intelligence Research Shifts Orientation, Focuses on National Defense Strategy"]

[Text] Quietly, the Intelligence Research Institute of China's Commission of Science, Technology and Industry for National Defense is undertaking a reform, shifting from specific, individual and professional intelligence research to macro, comprehensive and general intelligence research.

It was in the structural reform of science, technology and industry for national defense, which has set new tasks for intelligence research, that this change began. Because of this change, the work of intelligence research has now shifted its orientation to serving the macro management and decision-making of science, technology and industry for national defense and providing references for science and technology for national defense, the strategy for armament development and the structural reform as well as major scientific and technological orientations.

In recent years, of all the research items of science and technology for national defense undertaken by the Commission of Science, Technology and Industry for National Defense, 9 have won national awards for scientific and technological achievements and 28 have been given departmental awards of grade 3 or higher by the Commission of Science, Technology and Industry for National Defense.

It has been disclosed that following the emergence of the "Strategic Defense Initiative" (or, the star wars plans), this research institute began to closely follow its development and proceeded to gather information and make comprehensive analyses and research the background, essence and feasibility of the "Strategic Defense Initiative" as well as its impact on global strategic principles. The achievements of their research on the management systems of the science and technology for national defense in foreign countries have given impetus to the reform of China's management system of science and technology for national defense.

Their forecasts on the battlefronts in the year 2000, their research on military technology in 2000, and so on, have provided important background materials for the development of China's science and technology for national defense and the technology of armaments. GUOFANG KEJI YAOWEN [IMPORTANT NEWS ABOUT SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY FOR NATIONAL DEFENSE] which they edit and publish, gives the central authorities and every department timely information about military technology and trends in armament development and is generally favorably received. The book entitled "The Present Conditions of the Armaments of Foreign Troops and Their Development Trends," written and edited by them, is also highly regarded by many units inside and outside the Army.

Intelligence work is a kind of very difficult and arduous mental labor. In the past, this institute primarily conducted research on armament systems and other relevant technology. At present, in the research of strategies for national defense and the development strategem for science and technology and armaments for national defense, as the level has become higher, the horizon wider and more difficult, new demands have been made on the researchers.

Therefore, the CPC Committee of this research institute has asked all the researchers to change their concepts; free themselves from conventional strategem and technology; macroscopically study the role and impact of the development of science and technology for national defense and armament systems on strategy; conduct comprehensive research in light of political, military, economic, technological and various other factors; and make use of advanced equipment, such as computers, to master quantitative analysis methods. As a result, researchers must constantly update their knowledge, open up new vistas of study and adapt themselves to new work requirements.

It has been learned that at present, the backbone of this research institute is mainly a number of middle-aged intellectuals who have a sharp sense of strategy and good analytical ability and professional knowledge. Having rich research experience and mastering some advanced analytical methods, they have become the right-hand advisers to the decision-making organs.

PRC OFFICIAL CRITICIZES TOUGH FOREIGN PRODUCT STANDARDS

HK130940 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 13 Jun 86 Business Post p 2

[By Paul Sham]

[Text] Countries which deliberately impose tough product standards to protect their own industries from the imports of developing nations came under attack yesterday from a leading Chinese official. Mr. Zhong Ming, first deputy director-general of the China State Bureau of Standards, said "complicated and harsh technical standards are increasingly becoming the main means of a new protectionism." This is one of the many reasons for the huge deficit developing countries have suffered in their trade with industrialised nations. Some countries frequently change the requirements or deliberately raise the levels of standards to place obstacles in the way of imports. "This pattern of protectionism makes the developing countries sustain great loss."

To exploit standards for "narrow and shortsighted" goals defeats the real aim of standardisation, which should be to impart greater speed and economy to trade flows and not to block them, he said.

Mr. Zhong, speaking at an American Chamber of commerce luncheon, called for a unified system of standards and said China will pursue bilateral and multilateral agreements. The diversity of standards has for too long blocked the exports of developing countries and a more unified system would help them to overcome these technical barriers.

Mr. Zhong said China would pay close attention to standards and increase product quality as part of its efforts to expand trading relations with the outside world. In terms of quality and performance, the government has planned that by 1990 some 40 percent of the country's major industrial products will reach levels achieved in the late 1970's and early 1980's by developed countries, he said. A system will be developed with a quality index for export products as the core.

"In the past, because some departments did not give enough attention to quality, health, packaging, testing and other requirements... of export products, claims and returns now and then occurred," he said. Mr. Zhong also called for a universal technical language to be adopted to reduce technical barriers to trade.

He said China is developing a system of certification, although conceding it began the work a little late. "In international trade, not only technical standards can create technical barrier, but certification systems can also become obstacles to trade."

PRC UNIVERSITY TO INTRODUCE SOCIAL WORK PROGRAM

HK080348 Hong Kong SUNDAY STANDARD in English 8 Jun 86 p 5

[By Yan Mei-ning]

[Text] Guangzhou's Zhongshan University is to introduce China's first social work programme this summer with the first group of students graduating in 1988.

Nevertheless, it is expected that these graduates will quickly be absorbed by government departments. Frontline workers, forming the bulk of social workers in Western countries, would not appeal for several years, according to the professor in charge of the programme.

Professor He Zhaofa, head of the Sociology department of the Zhongshan University, talked to the SUNDAY STANDARD about the university's effort to re-establish sociology studies after an interruption of 30 years. Studies in sociology stopped in 1951 to make way for other practical subjects, following the Soviet practive adopted after the 1917 Revolution. Zhongshan University was the first university to reintroduce sociology studies in 1981. After a preparation of three years, the university admitted its first group of sociology students in 1984.

At present, the university is one of three national comprehensive universities offering sociology studies in China, the other two are Beijing University and Nankai University. "Even developed countries put more emphasis on science and technology. But it is inappropriate, in the long run, to ignore humanity subjects. The Soviets revived sociology studies during the fifties," Professor He said.

Born in Hong Kong and a UCLA graduate in the forties, the Professor went to Guangzhou to teach at Ningnan University, but had to change to teaching of Southeast Asia history from the fifties onward. At the head of the pioneer project, Professor He, at an age of 65, is working hard to fulfill his plan to establish a first class sociology department in the next ten years. By 1991, it is hoped that the department will have built up a staff of 34 with three specialities and one research institute. The three specialties are to be community studies, social work and social psychology, while the research institute will be on applied sociology.

At the moment, only the speciality of community studies has been established. The one for social work will be launched this summer and will remain as a programme until it is upgraded to a speciality in due course.

After a lapse of 30 years, there is practically no teaching staff apart from a few aged academics such as Prof He. What the university is doing is to invite lecturers and professors from overseas to teach graduate students and then send the students abroad to study for doctorate degrees.

"As there has not been a department of sociology before, the graduate students came from various disciplines. We have to give a lot of remedial lessons in sociology to them. It is also very expensive to send them abroad. It costs U.S.$20,000 a year and free home visit has to be provided every two years. Even this cause considerable difficulty for us at the moment, I insist on laying a good foundation. There is no such thing as quick, plenty and cheap."

The University of Hong Kong is working out a curriculum for the social work programme, and lecturers from Hong Kong come to Guangzhou to conduct courses. Professor He said the students expect to study courses such as juvenile delinquency, social security, disabilities and community organisation, etc.

The SUNDAY STANDARD asked what the future development of the department will be, with teaching staff sent abroad and students taught by Hong Kong and overseas lecturers. The other query was what kind of career projects the graduates could expect. Professor He emphasised that the university has to develop its own style of sociology with Chinese characteristics.

"I have recently proposed that teachers returning from studies in foreign countries should go into the factories and villages for half a year. It helps them to get to know more about the livelihood of the average people and get rid of any Western styles they may have picked up,", said Prof He.

"Unlike physical sciences, we cannot transplant Western sociology. But what we can do is to modify it," he added. Prof He said the department is trying to draft a new set of social securities for the country. "Our country has a very good system of social securities, but it is for cadres only. With the growth of private business, we have to think of how to take care of the individuals who are no longer under the umbrella of state enterprises. It is unfair for them to pay tax without getting anything in return. On the other hand, free medical treatment, for example, practised at the universities, is creating waste. This is what we should avoid."

He said the career prospects for the 43 students who will be graduating in 1988 are good. "Central government department such as the Ministry of Labour and Personnel, Ministry of Civil Affairs, Ministry of Public Health and the Rural Development Research Centre will recruit these graduates. They can also get jobs with the Public Security Bureau, in Guangdong Province, and some of the organisations such as the Chinese Communist Youth League and the All-China Women's Federation," Prof He said.

RENMIN RIBAO VIEWS 'STORM' OVER SALT ISSUES

["Roundup" by Zhang Liang: "The Storm Around SALT"]

[Text] A new storm has arisen between Washington and Moscow in the past few weeks. This was touched off by the U.S. decision no longer to adhere to SALT-II. This development has without doubt cast a shadow over the U.S.-Soviet disarmament talks at Geneva and has also increased the tension in relations between the two countries. This American intention was announced by President Reagan in a statement on 27 May. Reagan said that in the future the United States must decide on the structure of its strategic forces in light of the degree of the threat posed by the Soviet strategic forces, and would no longer be bound by the SALT. The reason for this was that the Soviet Union had violated this treaty. However, his words left some room for maneuver, in that he expressed the hope that the Soviet Union would make use of this period to take constructive measures to stop violating the treaty; in that case, the United States would reconsider the matter.

The Soviet Union promptly reacted strongly to this American announcement. It denounced it as "an attempt to wreck the military balance," and warned that the Soviet Union "would not be unconcerned" over this move. If the United States failed to adhere to the treaty provisions, this might make the second U.S.-Soviet summit scheduled for this year fizzle out.

This expression of attitude by the U.S. Government caused serious disquiet in America and also among the Western allies. Now, when there has been no progress at all in the U.S.-Soviet arms control talks, the official U.S. announcement that it will no longer adhere to SALT-II will undoubtedly whip up a new round of the nuclear arms race. According to reports, the majority of congressmen do not agree with the government's decision, and some of them have even made plans for legislative moves to force the Reagan administration to continue to adhere to the treaty. At the recent conference of NATO foreign ministers, the foreign ministers of various countries put pressure on the United States by appealing to it not to abandon SALT-II. In the face of these pressures, President Reagan defended and explained his administration's decision at his 11 June press conference, to reassure the country and the Western allies. Reagan stated that if the Soviet Union could take the correct action, he might retract his decision to break through the SALT restrictions.

The U.S.-Soviet SALT was signed in 1979 during the administration of President Carter. After the treaty was signed, there were always differing views on it in the United States, and later the treaty was shelved by Congress and has never been ratified, due to the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan. The Reagan administration has always taken a negative attitude toward the treaty since it came to power. Due, however, to various domestic and external factors, Reagan has guaranteed that "so long as the Soviet Union displays corresonding restraint, we will not violate the existing arms control agreements."

However, the United States and the Soviet Union have constantly bickered and accused each other of violating the treaty over the past 7 years. In the recent period of time, Reagan submitted a detailed report to Congress listing Soviet treaty violations, and in particular accusing the Soviet Union of having produced and deployed new type-2 SS-25 intercontinental missiles, building a new radar station in Siberia, continuing to use secret code in missile testing with the aim of hampering verification, and so on. For its part, the Soviet Union has denied this and has in turn accused the United States of breaking the treaty provisions on many occasions, such as by exceeding the stipulated number of multiwarhead missiles, building missile-launching silos on land above the stipulated number, deploying Pershing-II and cruise missiles in Western Europe, and so on.

However, there are other reasons why Reagan chose the present moment to threaten to scrap the treaty. According to analysis by foreign press and publications, the United States may have taken three aspects into account. First, it wants to influence the U.S.-Soviet arms control talks at Geneva. Since they were resumed last year, these talks have now gone to the fifth round, but they have still not entered the phase of substantive "bargaining," and there is not much chance of an agreement being reached in the near future. The United States hopes that a realistic plan for reducing nuclear armaments can be discussed as soon as possible. Second, U.S. midterm elections are due in November, and Reagan needs to take a hardline attitude to reassure the right-wing conservatives. The United States plans to deploy a number of new B-52 bombers carrying cruise missiles before the end of the year; when that happens, the total number of U.S. multiwarhead missiles and aircraft will exceed the 1,320 limit set by the treaty. U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger said quite openly that this is for the purpose of reviving a "modern and effective deterrent force," to counter Soviet superiority in land-based missiles.

SALT-II was signed when there was parity between U.S. and Soviet nuclear forces. It is an agreement that seeks upward balance, and there are also many ambiguities in the text that give the two sides room for maneuver in continuing to develop their nuclear forces. The United States holds that the treaty provisions regarding multiwarhead missiles favor the Soviet Union, and that the Soviet Union has taken advantage of this loophole in the treaty to greatly develop its nuclear forces in recent years. The United States has therefore harbored the notion of changing the restriction on the number of carrier vehicles to a restriction on the number of warheads, so as to alter this aspect which is unfavorable for the United States. U.S. talks of scrapping the treaty also more or less reflects this U.S. thinking.

The current storm between the United States and the Soviet Union centered on whether to continue adhering to SALT-II also shows that there has been no relaxation in the positions of the two sides regarding disarmament. The Soviet Union has recently displayed some kind of "flexibility" while launching a vigorous "peace" offensive under the premise of making no substantial concessions. The aim of these Soviet proposals remains to pressure the United States into abandoning its "star wars" scheme, while the United States for its part seeks to force the Soviet Union to make a big reduction in its land-based intercontinental missiles. Hence, although one disarmament proposal after another has seen the light of day, not even minimal progress has ever been made at the Geneva disarmament talks. These proposals have turned into blank rounds. What now worries people in the West is that if the treaty is indeed dismantled, there will not even be a superficial restriction on the U.S.-Soviet arms race, and it is hard to predict what kind of a situation this will produce. The antogonism between the two countries will also increase.

NEWS ANALYSIS VIEWS U.S.-CANADA TRADE 'TIFF'

["News analysis: Canada, U.S. -- Trade War or Trade Talks?" by Zhang Yuanting -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Ottawa, June 14 (XINHUA) -- The growing trade dispute between the United States and Canada is by no means "a tiff," even though U.S. Vice President George Bush has repeatedly stated that it is.

The term "free trade," favored so far by the Reagan administration, suddenly seemed meaningless when the United States unilaterally announced May 22 a 35-percent tariff increase on Canadian red-cedar shakes and shingles.

Prime Minister Brian Mulroney charged that the imposition of U.S. tariffs was "appalling and unacceptable." In retaliation against the U.S. move, Ottawa announced June 2 that it would reimpose and increase duties on some U.S. products, including books, computer parts, cider, Christmas trees, oatmeal and oil for making asphalt. Both the U.S. measures and the Canadian retaliatory move took effect June 6.

Another victim of the trade conflict is the oil and gas drilling equipment Canada exports to the United States, and people are expecting a levy of 27 percent on Canadian softwood products. American timber dealers have complained about the Canadian Government's "inappropriate" subsidies for the country's softwood exports and the U.S. International Trade Commission Tuesday began a hearing on the matter.

The new tariff, if imposed, would represent a fatal blow to the Canadian softwood industry, which takes up one-third of the U.S. market and sold four billion Canadian dollars worth of its products to the United States last year. This new move also would threaten 300,000 related jobs for Canadians, a situation that is too harsh to be described as trifles between the two neighbors.

The present trade dispute between the two North American nations set the tone for their ongoing free trade talks, which began May 21. Any substantial outcome, as it looks like, can only be achieved on the basis of immediate resolution of the current tariff war. On all accounts, however, Bush's four-day visit to Canada this week has achieved little in this respect.

In Vancouver, Bush pledged to minimize the impact of the tariff war. Yet, the vice president could offer his 1,000 audience nothing more than the importance of U.S.-Canadian friendship and his government's determination to continue the free trade talks. What he stated next day at a press conference in Ottawa was simply a repetition of what he announced in British Colombia. At times, the vice president sounded so ambiguous that many observers suspected that he was more interested in temporarily easing the tension than in finding a real solution to the conflict. The U.S. investigation in subsidies for Canadian softwood products remained a worry for Bush's hosts here because they were apparently dissatisfied with his vague statement that the Reagan administration will strictly adhere to the U.S. trade laws. It could be only interpreted as an excuse for new tariffs if the United States thought the subsidies were "inappropriate," they said.

Last year, Washington had a 148-billion-dollar trade deficit with its trading partners, of which 20 billion was with Canada, next only to that with Japan. The growing trade imbalance has sparked cries of protectionism and other retaliatory measures from many American legislators.

President Ronald Reagan, who has declared himself a staunch opponent to protectionism, still takes his free trade doctrine as a cure to trade imbalance. During his visit to Canada March 1985, the President called in Quebec City for direct free trade talks between the two countries and believed that low-tariff or tariff-free trade between the two big powers could benefit both sides of the border. Neither the president's belief nor his proposed talks have produced any substantial results. The U.S. trade deficit seems to be denying gravitation and, according to Bush, more and more U.S. legislators began to favor stronger measures to check its momentum.

Given the fact that the Reagan administration remains factious on the issue, the U.S. future trade policy toward Canada will be a combination of opposite stances -- free competition and protectionism. As a Canadian newspaper put it, "free trade in words, protectionism in deeds" will be Washington's position in the U.S.-Canadian free trade negotiations.

SINO-U.S. SATELLITE LAUNCH PACT SIGNED

[Text] Two U.S.-built communications satellites are to be launched in the next two years by China Great Wall Industry Corporation, an affliliate of the Ministry of Astronautics, and Teresat Inc, a United States company headquartered in New York City.

Under the agreement, the first satellite will be sent up in the last quarter of 1987 and the second six months later. Both will be launched at Xichang in the southwestern province of Sichuan. The cost will be 10 to 15 per cent below the world market price, Uker, deputy manager of the China Great Wall Industry Corporation, told CHINA DAILY.

China has successfully launched 18 satellites since 1970. It has had only one failure -- in 1974, when attempting to put up its first recoverable satellite.

In launching the U.S.-made satellites, Uker, who is a senior engineer in the field, said his corporation will seek coverage from the People's Insurance Company of China. Teresa expects to buy insurance for its two satellites in the United States.

RENMIN RIBAO REPORTS REAGAN REMARKS ON USSR PROPOSAL

["Special dispatch" from Washington by reporter Zhang Yunwen: "Reagan Confirms That the Soviet Union Has Put Forward a New Proposal on Reducing Nuclear Weapons"]

At a nationwide televised press conference tonight, reporters' questions concentrated on the U.S.-Soviet nuclear arms reduction treaty. The United States has announced that by the end of this year, it will deploy 131 B-52 bombers armed with cruise missiles. At that time, the number of U.S. strategic missiles will exceed the limit set by the treaty, and the United States will no longer be bound by the treaty. This decision produced strong repercussions in the United States and in the rest of the world. Public opinion maintains that this decision has broken the 15-year arms control and will, undoubtedly, aggravate the arms race.

Reagan said that all the treaty did was to regulate the increase rate and number of weapons and to legitimize the arms race, and that it did not do anything nuclear weapons or the nuclear threat. Therefore, he has always opposed it. At tonight's press conference, Reagan accused the Soviet Union of violating the SALT II Treaty, but added that he would withdraw the decision of breaking through the retraints of the SALT II Treaty if the Soviet Union would take a correct attitude.

At the beginning of the press conference today, Reagan called on Congress not to cut the defense budget and urged it to approve the taxation system reform bill and the $100 million aid package to the Nicaraguan anti-government forces. These three motions are still under debate and will soon be put to the vote.

SHULTZ SAYS NEW SOVIET PROPOSAL 'GOOD SIGN'

[Text] Washington, June 13 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Secretary of State George Shultz said today the new Soviet proposals to reduce long-range nuclear weapons put forth in Geneva on Wednesday are "a good sign." Appearing on a telecast sponsored by the U.S. Information Agency, Shultz said while those proposals "have a propagandistic value," they "have substance in them....that's a good sign."

Unidentified government officials told ASSOCIATED PRESS today that in these proposals, the Soviet Union dropped its earlier demand that U.S. fighter-bombers in and around Europe be counted as strategic weapons and offered to raise the limit on total nuclear forces. In exchange, the officials said, the United States would have to agree to abide by the 1972 anti-ballistic missile treaty for 15 to 20 years.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes told reporters yesterday that the United States found those proposals "interesting" and would give them "a serious study."

USSR ENVOY URGES U.S. TO REVERSE SALT II DECISION

[Text] Washington, June 13 (XINHUA) -- A top Soviet diplomat warned today that if the United States really scraps the SALT II Treaty, it will evoke "a chronic arms competition" and possibly cast away the chance for a new U.S.-Soviet summit. At a Soviet Embassy news conference here, Soviet Deputy Ambassador Oleg Sokolov said the Soviet Union would not remain "a passive onlooker" if Washington ended its "technical" compliance with the 1979 accord but it would take "proportionate" measures to preserve the superpower "strategic parity."

When the United States breaks out of previous arms control agreements, he said, "all the limitations provided for in them will become invalid, such as the limitation on the number of the strategic delivery vehicles and the number of warheads on them." Furthermore, he contended, the actual U.S. abandonment of the SALT II Treaty would affect "in the most serious and negative way" overall U.S.-Soviet relations, including arms control talks and "in particular" the chance for a second summit this year.

He urged the United States to preserve the SALT II Treaty as a "base" for further agreements to curb the buildup of nuclear weapons by the two superpowers. Should President Reagan reverse his decision, "it certainly enhances the prospect, not only for relations in general, but for the summit meeting in particular," he said.

GORBACHEV REVEALS DETAILS OF DISARMAMENT PLAN

[Text] Moscow, June 16 (XINHUA) -- Soviet Leader Mikhail Gorbachev today revealed details of the latest Soviet disarmament proposal and said a new Soviet-U.S. summit was feasible if there was a possibility that concrete agreements could be reached.

Speaking at a one-day plenary meeting of the Soviet Communist Party's Central Committee, Gorbachev said that in attempting to find mutually acceptable solutions to the arms race, Moscow has taken "new steps", which include a U.S.-Soviet agreement on non-withdrawal from the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty for at least 15 years and on limiting the research of the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI), "star wars", to laboratory testing. Moscow's proposal also call for the limiting of American and Soviet strategic offensive arms to 1,600 units each with a total number of warheads of no more than 8,000.

"The question of medium-range weapons capable of reaching the territory of the other side, including that of long-range cruise missiles, could be solved separately," Gorbachev said. The Soviet proposal has already been presented to the U.S. at the Geneva arms control talks. "If the Americans ignore, this time as well, our initiatives, it will be clear that the present U.S. Administration is playing an unseemly game in the most serious question on which determines the future of man," Gorbachev said.

Washington, he said, "is assuming the gravest responsibility to mankind" by refusing to end nuclear testing and join the Soviet moratorium.

However Gorbachev insisted a new Soviet-U.S. summit was "possible" but said it would require "a atmosphere that would open up prospects for reaching real agreements."

Gorbachev also referred to last week's Warsaw Pact summit in Budapest, calling it "a major contribution of socialist countries to the struggle for improving the international situation." The summit ended with a disarmament initiative calling for NATO-Warsaw Pact cuts of 100,000 to 150,000 soldiers over the next one or two years and a 25 percent reduction in troop strength by the early 1990s. Gorbachev said the Warsaw Pact meeting also approved the Soviet idea for a mutual effort by all countries to realize the "star peace" program. It would include international cooperation in communications and navigation as well as land, air and space rescue operations and remote sensing. The "star peace" program is apparently a Soviet bid to stop the U.S. "star wars" project, which aims to build a anti-missile shield in space.

SOVIET UNION PROPOSES 'STAR PEACE' PROGRAM

[Text] Moscow, June 12 (XINHUA) -- In a major effort to stop the U.S. "star wars" project, the Soviet Union today proposed a three-stage joint program on peaceful space development to realize what Moscow termed "star peace" by the year 2000. It also called for a special international conference to discussed establishing a world body on peaceful spaceful exploration.

In a letter to United Nations Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar, Soviet premier Nikolay Ryzhkov said the joint space project would include international cooperation in communications and navigation as well as land, air and space rescue operations and remote sensing, according to the Soviet news agency TASS.

Ryzhkov said the first stage of the project, which would be carried out in the next five years, should be focused on the assessment of world people's needs for space development. The second stage, Ryzhkov said, calls for coordinted efforts to study and develop space technology in the early 1990s. The last stage would be concluded before the year 2000 and would involve the launching of spacecrafts and the installation of necessary ground facilities.

The Soviet "star peace" project appears to be a major countermeasure to the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI), commonly known as the "star wars" project, a plan to build an anti-missile shield in space. Moscow has repeatedly called upon Washington to abandon the SDI plan, offering instead its "star peace" project, but this appears to be the first time the Soviet Union has revealed details of its initiative.

USSR URGES U.S. RESPONSE TO WARSAW PACT PROPOSAL

[Text] Moscow, June 15 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union complained today that the United States and its NATO allies have not made a positive response to the disarmament proposal made by the Warsaw Pact last week, saying that the West position on the issue was an obstacle to arms control.

Leading official Soviet newspaper PRAVDA said in a commentary that while the U.S. State Department promised to further study the proposal put forward by Warsaw Pact nations in Budapest, Washington has tried to give the impression that real disarmament progress was already made possible by Western arms control initiatives. "As a matter of fact, the disarmament stance adopted by the West still constitutes an obstacle to real solutions to disarmament issues," the newspaper said.

It urged Washington and other NATO countries to respond positively to the proposal, which called for an East-West troop reduction of 100,000 to 150,000 soldiers for each side over the next one or two years and a 25 percent cut in troop strength by the early 1990s. The newspaper also accused U.S. President Ronald Reagan of taking a dangerous step in preparing not to abide by the 1979 SALT II Treaty. Any U.S. accusation of Soviet violation of the treaty is not convincing, it said.

PHILIPPINE VICE PRESIDENT CONTINUES VISIT IN BEIJING

Further on Zhao, Laurel Talks

[Excerpt] Beijing, 16 Jun (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang told Philippine guests today that he believes the new Philippine Government can surely create a more stable domestic situation and further rehabilitate and develop the economy under the leadership of President Corazon Aquino and Vice President Salvador Laurel.

Zhao Ziyang said: China and the Philippines are friendly and close neighbors with profound contacts in history. Since the new Philippine Government was founded, the friendly relations have continued to develop between the two countries. The Chinese Government appreciates the positive attitude taken by the new Philippine Government in promoting Sino-Philippine friendship. Zhao Ziyang made the above remarks when holding talks with Laurel, vice president and foreign minister of the Philippines, in the Great Hall of the People this morning.

Laurel said that the Philippines and China have never been enemies in the past, and that there is no reason that they should not become the best friends.

The Philippine vice president pointed out: China was one of the earliest countries to recognize the new Philippine Government. The Philippines highly appreciates the timely sympathy and support given to the new government by the Chinese Government's firm policy to develop neighborly and friendly relations with the ASEAN countries. China hopes the ASEAN countries will become strong and united and support ASEAN's desire to turn Southeast Asia into a peaceful, free, and neutral region. The Chinese Government highly values ASEAN's role in promoting peace and stability in the Southeast Asian region. He added that there are very good prospects for economic and technological cooperation by China with the Philippines and other ASEAN countries.

Laurel said the ASEAN countries are looking forward to the development of more fruitful cooperation with China. He expressed the conviction that the ASEAN countries will surely intensify their cooperation with China in the political and economic fields.

He gave a briefing on the measures taken by the new Philippine Government since its founding to stabilize the political situation and rehabilitate the economy. He expressed the opinion that winning the trust of the people is the key to the existence of any government.

Zhao Ziyang briefed the guests on China's economic structural reform and the policy of opening to the outside world. He said: Generally speaking, China is advancing while exploring ways to make progress. From what we can see now, we can succeed in reform without experiencing serious setbacks.

The two sides discussed expansion of trade and cooperation in the economic and cultural fields. They agreed that both countries are developing countries, and that barter trade to supply each other's needs would be a good thing.

Meets Deng Xiaoping 17 Jun

[Text] Beijing, June 17 (XINHUA) -- "China and the Philippines can be very good friends," Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the Chinese Communist Party Central Advisory Commission, said here today. He said President Corazon Aquino is welcome to visit China at any convenient date.

At a meeting with Philippine Vice-President and Foreign Minister Salvador Laurel in the Great Hall of the People, the senior Chinese leader said China is happy that the Philippine people made a very significant choice last February. China and the Philippines have long been close friends, Deng said. Relations between the two countries have been almost without any problems since they recognized each other in 1975. China has always respected the volition of other peoples, he said, expressing the belief that the friendly cooperation between China and the Philippines will continue to develop.

Laurel's talks with the Chinese leaders over the last couple of days have testified to the close ties between the two countries, he added.

Laurel expressed his gratitude for China's timely sympathy, understanding and support for the new Philippine Government, which won the recognition of the Chinese Government almost immediately after its formation. China sent a government cultural delegation to sign the first agreement with the new Philippine Government one week after it came into power, he said.

The new Philippine Government is committed to promoting the sincere friendship deeply rooted among the two peoples, the vice-president said. Laurel considered his talks with the Chinese leaders this week "sincere, frank and fruitful," at which the two sides shared similar views on a number of questions of mutual concern.

Deng Xiaoping briefed his guest on the "one country, two systems" concept, with which China resolved the Hong Kong issue. China intends to settle the Taiwan question using this concept, too, which is aimed at solving problems without resorting to arms. China is for settling international issues peacefully, he declared.

Laurel expressed his appreciation of the way the Hong Kong question was resolved. The Taiwan question, he said, should also be settled by the Chinese people themselves without external interference. The Philippine Government will continue to pursue the "one China" policy, the vice-president reiterated.

FURTHER ON HU YAOBANG'S EUROPEAN VISIT

Li Peng Discusses Energy Policy

[Text] Bonn, 15 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Vice Premier Li Peng answered questions put by representatives of Overseas Chinese and Chinese students in the FRG when he met them with General Secretary Hu Yaobang today. He spoke on China's energy policy and the Sanxia [Three Gorges] project.

On China's energy policy, Li Peng said: "China has rich coal resources and also a certain amount of oil. There are also rich hydropower resources. Hence, China will mainly depend on thermal power, coal, and hydropower to solve its electricity problem. However, China is also prepared to go in for a little nuclear power, on a very small scale. The main purpose of this is to follow in the tracks of advanced world technology. Of course, it is also aimed at solving a bit of the electric power problem. The nuclear accident at Chernobyl has aroused extremely great concern in China as well as in Europe. We are basically using American technology, pressurized water reactors, in the nuclear power plants we are now building. This is totally different from the technology at Chernobyl. We hold that this technology we are using is realtively advanced and mature, and relatively reliable in the safety aspect. However, the Chernobyl incident has also taught us a lesson, and we will have to all the more adopt measures stressing safety in design, construction, and future operations. We are also prepared to promote international cooperation in nuclear safety."

Regarding the Sanxia project, Li Peng said: "The Sanxia project is a project of tremendous and comprehensive benefit for power generation, flood prevention, protection of Wuhan City and the lower reaches of the Chang Jiang, waterway transport, and so on. Preparatory work for this project was started by the Americans back in the 1940's. After the liberation, we specially set up a very large design organ, which has engaged in protracted work for over 30 years now. Since this is a very large project with a bearing on the overall scheme of the four modernizations and on posterity, we are adopting the following approach: 1) To be positive and not avoid engaging in this project. We still want to go ahead with it. 2) To be cautious, extremely cautious. We are preparing to organize demonstrations and proofs, and we will also hire a number of foreigners who are experienced in hydroelectric station construction to take part in the consultations. At present some people are saying that China will contract this project to foreign countries. That is not so. We are only inviting foreigners to provide some technical consultatiave service."

Leaves FRG for France

[Text] Munich, June 16 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Communist Party leader Hu Yaobang concluded his five-day visit to Federal Germany and left for France by special plane today to continue his four-nation West Europe tour. Accompanied by Minister-President of the Land Bavaria Franz Josef Strauss, Hu reviewed a guard of honor at a grand seeing-off ceremony at the airport. Also present on the occasion were Guo Fengmin, Chinese ambassador to Federal Germany, and Per Fischer, Federal German ambassador to China.

Accompanying Hu on his current trip are Vice-Premier Li Peng, Vice-Chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference Fei Xiaotong, and Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs Zhou Nan.

This morning Hu visited the city art gallery, one of the world's six largest, which boasts 2300 peices by German, Italian, French, Dutch and other masters living between the 14th and 18th centuries. Meanwhile, Vice-Premier Li Peng visited Deutsches Museum, the largest scientific and technological museum in the world.

Roundup on Hu's FRG Visit

["Roundup: Hu Yaobang Winds Up Visit in Federal Germany" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Munich, June 16 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Communist Party leader Hu Yaobang leaves here for Paris today, winding up what he described as fruitful discussions with Federal German leaders on world peace and the friendship and cooperation between the two countries and between China and Europe as a whole.

Hu arrived here Saturday from Bonn where he had met with Federal German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, Social Democratic Chairman Willy Brandt as well as President Richard Von Weizsacker, Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher and other Federal German politicians.

He told his hosts that the two superpowers possessing the largest nuclear arsenals should sit down for serious talks instead of bogging down the blind alley of confrontation. He called on all peace-loving countries and people to jointly pressure the superpowers to stop the arms race, including the race in outer space and to stop all acts of bullying of the weak. He called upon the superpowers to stop interfering in the internal affairs of other countries and violating their national sovereignty. In this respect, he said, Europe and China are two important forces and can play a significant role in checking war and safeguarding peace.

Hu also noted "important progress" towards a united and strong Western Europe and welcomed the increased contacts between Eastern and Western Europe.

On the North-South issues, Hu urged for reforming the present international economic order, saying that to help developing countries is the obligation of their own continued development. So long as the gap between the North and the South is widening and hundreds of millions of people go hungry, there is no justice, peace and stability to speak of, Hu said.

In a speech to 250 leading Federal German businessmen on Friday, Hu pledged that the opened door of China will never be shut again. Having suffered from self-imposed seclusion for three to four centuries, "we are determined to pursue the policy of opening to the outside world for a long time to come," he said.

Hu asked businessmen to see things in a long-term perspective, adhere to the principle of equality, reciprocity, patience and mutual understanding, and assume more flexible approaches in pursuing economic cooperation with China.

The general secretary said the Chinese people and government desire strong Sino-Federal German relations in all fields on the basis of long-term stability.

Hu noted that the economic relations between China and Federal Germany, its largest trading partner in Europe, have been developing smoothly, with the total volume of bilateral trade in 1985 exceeding three billion U.S. dollars. But "in my view, there are still vast potentials for further cooperation," he said. Hu called on Federal German businessmen to offer China funds, technology and managerial expertise in exchange for its abundant human and material resources and vast market.

Federal German Chancellor Kohl told his guest that relations between their countries are "advancing on the sound track" and that they share identical views on many political issues. Both the Federal German and Chinese Governments oppose international aggression and support the rights of self-determination of the Afghan and Kampuchean peoples and the withdrawal of foreign troops from Afghanistan and Kampuchea, he said. Kohl also said the economies of the two countries complement each other, establishing a basis for the broad development of bilateral economic relations.

Brandt told his Chinese guest that despite disarmament negotiations over the past 30 years, the arms race has actually intensified. He said he hoped that Federal Germany and China could become partners in the search for peace, equality and unity and that relations between his party and the Chinese Communist Party will continue to grow.

At a press conference held in Bonn Friday, Hu said his five-day visit, although short, is fruitful. "I have strongly felt that Sino-Federal German friendship has struck roots in the hearts of our two peoples," he said.

On Thursday, the day of his arrival in Federal Germany, Hu travelled to North Rhine-Westphalia, the major industrial state of Federal Germany.

Yesterday morning, Hu visited an animal husbandry research center in the suburbs of Munich. The center, the largest of its kind in Federal Germany, helps train personnel from 17 countries, including China. Impressed by the advanced technology in the center, Hu said there are "bright prospects" for further cooperation between China and Federal Germany in animal husbandry.

Hu, jointly invited by Kohl and Brandt, arrived in Bonn after a visit to Britain. His current 16-day European tour will also take him to Italy after he completes his visit to France.

French Press Welcomes Hu Visit

[Text] Paris, June 16 (XINHUA) -- The French press has carried a number of editorials and articles welcoming Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang's visit to France, which begins today.

"L'ECHO" stated in an article that Franco-Chinese relations have been well established in the economic domain as well as on vital diplomatic and political issues, and Hu's visit to France "indicated Beijing's desire to strengthen its ties with the old continent" (Europe). France should also make up its mind to provide more technical aid to help with China's economic take-off, if it wishes to maintain good relations, the paper said.

"LE FIGARO" remarked that both France and China are self-determining nuclear powers and both are members of the U.N. Security Council. Like China, France bases its policy of independence on dialogue with the two superpowers and on its ties with the Third World. The paper said the two countries are very close to each other in their viewpoints on East-West relations and disarmament.

"L'HUMANITE" published a schedule of Hu's visit to France, and carried a picture of his arrival in Bonn.

"EUROPEAN TIME," a Chinese-language newspaper published here, gave an editorial salute to the general secretary's visit, calling it "a big event in Sino-French relations which will have far-reaching, historical significance." The paper said it is indispensable to further strengthen and develop the friendly relations between France and China, countries which play an influential role in the international arena. The leadership of the two countries has over the past two decades strived to maintain these friendly relations, the paper said. The Chinese-language publication also expressed the belief that friendship and cooperation established on the basis of common interest will stand the test of time and no force whatsoever can break it.

The paper said that China leaders have put forward the basic national policy of "revitalizing China", which means that internally, it will boost its economic construction through reforms and its open-door policy, and externally, it will uphold its policy of independence, self-determination and peace. It can be predicted that China will stick to its national policy and will assume a new look in the world, the paper said.

"EUROPEAN TIME" concluded by expressing a heartfelt welcome to Hu Yaobang on his visit to France and the hope that the friendship between the two countries will remain evergreen.

Given 'Red-Carpet Welcome'

[Text] Paris, June 16 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang was accorded a red-carpet welcome by President Francois Mitterrand when he arrived here today to start a four-day official visit to "further bilateral relations and promote peace in the world." Hu's special plane touched down at 04: 20 p.m. (local time) at Orly airport. Hu, accompanied by President Mitterrand, inspected the republic's guard of honour after a military band played the national anthems of the two countries.

In a speech at the airfield's pavilion of honor, President Mitterrand recalled the amicable reception and hospitality he had received during his visit to China in 1983. He said he was looking forward to further discussions with Hu on important international issues, and on peace and balance in the world. He expressed the hope that the general secretary's visit would be a great success in promoting bilateral contacts and for the benefit of the world.

In his speech, General Secretary Hu recalled his "very pleasant and friendly" talks with the president in Beijing and said he was convinced that his visit to France would be quite fruitful. "France is a great nation who has made its significant contributions to human civilization and world progress," Hu said.

As for the future of the Chinese and French people and that of the human race at large, Hu said he was thinking of the famous words of a great French thinker, Francois-Marie Arouet Voltaire, that man's greatest treasure is hope. No one would go sowing if people just think of the present.

Hu and Mitterrand left Orly airport by helicopters and changed for cars at the Invalides Square in the city. Then they drove to Marigny Hotel, a guest house usually reserved for visiting heads of state and government.

The two leaders will have talks this afternoon at Elysee Palace, where a state dinner will be given in Hu's honor by President Mitterrand this evening.

France is the third leg of the Chinese leader's four-nation West European tour which has taken him to Britain and Federal Germany. Among Hu's entourage are Vice Premier Li Peng, and Fei Xiaotong, vice chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference.

Holds Talks With Mitterrand

[Text] Paris, June 16 (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang, visiting general secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, met with French President Francois Mitterrand here this afternoon. The Chinese party leader arrived earlier this afternoon for a four-day official visit, a part of Hu's Western Europe tour, which has also taken him to Britain, Federal Germany and will end in Italy.

Hu said he appreciated the role that France has played in major international issues and expressed satisfaction with the development of the relations between China and France in recent years. Hu also briefed the French president on the situation in China and China's view on major international issues.

Mitterrand told Hu that he was pleased to see the identical positions of France and China on world peace, disarmament and other matters. The French president also briefed Hu Yaobang on the development of the European communities and France's position on relations with Third World countries. Mitterrand stressed that France's European policies are the "major axis" of its entire foreign policies and Paris-Bonn relations have a special role in the development of Europe, an Elysee official said.

["Roundup: Hu Says Europe Can Help Deter War" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Paris, June 16 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Communist Party leader Hu Yaobang, who arrived here earlier today on a four-day visit to France, said a united and strong Europe can play an "immeasurably active" role in preventing war. Speaking at a dinner given in his honor by President Francois Mitterrand at the Elysee Presidential Palace, General Secretary Hu said it is groundless to be pessimistic about the role and future of Europe. Europe has not only a bright past but an even brighter future, he said.

"A growing and strengthening Europe, united on the basis of common interests, will have an immeasurably active part to play in restraining war and preserving peace, just as a revitalized China, which pursues its own independent foreign policy for peace, will do," he said.

Hu also urged for North-South dialogue and cooperation, saying that "without the economic growth of the developing countries, the developed nations would be in a difficult position in respect of their raw material sources, markets as well as exits for their capital investment and it would not be easy for them to secure an enduring growth."

Hu said he admired the reasonable stand taken by some French friends on the issue of South-North cooperation. "It is my hope and conviction that France will make its own contributions to that end," he said. China and France, he pointed out, share many similar or identical views "on peace and development, the two most fundamental issues of the time." He said both China and France want to prevent war and call for East-West dialogue and oppose the arms race, aggression and expansionist policies. "Both believe that it is the superpower's duty to reduce their armament first and that they have no right to dictate to the rest of the world," he said.

Hu, invited by French President Mitterrand, was met by Mitterrand and given a red-carpet welcome upon his arrival at the Orly airport this afternoon. Hu is the second top Chinese leader to visit France in two years after Premier Zhao Zhiyang's trip here in June 1984. In 1983, Mitterrand also paid a five-day visit to China.

In the past five years, bilateral economic relations between France and China have developed rapidly, particularly in the fields of energy exploration, transportation and nuclear power plant construction. The total value of Sino-French trade in the first four months of this year reached 332 million U.S. dollars, 38 percent more than last year.

Hu said at the dinner that he is satisfied with the increased high-level dialogue and political consultations between China and France and the expansion of economic, cultural, scientific and technological cooperation. "We sincerely hope that Sino-French relations will continue to maintain the good trend of development and grow on the basis of long term stability," he said.

In his welcoming speech, Mitterrand said that France attaches particular importance to friendship and cooperation with China, "the two countries discover they have extensive similarities or convergent views on the order of world. All this has led to solid links and affirmed their will of understanding each other, listening to each other and working together."

He expressed confidence in the future of French-Chinese relations. He also praised the "decisive role the Chinese leaders are playing in the life of the present world."

Referring to the issue of disarmament, Mitterrand said France pursues an independent policy based on nuclear deterrence and is seeking the equilibrium of forces at the lowest level possible. France is determined not to disarm itself so long as others continue to accumulate weapons, he said.

The French president also called for international dialogue, and expressed his opposition to violence and interference in the internal affairs of other countries.

Before the dinner, Hu and his entourage, which includes Vice Premier Li Peng and Fei Xiaotong, vice chairman of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, met with President of the French Senate Alain Poher.

Hu is currently on a 16-day European tour which has already taken him to Britain and Federal Germany. He will travel to Italy after completing French visit.

Expansion of Remarks by Hu

OW170220 Beijing XINHUA in English 0152 GMT 17 Jun 86

[Text] Paris, June 16 (XINHUA) -- Chinese party leader Hu Yaobang said here tonight that relations between the developing and developed countries should be based on the principle of equality and mutual benefit, complementary for each other and aimed at common prosperity through North-South dialogue and cooperation.

"The world today is increasingly becoming an economically interdependent whole," he said. "Without the economic growth of the developing countries, the developed nations would be in a difficult position in respect of their raw material sources, markets as well as exits for their capital investment and it would not be easy for them to secure an enduring growth."

Hu said he admired the reasonable stand taken by some French friends on the issue of South-North cooperation. "It is my hope and conviction that France will make its own contributions to that end," he added. Hu, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party, said: "We are pleased to note that China and France share many similar or identical points of view on peace and development, the two most fundamental issues of the time." He listed the common points of view shared by the two countries as follows:

-- Both are determined to prevent the war from breaking out again not just in the rest of the century but also in the next century.

-- Both stand for East-West dialogue and against confrontation between them, for disarmament and against the arms race, for respect for other countries' sovereignty whilst against aggression and expansionist policies.

-- Both believe that it is the superpowers' duty to reduce their armament first and that they have no right to dictate to the rest of the world.

"Affairs in each country should be managed by its own people while world affairs should be managed by all countries together on the basis of equality," the general secretary said.

He said it is in the interests of world peace and development that France, as an economically well-developed, scientifically and technologically advanced major European country and as a permanent member of the United Nations Security Council, plays a significant part in the cause of maintaining world peace and promoting world economic development.

Further Remarks by Mitterrand

[Excerpts] Paris, June 16 (XINHUA) -- French President Francois Mitterrand today said that the current visit by General Secretary Hu Yaobang to France demonstrated the will of the Chinese leaders to open their country to the outside world including Europe.

He also praised the "decisive role the Chinese leaders are playing in the life of the present world."

He said Hu's presence at the dinner itself showed the excellent relations between France and China. Invited by Mitterrand, Hu arrived here this afternoon to pay a four-day visit to France. Mitterrand said that "the two countries discover they have extensive similarities or convergent views on the order of the world. All this has led to solid links and affirmed their will of understanding each other, listening to each other and working together." What brings the two nations together is neither the geographical location, nor cultural background and political system, but the will of the two countries to assume without aggressivity their place in the world, the French President said.

Mitterrand stressed that France attached particular importance to the friendship and cooperation with China. "In the sentiments we feel towards you lie not only the respect for one of the most ancient and briliant civilization but also the admiration for the efforts you have made in your country," he added.

The French president called for dialogue, and opposed violence and the interference in others' affairs. He said it is not impossible to make progress on disarmament and the development of the Third World. He said the regional conflicts are threatening peace. He held that France and China can make joint efforts to take into consideration the objective of peace fo tomorrow. He concluded that France attaches particular importance to the deepening of the cooperative relations with China and appraises China's efforts to overcome its own difficulties.

LIAOWANG ARTICLE ON TIES WITH WESTERN EUROPE

HK131447 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 23, 9 Jun 86 p 26

[Article by Bao Hua: "Relations Between China and Western Europe Are Developing Day by Day"]

[Text] In recent years, China's relations with Western Europe have undergone new developments, both in scope and quality. Not only are mutual political links strengthened, and economic ties closer, but cooperation and exchanges in the fields of science, technology, culture and education have achieved further progress.

Exchange visits between high level leaders of China and Western European states have increased. In 1985 alone, eight heads of governments and five foreign ministers from Western Europe visited China. On the other hand, Chinese leaders also repeatedly travelled to Western European countries. Following the visits of President Li Xiannian in 1984, Premier Zhao Ziyang in 1984 and 1985, General Secretary Hu Yaobang will visit Great Britian, the Federal Republic of Germany, France and Italy. This is the first official visit to Western European countries by the highest leader of the Chinese Communist Party. His visit will promote mutual understanding and propel the development of bilateral relations.

In recent years, China built close economic ties with Western Europe which has become not only an important source of advanced technology and equipment for China but also a major market for China's farm and livestock products, arts and crafts, textiles and mineral products. Last year, trade volume between the two totalled 9 billion dollars, an increase of almost 32 percent over that of the previous year and 7 times more that of 1970. At present, Western Europe ranks second to Japan as China's second largest trading partner (excluding Hong Kong and Macao). In 1985, trade relations between China and France were greatly developed with the conclusion of several important agreements and trade volume reached 830 million dollars. Prospects for trade development with Great Britain look good, with trade volume at 1.4 billion dollars. Trade with the Federal Republic of Germany continues to advance steadily with bilateral trade totalling 3 billion dollars, thus maintaining the FRG as China's number on Western European trading partner. Projects under negotiations with Italy have scored progress and with trade volume at 930 million dollars, Italy has remained China's third largest trading partner among Western European nations for the second straight year.

There has also been greater economic cooperation between China and Western Europe in recent years. The methods and forms of cooperation are more flexible and diversified and include trade subsidies, joint ventures, joint productions, employment services and other things. Both sides have begun cooperation in the areas of energy, aviation, shipbuilding, automobile manufacturing, light industry, and food processing. On matters involving the transfer of technology and financial cooperation, not a Western European countries has adopted friendly actions toward China. Last year, a number of foreign governments extended to China low interest loans or preferential credit terms. Meanwhile, the EEC and its member states continue to provide China with financial and technical assistance or grants.

Since the seventies, China has signed trade, economic and technical agreements with the majority of Western European countries. In recent years, a series of other accords were concluded. They included an agreement on trade and economic cooperation with the EEC and others concluded individually with some countries, such as accords on investment protection, on prevention of double taxation and on nuclear cooperation. The signing of these agreements ensure the further strengthening of economic and trade cooperation.

There has also been marked progress in cooperation between China and Western Europe in the fields of science and technology, culture and education. The scientific and technical cooperation launched by China and the EEC in 1981 proceeded smoothly. The fields of cooperation which began in energy now extend to agriculture, medicine, remote sensing, information, ferrous metallurgy, weather forecasting, biological projects, scientific-technical data and regulations, scientific-technical management and training of personnel. In October 1985, Nayers vice president of the EEC, led a delegation comprised of high-level officials and economic and scientific strategists to Beijing to attend a "symposium on the new technological revolution" jointly sponsored by China and the EEC. The forum was concluded successfully.

Cultural and artistic exchanges have also fluorished increasingly, with film festivals and all kinds of expositions held repeatedly while exchange visits of cultural and sports delegations also doubled. Last year, China held exhibits on archaeological finds from Qin tombs, treasures from the Forbidden Palace and cartoon books in some countries and regions of Western Europe. Photographs, classical and oil paintings as well as modern arts from Western European countries were similarly shown in China. China's Shaanxi Tang Dynasty School of Dance ensemble and Tienjin acrobatics troupe toured Europe, while the Royal Danish Ballet, Swedish mime actors, string quartet, and the Austrian Hayden quartet group performed in China.

In education, China and many West European countries have many exchange students and researchers. The EEC along with Great Britain, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Belgium and Italy provided China with a definite number of scholarships. They also trained simultaneous interpreters as well as experts in statistics, customs, science and technology and management for China.

In recent years, there have been comparatively greater developments in the relations between provinces and cities of China and Western Europe, with the establishment of numerous sister provinces and cities. Cooperation in the fields of economics, trade, science and technology have also begun to make concrete strides.

There still exist great potential for the development of relations between China and Western Europe. While bilateral trade volume may have had substantial growth, relatively speaking, the amount is still small, representing only 15 percent of China's total foreign trade and not even 1 percent of Western Europe's. China has consistently had trade imbalances against Western Europe with deficits hitting 3.8 billion dollars last year. It is necessary to expand trade, in particular, for Western Europe to increase its imports from China in order to achieve a balance of trade. While heartening results have been made in economic and scientific cooperation, cultural and education exchanges between the two, are still at a preliminary stage, with the scope and extent in need of expansion. Not a few areas of possible cooperation remain untouched and require the positive efforts of both sides.

Relations between China and Western Europe have a firm foundation and the prospects for further development are excellent.

First, both China and Western Europe are forces for restraint of war and maintenance of peace. They have no basic conflict of interest politically, and share the same or similar views on major international problems. China supports Western Europe's unity for strength and praises its positives effort for easing East-West tensions as well as its more sensible stand for the settlement of North-South problems. On the other hand, Western Europe favors a strong and prosperous China and adopts a positive attitude in developing relations with her.

Economically, China and Western Europe have their respective advantages and could complement and supplment each other. Western Europe's advanced technology and abundant capital could play a role in China's modernization, while China's rich natural resources and huge market could similarly contribute to Western Europe's porsperity. The difference in the economic structures and levels of development of China and Western Europe determines that the two could be just excellent trading partners and not competitors. Bilateral cooperation is beneficial to both sides as well as to world economic development.

More importantly, both sides have urgent desires to develop ties. The present economic situation is also favorable for development. The active promotion of ties with Western European countries is an important part of China's foreign policy. On the other hand, based on its strategy for a multipolar balance of power, Western Europe would like to see a strong and stable China in the east.

Indeed, there exist favorable objective and subjective factors for the development of relations between China and Western Europe. The crucial issue is to take action, further strengthen mutual understanding, and adopt concrete, viable measures. It could be ascertained that with joint efforts, relations between China and Western Europe will be raised to a new level.

NETHERLANDS WELCOMES WARSAW PACT PROPOSALS

[Text] The Hague, June 13 (XINHUA) -- A Dutch Foreign Ministry spokesman said here today the Warsaw Pact's latest proposals for a joint NATO-Warsaw Pact reduction in conventional forces throughout Europe should be seen as "positive." The proposals for a 25 percent reduction in European forces by the early 1990s contain many elements that merit careful study, he said. The Netherlands will look at them closely, together with its allies, to consider the extent to which they can contribute to greater stability at lower armament levels, he pointed out.

He recalled that NATO foreign ministers called for "courageous steps" to reduce conventional armaments when they met in Halifax, Canada at the end of last month. The Warsaw Pact proposals could play an important role in the studies of a special working group of senior officials, who will report to NATO foreign ministers when they next meet in Brussels in December, he said.

ZHAO ZIYANG CONDEMNS SOUTH AFRICA RACISM

[Text] Beijing, 15 Jun (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang sent a message today to warmly greet the convocation of the "World Conference on Sanctions Against Racist South Africa." Full text of the message follows:

World Conference on Sanctions Against Racist South Africa

Paris

On behalf of the Government of the People's Republic of China and the Chinese people, I extend warm congratulations on the convocation of the World Conference on Sanctions Against Racist South Africa.

In recent years, the South African racist regime has intensified its efforts to enforce the apartheid policy. Of late, it has flagrantly declared a so-called nationwide state of emergency, brutally suppressing the South African people's struggle for racial equality and social justice. The South African authorities have also continued their illegal occupation of Namibia. Not long ago they even outrageously carried out armed raids against their neighbors, Zimbabwe, Botswana, Zambia, and Angola, wantonly encroaching upon the territorial integrity and sovereignty of these countries and trampling on the basic norms governing international relations.

The Chinese Government and people strongly condemn the South African authorities for this series of crimes they committed and will, as always, unswervingly support the South African people in their struggle against racism, the Namibian people in their struggle for national independence, and the various countries in southern Africa in the struggle for safeguarding their state sovereignty and security.

In the meantime, we support the reasonable proposition and just demand of the international community for applying sanctions against the South African authorities. The Chinese Government and people will unite closely with the African people and other peoples in the world, and continue to work with them in a joint endeavor to oppose racism, colonialism, imperialism, and all acts of aggression and expansion and defend human justice and world peace.

Wishing the conference complete success.

Zhao Ziyang, premier of the State Council of the People's Republic of China.

Beijing, 15 June 1986.

RENMIN RIBAO COMMENTARY ON 'SOWETO MASSACRE'

HK160340 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 16 Jun 86 p 6

[Commentator's article: "The Raging Fire of the South African People's Struggle Against Atrocities is Unquenchable -- In Commemoration of the 10th Anniversary of the 'Soweto Massacre'"]

[Text] The 10th anniversary of the "Soweto massacre" in South Africa falls on 16 June this year. To the people of South Africa, this is a day of great historical significance.

The struggle 10 years ago against atrocities showed the South African people's unyielding determination and strength to oppose racial oppression and strive for freedom and equality. It is still urging the South African people to launch a brave struggle and advance wave upon wave. It has become a brilliant chapter in the history of struggle of the people of South Africa and other parts of Africa against atrocities.

The struggle against atrocities which took place 10 years ago was started by black youths and students in Soweto, a town of the black people in South Africa. They opposed the South African authorities' decision that schools for blacks must use the Afrikaans language to teach lessons. They clearly declared that "this is not a language issue but one of system," pointing the spearhead of struggle at the South African racist education system. The South African authorities sent large groups of soldiers and policemen to put down the struggle, killing or wounding more than 1,000 innocent black people and perpetrating the world-shaking "Soweto massacre." The broad masses of infuriated black people continued to launch mammoth fights against atrocities throughout the country, making the South African authorities tremble. This brave struggle has greatly awakened the South African people and won extensive international support. What is more important is that the South African people have seen clearly that the people are powerful when they are united in struggle and that the racists are feeble although they look ferocious. Thus, they are more confident of victory and carry the struggle forward. Every year, the anniversary of the "Soweto massacre" has become a day of fighting in unity for the South African people.

The South African people's struggle has further progressed during the past decade. More and more people from various walks of life have joined in the struggle, which continues to grow in scale, and the intense fire of struggle is spreading all over the country. People of different occupations and trades have extensively set up anti-apartheid organizations and launched students' and workers' strikes and other mass movements, such as boycotting the goods of the white people, in an organized manner and under good leadership. The just struggle of the black people has won sympathy and support among many white people. Their struggle against atrocities has spread from the cities to the countryside. Even the people on the black homesteads have risen in rebellion. In some towns and on some black homesteads, people have set up their governments in enbryonic form. All this fully shows that the South African people's anti-apartheid struggle is persistently developing and deepening despite some setbacks, and the people are continuing to mature and have become an unconquerable force.

Not long ago, the African National Congress of South Africa called on the South African people to take the commemoration of the 10th anniversary of the "Soweto massacre" as "the start of an extensive mass struggle" and mobilized the South African people of all walks of life to unite more extensively in struggle. In an attempt to stem the waves of the South African people's struggle, the South African authorities had the impudence to impose "a nationwide state of emergency" on the eve of the 10th anniversary of the "Soweto massacre." Almost 1,000 people were arrested on the 1st day after the state of emergency was declared. The perverse actions of the South African authorities have aroused severe condemnation by the world community. The South African authorities wanted to put out the raging fire of the South African people's struggle by means of bayonets and handcuffs. They can never achieve their goal. They are lifting a rock only to drop it on their own feet.

Today's South Africa is neither in the era of the "Sharpeville incident," which took place during the sixties, nor in the age of the "Soweto massacre," which occurred in the seventies. History advances, and the people progress. The martyrs of Soweto did not shed their blood in vain.

While commemorating the 10th anniversary of the "Soweto massacre," the Chinese people extend their deep respect to the heroic South African people. It is our belief that the day will come when the racial regime will be completely overthrown and a new South Africa will be established on racial equality, justice, and freedom.

TRADE UNIONS HONOR SOUTH AFRICA'S BLACK WORKERS

[Text] Beijing, June 14 (XINHUA) -- The All-China Federation of Trade Unions today paid tribute to South Africa's black workers who will commemorate the 10th anniversary of the Soweto uprising on June 16. On behalf of 120 million Chinese workers, the federation's message conveyed support and respect to the Congress of South African Trade Unions, South African Congress of Trade Unions and the Azanian Coordination Center of Trade Unions for their struggles against apartheid.

The federation said the Soweto uprising ten years ago was a turning point in the anti-apartheid movement, and claimed that South Africa's latest state of emergency declaration is a vain hope to suppress the South African people. "It can only arouse ever stronger resistance of the South African people," the message said. "We are sure," the federation added, "adhering to united struggle and supported by workers and people, you will finally win the fight against apartheid and for racial equality."

YOUTH SUPPORT SOUTH AFRICAN PEOPLE'S STRUGGLE

[Text] Beijing, June 13 (XINHUA) -- China's three nationwide youth and students' organizations sent a message today to the youth department of the African National Congress of South Africa (ANCSA), expressing their support to their struggle against apartheid. "We, on behalf of China's 300 million youth and students, wish to convey our support and highest respect to you and through you to the South African youth and people standing at the forefront of the struggle against apartheid," said the message of the three organizations -- the Communist Youth League of China, All-China Youth Federation and All-China Student's Federation.

The message to the Lusaka-based ANCSA youth department was sent on the eve of the South African people's commemoration of the 10th anniversary of the Soweto uprising. On June 16, 1976, the Pretoria regime massacred about 70 black anti-apartheid demonstrators in Soweto, and killed more than 600 blacks in nationwide protests in the following year. This has been strongly condemned by the world public opinion.

The message said the Chinese youth will, as always, resolutely oppose and strongly condemn the apartheid policy of the South African authorities and support the just struggle of the South African people and youth against apartheid and racial discrimination and for basic human rights and social equality. "We Chinese youth will always side with the South African sisters and brothers in fighting racism and colonialism until final victory is won," said the message.

[Text] Beijing, June 16 (XINHUA) -- The Sino-African Friendship Association today issued a declaration denouncing South Africa for re-imposing a state of emergency in the country and expressed firm support to the South African people in their anti-apartheid struggle.

In the declaration issued here on the 10th anniversary of the "Soweto massacre," the association said that 10 years ago today, black students in the black-concentrated Soweto district near Johannesburg took to the streets in protest against the racial discriminative education system. Their action, the declaration noted, met with cruel suppression from police, which resulted in more than 1,000 casualties and the arrest of more than 100 people.

Noting that Pretoria imposed again a "state of emergency" in the country and began tracking down and arresting leaders of anti-apartheid organizations four days ago, the association said that its aim is to stop the South African people from commemorating the "Soweto massacre." "We strongly protest against the South African authorities' new bloody suppression of black people, and firmly support the South African people in commemorating the massacre in whatever forms."

The association also appealed to the international community to exercise greater pressure including comprehensive and effective sanctions on Pretoria, the declaration concluded.

[Text] Beijing, 16 Jun (XINHUA) -- Zhao Ziyang, premier of the State Council, received Comrade Wang Xijue, deputy director and deputy chief pilot of the Beijing Regional Administration of the Civil Aviation Administration of China [CAAC], and his fifth younger brother, Wang Xishou, at the Ziguang Hall in Zhongnanhai this afternoon.

Wang Xijue, who flew a China Airlines Boeing 747 cargo plane to the mainland of the motherland on 3 May in order to settle down here, was recently appointed to the CAAC posts.

While receiving him, Premier Zhao briefed him on the domestic, political, and economic situation. He said to Wang Xijue: "You have been engaged in aviation for many years and have rich experience in this regard. You can make a big contribution to the motherland in civil aviation."

Wang Xijue said: "It has been my long-cherished desire to return to the mainland and participate in the construction of the motherland. During my visit and sightseeing in Beijing over the past month or so, I have seen beautiful rivers and mountains of the motherland as well as vigorously developing agriculture, industry, commerce, and other undertakings. I hope to do my work well in civil aviation."

Present at the receiption were Chen Junsheng, secretary general of the State Council; Hu Yizhou, CAAC director, Yan Zhixiang, CAAC deputy director; and Bai Zhijian, party committee secretary of the CAAC Beijing Regional Administration.

NPC STANDING COMMITTEE 16TH SESSION BEGINS

[Text] Beijing, 16 Jun (XINHUA) -- The 16th Session of the 6th NPC Standing Committee opened at the Great Hall of the People this afternoon.

Chairman Peng Zhen presided over the session.

At the beginning of the session, Wang Hanbin, secretary general of the NPC Standing Committee, explained the session's draft agenda, which was later adopted by the NPC Standing Committee members. According to the agenda, the session will examine the draft PRC land law and the Draft amendment to the regulations government offenses against public order and penalties; hear an explanation of the draft PRC enterprise bankruptcy law and the draft regulations governing diplomatic privileges and Immunity; and examine these two drafts. The session will also hear reports on the state's 1985 final account, 1985 auditing work, and construction and development of China's nuclear power generation.

During the session this afternoon, Song Rufen and Shen Hong, vice chairmen of the NPC Law Committee, reported on the examination of the draft land law and the draft amendment to the regulations government offenses against public order and penalties. Song Rufen said: The Law Committee maintains that China has a large population but limited land, and treasuring and using its land rationally is one of the its basic national policies.

Today, the problem of recklessly seizing and using land is serious, and it is essential to draw up a law to solve the problem and strictly control land use. The committee has proposed certain ammendments to the draft, which is basically practicable. Shen Hong said: To strengthen control over public order, it is essential to amend the regulations governing offenses against public order and penalties, which were drawn up in 1957, in accordance with the new situation and new problems of today's public order. The committee has made certain amendments to the draft, which is basically practicable.

Premier Zhao Ziyang submitted two drafts to the NPC Standing Committee session for examination: The draft PRC enterprise bankruptcy law, and the draft PRC regulations governing diplomatic privileges and immunity. At the State Council's request, Zhang Yaning, vice minister of foreign affairs, explained these two drafts at the session.

Zhang Yanning said: To keep up with the requirements for enlivening the economy and opening to the outside world, it is imperative that the nation draw up a law governing enterprise bankruptcies. This law will provide the legal means to compel enterprises to improve their management and become genuine independent socialist producers and operators who are responsible for their own profits or losses; at the same time, it will provide the legal basis on which liabilities between China and other countries can be settled.

Qian Gichen said: Following the development of China's diplomatic work, the number of foreign diplomatic representative organs and personnel has increased, and direct contacts and exchanges between Chinese departments and local authorities and these organs have greatly increased. As such, the regulations are necessary so that Chinese departments and local authorities can correctly handle issues regarding diplomatic privilege and immunity.

Present at the session were Vice Chairmen of the NPC Standing Committee Chen Pixian, Geng Biao, Peng Chong, Wang Renzhong, Zhu Xuefan, Ngapo Ngawang Jigme, Banqen Erdini Goigyi Gyaincan, Seypidin Aizezi, Zhou Qucheng, Yan Jici, Rong Yiren, Ye Fei, Liao Hansheng, Huang Hua, and Chu Tunan.

AFP CORRESPONDENT VISITS BEIJING PRISON NO 1

[By Pierre-Antoine Donnet]

[Text] Beijing, June 16 (AFP) -- Thieves, rapists, murderers and political prisoners work side-by-side in Beijing Prison No 1, furiously turning out plastic sandals in a bid to meet production quotas.

The 900 inmates incarcerated in Beijing's model prison are participants in a program known as "reform through labor."

Young men, heads shaved, toil bent over out-dated machines for eight hours a day, six days a week, in the prison's noisy workshops. Only "bad elements" and the sick escape the mandatory work.

Their disciplined, and virtually free, labor earned Prison No 1 a net profit of 220,000 yuan (68,750 U.S. dollars) last year, Prison Director Xing Zhonghe told an AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE correspondent that visited the facility recently.

All the prisons's earnings were given to the state, the 58-year-old warden said.

"The goal of the institution is to reform the majority of the inmates and turn them into citizens who will respect the law and prove useful in the construction of socialist China," Mr. Xing said.

"It is through work that the criminals here manage to discard their bourgeois ideas and the ideology of the exploitive classes," he added.

Prison No 1, like most Chinese penal institutions, is dedicated not only to reforming prisoners, but to economic development. It is run along the lines of a state enterprise, complete with production quotas.

Prison No 1 is a model facility among Chinese prisons and labor camps, where an estimated 20 million people are incarcerated, according to Western sources.

The workshops, hallways and sparsely-furnished cells are impeccably clean. The prison is equipped with a theater, a hospital, a library, and educational television channel and classrooms where illiterate inmates are taught to read.

Prison No 1, built in 1911, at the tail end of the Qing Dynasty (1644-1911), is surrounded by four-meter-high (13-foot-high) walls, an electrified barbed wire fence and is patrolled by 520 wardens. Escapes are rare. But there are ways for inmates to get out.

Since country-wide economic reforms were implemented in 1979, Chinese prisons have adopted the system introduced by China's top leader Deng Xiaoping whereby each person is compensated in proportion to his labor. Hard workers are rewarded with bonuses and prisoners can even have their sentences reduced.

"Last year, 250 prisoners had their sentences reduced and 300 were given the title of "model of reform through labor", Mr. Xing said. Prison authorities also encourage prisoners to turn informer, awarding inmates who denounce fellow cellmates with reduced sentences.

In each white-walled 12-inmate cell, the golden rules of the facility are posted. Among them: "Correct your attitude towards work and take part in activities that benefit production."

About 100 of the inmates are students. Thirty are listed as "counter-revolutionaries." Some are common criminals and others have been convicted of "economic crimes." Forty-four per cent are under 25, the youngest 17. Sentences range from a minimum of three years to a suspended death sentence.

Wang Ghuigui, an 18-year-old convicted of murder who had his death sentence suspended, has been in prison No 1 for only a short time. "The cadres take good care of us," he said nervously under the watchful eye of a prison warden. "I hope that reform through labor will allow me to be free one day."

Sources said that between 30,000 and 40,000 prisoners were incarcerated in Beijing's four "reform through labor" and three milder "re-education through labor" institutions.

Prison No 1 is one of the few facilities open to foreign visitors. Information is scarce about China's many labor camps located in the isolated and poorer regions of the country. Many inmates in these labor camps are reportedly confined there for the rest of their lives.

Those sentenced to more than seven years lose residence permits and must stay in these desolate areas as "free workers" -- a practical solution employed by the authorities to accelerate economic development in areas where no Chinese want to go.

Jean Pascalini, the son of French father and Chinese mother, is one of the few people to have emerged from a Chinese labor camp to tell his story. He spent seven years in labor camps, almost dying of hunger on several occasions, before being released in 1964.

In his book, "Prisoner of Mao," he wrote that Prison No 1 was "the best place in all of China for prisoners."

CHEN YONG INTERVIEWED ON HONGQI ARTICLE

[Feature by unidentified ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE reporter: "Interview With Chen Yong"]

[Text] Beijing, 15 June (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- The moment I met Mr Chen Yong [7115 8673), the first impression he gave me was that he looked much younger and more energetic than a "67-year-old scholar Chen Yong" as I had imagined.

Noted for his research on Lu Xun and as a literary critic, this scholar recently published in HONGQI a long article criticizing Liu Zaifu's literary and artistic viewpoint. The article has attracted close attention by people at home and abroad.

The Ins and Outs of the Release of the Article

After being published, the article was viewed from different angles and became a topic of discussion. The strong repercussions caused have gone beyond the academic and literary circles. Chen Yong said: "I am not the first one who writes to criticize Liu Zaifu's literary and artistic viewpoint. The point is that my article is rather pointed in content and is carried by HONGQI, so that some people speculate on the background of the writing of the article.

He gave an account of how the article was written: "The HONGQI literary and art department asked me to write an article more than a year ago, and I promised to do so. The topic was not specified. In October last year, a meeting to discuss the methodology in the study of literature and art was held in Wuhan. I took part in the meeting and talked about my view on Liu Zaifu. I aired my view very briefly at the meeting. That was the starting point where I worked out the substance of my article which was carried by HONGQI. That also was why my article was entitled Questions of Methodology in the Study of Literature and Art. At present, some people at home and elsewhere disregard the substantial questions raised in my article and, instead, try to find out the nonexistent political background of the writing of my article. That is necessary."

Chen Yong had the impression that Liu Zaifu "worked very hard." He said: "The personal relations between us have always been excellent. The publication of the article has nothing to do with personal feelings."

Chen Yong went on: Here, I want to say a few words in fairness to HONGQI. It published my article entirely for the purpose of conducting contention among a hundred schools of thought in a normal way. Taking into consideration that many people at present still are not accustomed to normal criticism and counter-criticism it expressed the hope that my article would carry fewer words characteristic of a judgment and be less polemical in tone and would focus on analyzing the quesions, so that the readers would draw conclusions by themselves. In my opinion, HONGQI was solemn and purdent in its attitude.

Confrontation of Ideas Is Not Contradictory To a Relaxed Environment

The topic of our conversation shifted to the current situation of the contention among a hundred schools of thought in the academic circles. Chen Yong said: "The contention among a hundred schools of thought should be open to everyone. It is fair only when everyone is allowed to express his opinion."

He said: "Not all ideas of literature and art at present conform to Marxism. Some of them are even directed against Marxism. A communist has the duty to express his opinion on this phenomenon. My article may be viewed from different angles and is open to discussion. However, it is inadvisable to seize on some arguments and a few words in my article and accuse me of putting labels on others and using the big stick on others. A critical essay should reflect the realities of the person criticized and reveal the facts. If the person criticized is imbued with metaphysics, then metaphysics should be brought up for discussion because this is the way to tell the facts. This should not be considered as putting labels on others and using the big stick on others. Of course, one should be objective in analyzing a problem and should draw a conclusion through serious, concrete analysis. I think I at least made every subjective effort to do so when I criticized Liu Zaifu."

Chen Yong said: My article may have defects and include mistakes. I therefore welcome substantial counter-criticism.

Chen Yong said: There are contradictions between Marxism and non-Marxism, and some contradictions may even be very acute, so that contention and confrontation are inevitable. It has now been proposed that a relaxed, friendly and harmonious atmosphere be created. I am all for this proposal. However, a relaxed situation gradually emerges only in the course of holding contention and resolving contradictions, otherwise a relaxed, friendly and harmonious atmosphere can only be a wish.

He said: It is not advisable to set the demand for a relaxed, friendly and harmonious atmosphere against the contention and the confrontation of ideas, as if the emergence of criticism will shatter the relaxed, friendly and harmonious situation.

Firmly Believing That Marxism Will Eventually Be Accepted by the Majority of People

Chen Yong is a native of Nanhai county, Guangdong Province. He said jokingly: "My hometown is the birthplace of Kang Youwei, a royalist of the late Qing Dynasty." He spoke putonghua, the common spoken language, with a heavy Guangdong accent. After graduating from a junior teachers training college in Guangdong, Chen Yong went to Yuan to join in the revolution and was engaged in literary and artistic work for a long time. During the initial period after the founding of the PRC, he was a researcher of the Literature Institute. In 1957, he was wrongly classified as a rightist and transferred to work in northwest China until 1978 when he was sent back to Beijing where he served as leader of the cultural group of the policy research center of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee. He is now adviser to the policy research center.

He said: "I have learned from my personal experience that Mao Zedong Thought played a decisive role in the Chinese Revolution and Chinese Literature and art. As far as literature and art were concerned, the situation after the Yanan rectification campaign was greatly different from that before the campaign. The shaping of my thinking was inseparable from Mao Zedong Thought. While I was a victim of some of Mao Zedong's mistakes during his last years, people like me will have their feelings hurt if Mao Zedong's merits and achievements are totally negated."

In conclusion, this critic said: Marxism is now in an ebbtide in the international arena. It appears that Marxisms and other ideologies will go through a long course of coexistence. However, I firmly believe that Marxism will eventually be accepted by the majority of people because it reflects the objective laws.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES 'LOVING CARE' FOR REFORMERS

[Text] Beijing, 16 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Of late, people of various circles in China have paid close attention to a number of reformers who "were dismissed" from their posts. In this connection, RENMIN RIBAO today published some news reports together with a commentator's article, calling for bringing up reformers with loving care and giving them help. A few days ago, the paper printed a news report regarding the dismissal of Song Beifang, director of the Zhengzhou city motor vehicle plant, from his post because he kept up reform; it also cited the case in a commentator's article and loudly appealed to the public to support reformers. Today, the paper once again frontpaged the news that Song Beifang had been reinstated in his former office and had resumed his power over direction of production and administrative management.

RENMIN RIBAO today also carried a dispatch reporting that the Fuzhou City CPC Committee proclaimed that all gratuitous investigations on enterprises which have achieved good results in reform should be stopped immediately, and that in order to protect the enthusiasm of cadres who are bold in carrying out reform but are framed and viciously slandered, all those who lodge a false accusation against reformers and harm them will be punished severely.

Although many reformers who "were dismissed" from their posts have resumed their posts, RENMIN RIBAO called attention to people that some reformers remain in an awkward predicament and controversies over them continue.

On its second page, RENMIN RIBAO today carried a newsletter entitled "a pending controversy," reporting the cause and effect of dimissing Xia Renfan, manager of the Shenyang City tram company. Xia was known as one of the 100 outstanding you entrepreneurs throughout the country. He carried out a series of reforms in the tram company just when the reform of the economic structure was launched in the urban areas. Therefore, he immediately attracted in the urban areas. Therefore, he immediately attacted the attention of various circles and was regarded as a "new star" emerging from Shenyang. He was invited to Beijing to take part in a national forum attended by 14 young activists in reform and was received and encouraged by Wan Li, Hu Qili and other leaders.

It is said that Xia Renfan was dismissed from his post because he "abused power for personal gains" and "lined his own pockets."

In this connection, RENMIN RIBAO today published its commentator's article. After quoting a statement by a CPC senior official as saying that "making mistakes is permissible in the execution of the reform, but not conducting reforms in impermissible," it pointed out that this is a principle that we should stick to in approaching reformers. The article criticized some responsible persons who excessively accommodate themselves to the cadres without regard for work and having no intention of carrying out reform, but regard those who are bold in carrying out reform but have some shortcomings as a thorn in their side.

The commentator's article noted that we should forgive people like Xia Renfan who gain some "profit" in the course of reform. We shold judge them objectively under specific conditions and help them with good intentions and should not attack them for a single fault without considering their other aspects, brand them with unwarranted labels, and exaggerate their mistakes.

In its commentator's article, RENMIN RIBAO once again called for "bringing up reformers with loving care and giving them help," noting that this is the necessity for further promoting the progress of our reform.

LIAOWANG COLUMN ON CONTEMPORARY MILITARY OUTLOOK

HK150636 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 22, 2 Jun 86 pp 46-47

[Text] The 1980's are active years of Army building for major powers in the world.

The U.S. Army's "Air-ground unified action" campaign theory came into being at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas; namely, publication of the 1982 edition of the FM100-5 "Operational Manual," the experiment of the U.S. ground force's new tactics and new troop design conducted at Louisburg, Washington State (for instance, the 9th Infantry Division's high-tech motorized division experiment), formal issuance of the new 86-type heavy division establishment of the U.S. ground force in April 1985, and completion of the third major structural reorganization of the U.S. ground force since World War II to be completed in 1986. The year 1986 has witnessed publication of the 1986 edition of the FM100-5 "Operational Manual." The U.S. ground force is in the process of the large-scale equipment modernization since World War II, and most of the major equipment systems of the ground force will be replaced by a system of greater fighting effectiveness between the 1980's and 1990's.

At the turn of the 1980's, the Soviet Army's campaign theory developed from the "greater-in-depth campaign theory" to the "greater-in-depth 3-dimensional campaign theory," whih is demonstrated in the 1982 edition of the Soviet "Ground Force Operational Regulations" and the 1984 edition of "Tactics." The 27th CPSU National Congress proposed new strategic concepts based on which the Soviet Army is revising its war theory, and further reforming the Army structure, weaponry equipment, and military training.

The West European countries are in an important phase of Army modernization, and they have attached great importance to studying the development and application of new technologies and their effects on operational concepts, weaponry equipment, army structure, and military training. Their operational regulations, Army establishment, and military training are undergoing significant changes.

The 1985 enlarged session of the Central Military Commission realized the changes in the strategic concept of China's Army building. Under the ideological guidance of the new strategic ideas for Army building, the promotion and research of operational theories, weaponry equipment, Army structure, and military training have become the important tasks for the research in the development strategy for defense modernization during the new historical period. When science and technology today is so developed, such tasks can be under research with a scientific approach.

Weaponry equipment, operational regulations, army structure, and military training are the four major essentials in forming the military capabilities of an army. They should be developed harmoniously in a unified way under the guidance of operational theories. In studying the development strategy for weaponry equipment, it is primarily necessary to study the dialectical relations among these four major essentials. In the mutual relations of these four major essentials, operational regulations occupy a dominant place. Regarding the forces that push forward the continuous evolution of operational regulations, the development of technological renovation and enemy operational theories are the most important factors. What guides the long-term development of China's defense science and technology and weaponry equipment is none other than operational theories, which display the unified development of the four essentials.

The dialectical relations among the four major military powers in history.

On the eve of World War I, the French ground force made a mistake in its understanding of the potential of the new artillery technology. At a time when a new weapon was available for use, France failed to induce new operational regulations for it and stuck to the old regulations, which limited the new weapon. During World War I, the French Army went through the greatest difficulties to overcome its mistake in not realizing how to make use of a new weapon, and it was not until 1918 that a correct procedure and regulations were eventually implemented, enabling the maximum application of the artillery weapon.

The focus of Army structural design lies in combining the Army establishment and weaponry equipment in order to exercise new operational regulations, not to develop regulations to suit the old Army structure. A historical example can be found in the balance of strength between the French and German armies prior to World War II. The weaponry equipment of these two countries was on an equal level, and some military commentators believed that France slightly held the upper hand. However, the conversion of forces that could be used into a correct combined force was possible only with the presence of advantageous operational regulations; such a theory functioned only in the course of the German Army breaking the French defense. On the basis of its experiences in World War I as well as studying the army-building experiences of other countries, the German Army used models to field operation experiments at the beginning of the 1930's for developing operational regulations prior to weaponry equipment.

In 1941 when the German fascists imposed mechanized war on the Soviet Union, the Soviet Army was entirely unprepared. The Soviet Army had already seen the need to mechanize its forces in the operational manual of the 1920's and mid-1930's. However, many supporters of the new regulations were compelled to leave the army after the party purge in the 1930's. The mechanization operational regulations were in effect cast aside after the purge. Two mechanized corps were deployed when the Soviet Union launched its offensive at Poland; however, the mechanized troops were demobilized after the offensive campaign. It was only when the German Army displayed its potentialities in the mechanized war against the Soviet Union that the Soviet Army began to renew its efforts in mechanization. The greater in-depth campaign theory of the Soviet Army that later came into being was practically based on the regulations of the 1930's. Such operational concepts as large-scale, mobile, and consecutive operations were originally proposed in the 1930's; for instance, campaign mobile groups. It was only out of consideration for industrialization, ideology, and political problems that the Soviet Army gave up for the time being a concept for foresight.

When World War II began, the U.S. ground force lacked ready tactical air operational regulations. One of the reasons was the preference of the Army Air Force for strategic bombing, while neglecting tactical aviation. Seeking independence, the Army Air Force regarded strategic bombing as an independent mission, so it had only strategic bombing regulations. And those regulations actually served as a kind of command before the Army Air Force acquired the technical ability of applying the regulations. Nor did the ground force come to understand the potentialities of tactical aviation.

When the ground force itself was not quite clear about what it needed, it certainly would not propose the building of an offensive air force. So the United States had no feasible tactical aviation regulations when it entered World War II.

The "air-ground unified action theory" was converted into the operational regulations issued by the U.S. ground force in August 1982. These governed the establishment, equipment, and ways of training the U.S. ground force in the early 1980's. The new regulations need by supported by developing new weaponry equipment and improving the army structure and ways of training. Army building that serves the future must enable close and harmonious development of regulation, establishment, and equipment. In the years following 1982, the U.S. ground force division has been undergoing changes. The old tradition (such as historical experiences and lessons, tactical basis, army leadership procedure) is linked with new changes (for example, the establishment in evolution, and improving capability resulting from weaponry equipment), which proposes a better army structure more suitable to the new operational regulations. In the course of troop modernization, the emergence of such harmonious relations among regulations, establishment, and weaponry equipment was not unique in history. The 5-group structure of the division in the 1950's was actually the first major post-war reorganization of the U.S. Army structure. Since the late 1970's, the U.S. Army had begun to design the plan for the 86-type division establishment based on the 1976 edition of FM100-5 "Operational Manual." In due course, the operational theories underwent changes in revising the "Operational Manual" based on its 1976 edition, and the air-ground unified action campaign theory was developed. The 1982 edition of FM100-5 "Operational Manual" demonstrated such a new operational theory. The designing of the 86-type division structure was combined with the new operational theories. Now, the new FM100-5 "Operational Manual" represents the modernization efforts of the U.S. Army regulations, and it has begun the age of the U.S. Army in combining the capabilities of the Army structure and weaponry equipment to suit the new regulations. In revaluating the effects of such modernization efforts on the division's tactics, it is necessary to understand simultaneously the reinforced new weaponry equipment and the capability in applying the army structure. The cavalry unit and the mobile battalion in the 86-type division may serve to illustrate the relations among regulations, establishment, and weaponry equipment. Establishment of the cavalry unit is derived from the original armored cavalry structure, now transformed into a balanced structure of two cavalry units and two air cavalry units. The equipment of the new cavalry unit makes conspicuous the unit's functions in reconnaissance and monitoring; it is no longer equipped with tanks as a main force. Such changes in the combination of establishment with equipment may reduce fighting effectiveness; however, reconnaissance and monitoring capabilities are reinforced. This is because the entire operational concept of the ground force as well as the air-ground unified action depend on accurate and prompt information regarding enemy forces.

Operational theories decide operational regulations. Operational regulations govern the evolution of weaponry equipment, Army structure, and military training. And technology is the most active factor in pushing forward the development of operational theories. Engels said: "Once technical progress can be, and is, used for military purpose, it will promptly and almost compulsively lead to changes and even a revolution in the way of operation, often against the will of the commander."

Since World War II, nuclear weapons technology has been the science and technology exerting the greatest effort on military strategic theories, and the science and technology to produce the greatest effects will be the directional energy weapon technology.

Robert Jungk wrote in his book "Brighter Than a Thousand Suns": "If by the generals themselves, they would not be able to follow the 'quantum jumps' in the development of military technology despite their greatest efforts. Now they need scientists to stand side by side with them, who will help draw up plans and revise them with every new step made in the progress of technology. In the 1950's, in which the electronic computer, H-bomb, and guided missile marked the age, Von (Noyman) [nuoyiman 6179 0122 2581] served as a marked example of a new weapon inventor turning to strategy scientist. In the 1980's, the representatives of strategy scientists who have advanced the technology of directed energy weapon are (Taylor), (Fletcher), and (Jonas).

New technology is an important propelling force for the birth of the air-ground unified action operational theory. New technology has enabled greater mobility and firepower as well as strengthening the capability of command, control, monitoring, and the capture of target. Belonging to this category are such weapons as the M-1 tank and M-2 and M-3 armored vehicles, as well as advanced helicopters for offensive actions. The new sensors and long-range artillery weapon all affect the modes of operation. The air-ground unified action operational theory has included the capabilities of these new systems into the new operational concept. And the new operational concept has, in turn, proved the need of the comprehensive service for weaponry equipment serving the future. With the transfer of the new technology of "strategic defense" to regular warfare, the emergence of directional, mobile microwave weaponry of high energy, as well as the improvement of the capability of sensors, the new edition of "operational manual" will include them all in the Army structure, and they will promote the evolution of the 200 edition of the "Operational Manual."

The dialectical relations among weaponry equipment, operational regulations, Army structure, and military training is precisely the object of research in the engineering of the military system. Comrade Qian Xuesheng made a profound explanation in his speech "Military System Engineering" delivered to leading members of the headquarters organs at a study meeting on 14 July 1979.

RENMIN RIBAO URGES URBAN-RURAL COOPERATION

[Commentator's article: "Urban-Rural Cooperation and Structural Reform Should Promote Each Other"]

[Text] The first level economic cooperation network -- namely the Beijing-Tianjin-Tangshan coordination zone -- enumerated in the Seventh 5-Year Plan has eliminated the barriers erected between the three areas and promoted urban-rural cooperation, thus enhancing the radiation of cities and accelerating the development of rural areas. Facts have proved that urban and rural cooperation and integration conform to the needs of the development of the socialist commodity economy.

Because the old system separated cities from countryside for a long time, the advantages of urban and rural areas were not brought into full play.

Sometimes their advantages were even offset by each other. Take the Beijing-Tianjin-Tangshan zone for example. The two large cities, Beijing and Tianjin, had technological and financial superiority, while the surrounding rural areas had abundant raw materials and energy for industrial production. As the three areas were separated from each other under the old system and the circulation system was characterized by "allocation" according to administrative regions, they manufacturered the same products and failed to give full play to the role of qualified personnel, capital, and natural resources. Only by restructuring the old system, integrating the urban and rural areas, and combining science and technology with the labor force can we revitalize both the urban and rural economies.

Structural reform promotes urban-rural cooperation and vice versa. At present, some comrades fear and are not used to the elimination of the old planning, financial, distribution, and circulation systems by urban-rural cooperation. Consequently, when there is a short supply of vegetables in urban areas, they are willing to subsidize the urban inhabitants and maintain the vegetable prices by every means rather than open the city gates to rural peasants. Some rural enterprises lack technology and their results are poor, though they have made huge investments. Yet, they are not willing to make use of their advantages in natural resources and manpower to help the advanced urban enterprises. The lack of courage of certain leading comrades in breaking with the old system is the main reason for the slow progress of urban-rural cooperation in certain localities.

It is a fine thing that urban-rural cooperation has exposed the defects in the current system and in the rules and regulations in force that hinder the progress of the productive forces. The change from the old to a new system is actually a process of laying bare the contradictions and resolving them. Instead of sticking to the old system, we should carry out reform vigorously, encourage urban-rural cooperation in policies, and protect the cooperation by law.

The principles and policies formulated at the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee for rural reform have created miracles in the rural economy. These policies are still producing a great impact. However, we should be aware that the contradiction between urban and rural reforms is becoming more evident with the development of the rural commodity production toward socialization and modernization. It has become the trend of the development of the socialist commodity production to reform the management, circulation, and pricing systems in urban areas; establish a unified socialist market for both urban and rural areas; and enhance the radiation and attraction of the cities. Only by making the best use of the situation to develop urban-rural cooperation can we eliminate the barriers erected between departments and regions, accelerate urban and rural reforms, and gradually solve the problems of irrational organizational structure and system within enterprises and the irrational production setup in the rural areas.

CENTRAL ORGANS' CIRCULAR ON COLLEGE ENROLLMENT

[Text] Beijing, 13 Jun (XINHUA) -- The Discipline Inspection Commission of the CPC Central Committee and the State Education Commission recently issued a circular on further rectification of unhealthy trends in student enrollment by various types of institutions of higher learning.

The circular calls on all provincial, autonomous regional, and municipal student enrollment committees to set up discipline inspection teams to conscientiously investigate and deal with unhealthy trends in student enrollment, such as practicing favoritism, engaging in fraudulent practices, and "entering by the back door." Party discipline inspection departments at all levels should send personnel to participate directly in the investigation and handling of serious violations of law and discipline regarding student enrollment.

The circular says: Thanks to the close attention of party committees and governments at various levels and the conscientious implementation of party and government policies and the observance of law and discipline by student-enrollment personnel, the atmosphere in entrance examinations for institutions of higher learning has been basically good in recent years. Thus, student-enrollment personnel enjoy prestige among the people to a certain extent. It must be noted, however, that there are some unhealthy trends in certain localities and units concerning entrance examinations for institutions of higher learning. Because some localities are negligent of their duties in holding unified college entrance examinations, examinees often engage in fraudulent practices; in some individual localities, people even participate in such fraudulent practices in a planned, organized, and collective way. Cadres and teachers in some middle schools and physical examiners in some hospitals resort to deception in reporting on the evaluation of examinees' political ideology and moral character or on the results of their physical examinations. Some examinees' parents and some adult examinees give dinners or gifts in an attempt to accomplish their goal through pull. Some student-enrollment personnel attend such dinners and accept such gifts. Some localities and units decide without authorization to increase the scope and percentage of students admitted to institutions of higher learning through recommendation and without going through an entrance examination. Some colleges and universities try by hook or by crook to undermine others and attact students with studying abroad, travel and sightseeing, scholarships, and other inappropriate means. In the name of working for the well-being of their workers and staff members, some colleges and universities concoct various pretexts; they enroll students with lower grades whom other units ask them to train, or run "dependents classes," thus affecting the state enrollment plan.

The circular points out: Although unhealthy trends in student enrollment are found in individual cases, they hinder the normal progress of student enrollment, interfere with the reform of the enrollment system, corrupt cadres and young people, damage the image of the party among the masses of people, and corrupt party style and the standards of social conduct. If such unhealthy trends are allowed to spread unchecked, the quality of higher education can hardly be ensured and some effective and vigorous reform measures will be futile.

To rectify unhealthy trends in student enrollment by various types of institutions of higher learning, consolidate the achievements in the reform of the enrollment system, and select outstanding new students in a better way, the circular issued by the Central Discipline Inspection Commission and the State Education Commission hereby stipulates:

Students who apply for admission to accredited instructions of higher learning must take part in a unified entrance examination.

The institution must be strict and careful in organizing the examination. A student enrollment committee at a higher level should organize inspection teams to inspect discipline in the examination halls. It is necessary to investigate and deal seriously with those who reveal examination questions and those who practice fraud in the examination hall, to find out who are to blame for such fraud, and, according to the seriousness of their individual cases punish them according to party or government discipline or law.

The work in screening examinees' qualifications, evaluating their political ideology and moral character, and giving the physical examinations must be done seriously. Relevant units should report on examinees' actual conditions, and those who hide facts or resort to deception in their reports should be investigated for their responsibilities.

Students should be enrolled in strict accordance with relevant regulations laid down by the State Education Commission. All provincial, autonomous regional, and municipal student enrollment committees should set up discipline inspection teams to supervise and inspect the implementation of enrollment policy and the enforcement of discipline by personnel of their committees as well as by admissions personnel of various institutions of higher learning. Unhealthy trends, such as practicing favoritism and fraud and "entering by the back door," must be investigated.

Institutions of higher learning in various localities should conscientiously observe the enrollment regulations laid down by the State Education Commission. Fairly important reform measures must be reported to the State Education Commission for approval before putting them into practice. Enrollment plans of institutions of higher learning should not be changed in principle once they are examined and approved by the State Education Commission. Schools that are not included in enrollment plans must not enroll students without authorization.

It is necessary to carry out education in policy, party, and government discipline, and the legal system among large numbers of examinees, cadres, and members of the masses, especially cadres who are party members and student-enrollment personnel, in order to raise their consciousness in abiding by the law and discipline. Cadres who are exemplary in observing and upholding party discipline and state law should be commended; violations of the law and discipline and cases of practicing favoritism and fraud should be dealt with sternly; and cadres and members of the masses who expose unhealthy trends should be supported and protected.

[Text] Beijing, 16 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- China's post and telecommunications departments have or will set up microwave telecommunications and nine other enterprise groups in order to develop lateral economic ties among enterprises and to increase market competitiveness.

Several enterprise groups, namely , microwave telecommunications, telephone exchange, pinboard [cha jie jian 2252 2234 0115], and television communications, have been officially set up.

The others, namely, optical fiber digital telecommunications, cable transmission, superhigh-frequency telecommunications, rural telephone communications, post and telecommunications machinery, and office automation, will be officially set up at the end of this month.

Since their formation, the microwave telecommunications and other enterprise groups have submitted 11 tenders for international telecommunications projects and won four of them.

The person said: The microwave telecommunications group grows out of the microwave telecommunications association consisting of about 10 enterprises. In recent years, the group's microwave telecommunications equipment output has ranked first in China, averaging over 90 percent of the domestic market. It has built more than 40,000 km of microwave circuits. Of this total, 15,000 km of microwave circuits are used by the post and telecommunications departments, 8,500 km by the water and electricity departments, 3,000 km by the petroleom departments, and 23,000 km by the radio and television departments.

Moreover, the group has undertaken to build or to supply equipment to 130-plus construction projects, which account for some 90 percent of the microwave construction projects built throughout the country in the same period. They include large telecommunications networks for the Daqing, North China, and Changqing oilfields, and the power control network from Shanghai to the Wuxi Jiang.

OFFICIAL DISCUSSES THREE GORGES PROJECT

[By staff reporter Xu Yuanchao]

[Text] Yichang, Hubei -- The State Council has set up a new office to study economic development and possible resettlement of populations in the Three Gorges area.

The group that had been in charge of preparing for a possible new Three Gorges Province has been disbanded, an official of the Three Gorges Development Corporation told CHINA DAILY.

The official, who asked not to be identified, disclosed that the decision was made after Premier Zhao Ziyang's recent inspection of the site of the proposed Three Gorges Dam at Sandouping near Yichang.

The new office will co-ordinate development plans and economic activities in areas of both Hubei and Sichuan provinces, and resettlement of people in the course of building a colossal flood control and hydropower dam on the Yangtze River.

According to the corporation, the first design calls for a dam 175 metres high and 2,339 metres long, with hydropower capacity of 13,000 megawatts. It would displace an estimated 330,000 people.

Whether China will begin construction of the dam in the current five-year period "is not known," the official said. "But preparations will probably begin in the later years of the plan."

In Bonn, where he is part of party General Secretary Hu Yaobang's visiting delegation, Vice-Premier Li Peng denied that China will contract the Three Gorges project to foreign companies.

During a meeting with Chinese Embassy staffs and Overseas Chinese, he commented, "It has been said that the project will be contracted to foreign companies. I can tell you, there will be no such a thing. But we will seek their technical advice."

The Gezhouba Hydropower Engineering Bureau (GHEB) had expected that construction of the Three Gorges Dam would start when the Gezhouba Dam at Yichang, about 40 kilometres downstream, is completed in 1988.

GHEB is utilizing 50,000 workers and technical personnel, about 20 percent of the entire engineering staff in the Ministry of Water Resources and Electric Power. It fixed assets are valued at about 600 million yuan.

He said that GHEB expects to construct a hydropower station at Geheyan, a 151-metre high dam on the first tributary of the Yangtze River, after the Three Gorges project.

The 1,200-megawatt station, about 30 kilometres from the Jingjiang embankment, will not only produce 3 billion kilowatt hours of electricity a year, but also reduce flood threats to the embankment.

CENTRAL DISCIPLINE COMMISSION HOLDS FORUM

[Text] Jinan, 16 Jun (XINHUA) -- The Central Discipline Inspection Commission held a forum in Yantai, Shandong, from 10 to 16 June on discipline inspection work in the east China region and the central-south region. The participants included responsible persons of provincial, municipal, and autonomous regional discipline inspection commissions of the east China and the central-south regions, and responsible persons of party committees and discipline inspection organizations of the departments concerned in these regions. At the meeting, they exchanged information and experiences and discussed the current work in connection with efforts to improve party style.

The participants held: Since the Central Secretariat held the 8,000-strong meeting, remarkable achievements have been made in improving party style, and party style has indeed taken a turn for the better in the east China and the central-south regions. The principal responsible persons of many provinces, municipalities, and autonomous regions are personally taking part in the work to improve party style. Some have held special meertings of party committee standing committees to listen to briefings on major cases. They have cracked down on a number of major and important cases, educated party members in party spirit by citing typical examples, and corrected unhealthy practices in some trades and professions.

He said that the situation in various localities shows that they have achieved remarkable results in improving party style and have basically created a new situation in which the whole party is mobilized to improve party style. He said: As the work of improving party style will remain arduous in the days to come, we should never slacken our efforts. We should adhere to a firm and lasting principle and work hard for 2 years to achieve a fundamental turn for the better in party style.

Han Tianshi emphasized: In order to achieve a fundamental turn for the better in party style, we should continue to investigate and deal with major and important cases. Leading cadres and leading organs at all levels should set good examples by paying attention to investigating and dealing with problems in their own organizations. While investigating economic cases, we should also pay attention to other cases. In particular, we should attach importance to investigating and handling cases of bureaucracy involving serious dereliction of duty and cases of serious violation of personnel discipline. He said: To correct unhealthy practices of some trades and professions will help improve party style. Efforts to correct such unhealthy practices, if made in conjunction with efforts to reform the economic structure and improve enterprise management, will effectively overcome bureaucracy and under-the-table relationships. Therefore, party committees and discipline inspection organizations at all levels should make great efforts to correct unhealthy practices in all trades and professions step by step according to plan and in consideration of the characteristics of these trades and professions.

Han Tianshi called on all local discipline inspection organizations and their cadres to seriously sum up practical experience; study the party's principles and policies, particularly the policies concerning economic reform; learn more from discipline inspection work; further enhance political understanding and working ability; and set good examples in improving party style.

Senior Communist Party official Hao Jianxiu said during a trip to Shashi Garden City on the Yangtze River in Hubei Province that steady rises in living standards were boosting demand for such products.

A growing number of people wanted to decorate their homes with carpets, curtains, tablecloths and attractive bed linen.

She called on textile factories to increase variety and produce more elegant household fabrics with distinctive Chinese designs.

NATIONAL FILM CONFERENCE CONCLUDES IN BEIJING

[By reporter Li Derun]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 13 Jun (XINHUA) -- At the recently concluded national conference on feature films production, Ai Zhisheng, minister of radio, film, and television, stressed that the quality of intellectual products is especially important because they affect the masses over extended periods of time. The central task of movie departments now and in the future is to concentrate on improving the quality of films while stabilizing the number to be produced in order to use motion pictures more effectively in promoting socialist spiritual civilization.

This is the first national conference on the production of feature films convened by the Film Bureau following the merger of the film and television departments. Film workers and leadership from various studios and comrades of relevant departments, more than 100 in all, studied the guidelines of the relevant instructions from the central authorities, summed up experience, learned where they lagged behind, and earnestly practiced criticism and self-criticism in a unified and relaxed atmosphere. They also compared notes on further straightening out the guiding principles on creativity and making the film industry flourish.

Discussing the films their colleagues made, the representatives earnestly summed up last year's movie production situation. They unanimously held that notable achievements were made in 1985, but some problems were still prominent. They said that a number of movies acclaimed by the masses which reflected the times, eulogized the four modernizations, and depicted reforms and which were rather good both ideologically and artistically emerged in the past year, playing a positive role in promoting socialist spiritual civilization. At the same time, however, there were many shoddily made productions in poor taste and vulgar in content. The creativity ideology reflected needed correcting and the relations between social effects and economic benefits were not handled correctly. Many comrades pointed out that the purpose of art lies in its social effects. Film creativity and production must adhere to social effects as the supreme standard, uphold the orientation that art serves the people and socialism, and produce good economic benefits by paying special attention to social effects.

During the discussions, some comrades expressed their ardent expectations for movie reviewing. They held that movie critiques play an important role in straightening out guiding ideology and bringing about flourishing movie creativity. There has been some bias in the reviews in recent years. Some critics review movies on the basis of their individual artistic tastes instead of the party's principles and policies. Some critics only recognize productions of certain forms, styles, and patterns as "original" or "explorative," while refusing to recognize other forms, styles, and patterns; they are using a fixed criterion to judge the immense variety of art works. Some other critics ignore ideological content while elevating the "exploration" or "originality" of forms to an inappropriate extent. We must stress the unity between healthy ideological content and perfect artistic forms. It is hoped that movie critics will play an exemplary role in implementing the principle of art serving the people and socialism as well as the "double hundred" policy.

At the meeting, Ai Zhisheng, Ding Qiao, Shi Fangyu, and other leaders of relevant departments and artists had conversations as equals. They expressed their views about straightening out guiding principles governing creativity and improving movie quality.

CHEN MUHUA ADDRESSES BEIJING BANKING MEETING

[By reporter Huang Wei]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 12 Jun (XINHUA) -- According to a meeting held this afternoon to discuss computerizing banking in Beijing, branches there have started to hook up their operations with computers, and during the next 5 years all banks in Beijing will be computerized to handle deposits and withdrawals.

Chen Muhua, state councillor and president of the People's Bank of China, attended and addressed today's meeting. She said: The development of economic reform has led to new requirements for banking service. As an economic regulator, our banks now play a more important role in raising capital and extending credit. However, our banking operation today is simply too backward. Since it is still manually operated, depositing or withdrawing money is time-consuming for the people. This is why our banks cannot efficiently absorb society's idle capital, why they are not well informed, and why their operation of allocating capital and extending credit has been affected. Such being the case, an urgent task of our banking reform is to reform and computerize the banking operation. It is therefore highly significant for Beijing to work with the telecommunications, power, and urban planning departments to install a computer network hookup to banking operations. This will set an example for other parts of the country.

During the next 5 years, Beijing's business banks will set up three large computer centers in the urban areas to connect all banking facilities in the city. All savings accounts will then be handled by computers. In remote suburbs, smaller computers will be installed in some localities to link up with the large computerized system in the city. While these small networks will handle their business independently, they can exchange information with the large centers directly. Furthermore, automatic terminals will be installed in major commercial districts to handle deposits and withdrawals; and automatic terminals will be installed in large department stores to transfer accounts, thus providing modernized banking service to the people in the capital.

The meeting today urged all relevant departments to work in close coordination with one another so that the project can be completed on schedule. Chen Xitong, Chen Yuan, Liu Hongru, Zhu Tiangu, and leading members of departments concerned attended today's meeting.

WORKER MONITORING OF COMMODITY PRICES URGED

[Excerpts] Beijing, 15 Jun (XINHUA) -- The General Office of the CPC Central Committee and the General Office of the State Council recently distributed the "Report on Further Strengthening Price Monitoring by Workers" submitted by the All China Federation of Trade Unions and the State Commodity Prices Administration.

They also notified the party committees and people's governments at all levels and various departments concerned to pay full attention to and support the work done by workers in monitoring commodity prices in order to protect the just interests of consumers and smoothly reform the economic structure.

The report submitted by the All China Federation of Trade Unions and the State Commodity Prices Administration said: With gradual development of the economic structural reform in the cities in recent years, the work of price monitoring by workers has been strengthened with each passing day. As of the end of February this year, some 4,000 price monitoring stations (or groups) with over 28,000 price monitors have been set up in more than 260 cities in 22 provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities directly under the central government. They have actively monitored commodity prices, continuously expanded their activities, explored new ways to arouse the masses to supervise and participate in managing the economic affairs of the state, and played an active role in helping the government stabilize commodity prices on the market, strike at the unhealthy trends of unruly price increases, and smoothly bring about price reform. Over the past few years, more than 500,000 violations of state laws and party discipline have been discovered and handled in various localities, and fines totalling more than 6 million yuan handed over to the state.

The "report" suggested that party committees and governments at all levels attach great importance to and strengthen the work of monitoring commodity prices by workers, educate the broad masses of cadres to realize the significance of doing such work, and consciously make full use of and give full play to the role of the masses in monitoring commodity prices in order to further develop such work.

The report pointed out that the departments of commodity price control, industrial and commercial administration, metrology, public security, and financial affairs, as well as trade unions, must closely coordinate with each other in vigorously supporting workers' monitoring of commodity prices. The departments concerned must earnestly study and handle the situation reported by those organizations set up for monitoring commodity prices and cherish their views.

CENTER TO AID JOINT VENTURES ESTABLISHED

[Text] Beijing, June 15 (XINHUA) -- The State Economic Commission has set up a foreign cooperation coordination center to help Sino-foreign joint ventures solve problems they have met, said Zhu Rongji, vice-minister of the State Economic Commission.

He assured representatives of Sino-foreign joint ventures at a five-day forum which ended here Sunday that with the support of the Chinese Government and concerted efforts by Chinese and foreign partners, the problems they have run into can be properly resolved.

While most of the more than 2,300 Sino-foreign joint ventures are profitable, he said, some have met with some troubles wuch as autonomy in operations, investment conditions, balance in foreign exchange payments and coordination in management.

He attributed the causes of the problems to China's inexperience, insufficient preparations, for the setting up of joint ventures, not giving enough consideration to balance of foreign exchange and the old management methods.

But as these joint ventures are pioneers, they have to bear some risks, he said. China is trustworthy and is trying everything it can to resolve these problems.

He told the forum that China's imbalance in foreign trade has been greatly improved thanks to the control measures adopted since last year and this will help expand both home and foreign markets for Sino-foreign joint ventures, which should also readjust their development strategy in light of the actual market trend in China.

He disclosed that China was working out implementation rules for the joint venture foreign exchange balance regulations promulgated in January this year and adopted further measures to help joint ventures to achieve foreign exchange balance, including mutual help between joint ventures and overall compensation in exports by joint ventures.

He hoped that foreign partners of joint ventures should also perform their duties in solving the problem in the balance of foreign exchange payments.

He promised to give full autonomy in the operations of the joint ventures, especially with regard to the use of personnel.

He called on all joint ventures to cooperate in resolving the problems so as to run the first batch of Sino-foreign joint ventures successfully.

The Sino-foreign joint venture forum was organized by the Chinese Industrial Economics Society and the industrial economics research institute of the Chinese Academy of Sciences. Participating in the forum were 12 representatives of foreign partners and 27 Chinese partners from 24 Sino-foreign joint ventures now in operation.

NATIONAL PUBLIC SECURITY MEETING ENDS 14 JUN

[By reporters Yang Fubao and Zhou Lixian]

[Text] Tianjin, 14 Jun (XINHUA) -- A national meeting to discuss grass-roots political work on the public security front, which concluded today in Tianjin, pointed out: Public security organs at all levels should, by means of political work, give the broad masses of policemen an education in ideals and discipline so that they will foster a good work style and become defenders and builders of our socialist motherland.

At this meeting, which opened on 9 June, discussions focused on the question of strengthening and improving political work and building a spiritual civilization at the grassroots level. According to the opinions expressed at the meeting public security organs at various levels during the last 2 years have seriously carried out the principle of managing police work strictly and achieved gratifying results in strengthening grassroots political and ideological work. Thirty units in various localities won orders of collective merits, first class.

Some 3,300 units had the honor to win orders of merits, second or third class. In addition, 31 policemen were given the honorable title of first- or second-grade heroic models of the nation's public security front, while some 10,600 policemen were honorably awarded the orders of merits, first, second, or third class. Public security organs have remarkably improved their party style and their method of police work. The quality of policemen has also been raised to a certain extent.

Addressing the meeting today, Minister of Public Security Ruan Chongwu expressed the hope that all localities would pay attention to accumulating and summing up experience and strive to improve their work methods so as to make their ideological and political work not only down-to-earth but also lively and dynamical. He said: While doing a good job of ideological education, we should control the words and deeds of policemen by means of strict and reasonable regulations, rules, organizational measures, and discipline so that they will form a habit of observing discipline and abiding by the law. We should see to it that orders and prohibitions are strictly enforced. This is the only way to make the members of our police contingent act in concert and to give full play to their capabilities. He also urged public security departments in all localities to do everything possible to enhance the policemen's viewpoint based on the masses and educate them to forge close ties with the people and follow the mass line in doing their work so that the police-people relationship will be as close as flesh and blood, fish and water, and can be likened to milk well blended with water. They should be alert in making observations and investigations and keep to the current trend of public security work so that they will be able to take the initiative in doing this work.

JIANGSU FIGHTS DROUGHT, EXPECTS BUMPER HARVEST

[Text] Nanjing, June 14 (XINHUA) -- Jiangsu, China's major grain-producing province, is expecting a bumper summer harvest thanks to timely spending on measures to combat a recent drought, said a provincial official. Wheat harvesting has already started, and the yield is expected to be higher than last year.

Ling Qihong, vice-governor of the province, said a severe drought had hit 670,000 hectares of Jiangsu's summer crops, about a quarter of the province's total. However, local authorities had invested more than 500 million yuan in agriculture since the beginning of the year -- a 17.8 percent increase over the same period last year -- and this had helped to limit the effects of the drought.

Jiangsu is one of the many provinces that have put more investment in agriculture following calls from the central authorities.

Speaking at the National People's Congress earlier this year, Premier Zhao Ziyang described the continued flourishing of agriculture, the foundation of China's national economy, as "one of the important strategies in the country's modernization program." He drew attention to the fact that in some localities, arable land had been arbitrarily used for other purposes and some peasants have become less enthusiastic about grain production. The premier said that both the central and local governments should steadily increase material input for agricultural production. The local authorities, in particular, should aid the development of agriculture and other undertakings in the rural areas with large amounts of financial resources.

Jiangsu's agricultural output value was higher than any other part of China in the past two years, and despite a drop of 6.8 percent in grain output, it still produced 8.2 percent of the country's total grain harvest.,

Vice-Governor Ling said the production drop to 31 million tons last year resulted from less agricultural investment than in 1984, adverse weather and a reduction in the acreage planted with grain. "We have now become more aware of the importance of agricultural investment," he said. More investment in agriculture, he said, comes from the government, rural collective organizations and peasants themselves.

Jiangsu Province now planned to raise 400 to 500 million yuan as "agricultural development fund" -- from sources such as rural factories' profits, taxes paid by rural businesses run by individuals and bank loans -- in each of the next five years to invest in farming.

A recent session of the sixth provincial People's Congress of Jiangsu decided that agricultural capital construction investment from the provincial government should be boosted until it accounted for a quarter of all capital spending. This should be achieved in five years at the latest. Jiangsu's agricultural capital spending was only 13.6 percent of last year's total, said the vice-governor.

JIANGXI LEADERS MEET CPPCC INSPECTION GROUP

OW111031 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 10 Jun 86

[Text] According to our reporter Cheng Pu, leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial people's government, and the provincial CPPCC Committee, including Liu Fangren, Ni Xiance, Jiang Zhuping, and Wu Ping, held a forum yesterday afternoon in the Jiangxi Guesthouse with all comrades of a CPPCC national committee inspection group who had returned to Nanchang after conducting inspections in the old revolutionary base area of our province. The topic discussed at the forum was how to accelerate the construction of these areas.

Chen Yu, member of the Standing Committee of the CPPCC National Committee and head of the inspection group, said: Our inspection trip to the old revolutionary base areas covered some 2,000 kilometers. We inspected 12 cities and counties and more than 20 townships and visited 54 peasant families. We all feel the trip was worthwhile. It was very fruitful in that it increased our knowledge and understanding about those areas. We have come to understand the enthusiasm of the people in those areas for building socialism and their hardworking and enterprising spirit.

From the inspection we have been given to understand that the rural reform since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee has accelerated economic development in the old revolutionary base areas. In some places where the people's average per capita income has reached a high rate, the increase is as high as over 100 percent. Even in those places where average per capita income is not so high, it has still risen more than 70 percent. Crop cultivation has developed relatively quickly. The work of exploiting mountain resources, harnessing rivers, and afforestation has been noticed by the organizations concerned at various levels.

In particular, since the work conference on old revolutionary base areas in Jiangxi Province was held last year, down-to-earth efforts have been made to grasp the work of assistance to the poor and economic construction in those areas, resulting in a fairly good situation. From what we have learned on this inspection trip, the situation this year will be better than in any previous year. When conducting the inspection, however, we noted the fact that the people in old revolutionary base areas are still very poor, and some problems concerning the construction of those areas exist.

As for the work of assisting the poor, although many counties have achieved good results by sending large numbers of cadres to the grass-roots level to help the poor, it is still necessary to stop merely assisting them in meeting material requirements while overlooking the need to devise ways and means for them to solve problems, provide them with necessary technologies, improve their service work in support of production, and raise their own capabilities to discard poverty and become self-sufficient. To help the poor, it is imperative to devise ways and means for poor households to escape poverty and turn the favorable condition of rich natural resources into a favorable condition for developing commodity production. This is the only way to do down-to-earth work and avoid perfunctoriness in helping the poor.

Constructive opinions and suggestions on crop cultivation, animal husbandry, transport, energy resources, development of the commodity economy, the flow of goods, diversified operations, village and town enterprises, and the education system in the old revolutionary base areas were made at the forum by Sun Zuobin, member of the CPPCC National Committee Standing Committee; Liu Huafeng, secretary of the party organs committee under the CPC Central Committee and deputy head of the inspection group; Song Demin, deputy secretary-general of the CPPCC National Committee and another deputy head of the inspection group; as well as (Shu Qiang), Li Yuan, and She Shiguang, members of the CPPCC National Committee.

At the forum, Ni Xiance said: Members of the inspection group have given many good suggestions on the work of the old revolutionary base areas in our province. Such suggestions are a great help to our government's work. We wish to thank them.

Li Fangren said: The inspection group has done thorough work and noted the problems accurately when conducting inspections in our province. Its suggestions are right to the point, and the measures proposed are good. This is conducive to improving our work. I welcome you to come again next year and to examine our work.

Also attending the forum were Vice Chairman of the Provincial CPPCC Committee Yang Yongfeng, Lu Xiaopeng, Shen Hanqing, Liu Jianhua, Lu Liang, Li Shanyuan, Wu Yongle, Wu Tiyu, Jin Liqiang, and Wu Yunzhong.

SHANGHAI BEGINS WORK ON MASSIVE GASWORKS PROJECTS

[Special to CHINA DAILY by Wu Xinhai]

[Text] Shanghai -- Most families in Shanghai will say goodbye to their coal cooking stoves after completion of one of the country's key construction projects, the Pudong Gasworks.

The gasworks, east of the Huangpu River, will be the biggest of their kind in China. The first section of the works are to be completed next year, at which time they will be able to produce one million cubic metres of gas per day, Cai Erhai, head of the preparation department of the project, said.

The gasworks were designed by Chinese experts and will use China-made equipment. More than 100 building's have already been erected on the 47-hectare site. A 200-kilometre network of pipes will deliver gas to homes, Cai said. "We are striving for partial production of gas by the end of this year," he added.

The first phase of the project is backed by an investment of 240 million yuan ($80 million) from national and local governments. Construction continues day and night. One building team completed the main framework of a gas furnace six months ahead of schedule, though construction was delayed four times for various reasons.

Work on the gas main under the Huangpu River has also started.

Though the Shanghai city area has used gas for 120 years, 800,000 families (one half the population) still rely on coal stoves for cooking, which partly explains the city's serious air pollution.

SHANGHAI: HONGQIAO DEVELOPMENT ZONE ACTIVITIES

["Shanghai Development Zone Gets First Joint Venture" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Shanghai, June 9 (XINHUA) -- Construction of a Shanghai-Hong Kong joint venture started last Saturday in the Hongqiao Development Zone, Shanghai, according to local officials. The construction marks the basic completion of infrastructure facilities for the new zone, which is being developed by a Shanghai Corporation, the Shanghai branch of the Bank of China and a Hong Kong-Macao corporation.

The Shanghai municipal government decided to build the zone in 1982 to attract foreign capital. The zone sits between the city proper and Hongqiao International Airport, covering 66 hectares. Since then, more than 500 homes and 20 factories have been moved out of the zone, while roads, water, gas and sewage pipes, and electricity and telecommunications lines have been installed. Foreign investors have already poured 200 million U.S. dollars into the new zone, local officials noted.

The joint venture under construction is the Yangtze Hotel, with a floor space of 50,000 square meters and covering 1.6 hectares. The 36-story hotel has 600 rooms, banquet halls, Chinese and Western restaurants, bars, cafes, a shopping center, swimming pools, gymnasiums and dance halls.

Other buildings to be started later this year include a Sino-Japanese five-star hotel, the Shanghai international trade center and an office building undertaken by a U.S. corporation. Local officials told XINHUA that 21 office buildings, apartment buildings and hotels, as well as 15 consulates will eventually be erected in the Hongqiao zone.

SHANGHAI SEEKS FOREIGN LOANS FOR CONSTRUCTION

[Text] Shanghai, June 12 (XINHUA) -- The city of Shanghai wants to borrow billions of U.S. dollars to pay for construction of civic and manufacturing facilities over the next five years, a local official said today. The official told XINHUA Shanghai would seek commercial and government loans, loans from the World Bank and revenue from new city banks.

Except for municipal bonds sold earlier this year in Japan, all of Shanghai's capital from abroad since at least 1980 has come in the form of investment by overseas businesses.

Whatever Shanghai can borrow over the next five years will be used to build such projects as thermal power stations, gas and water works, mass transit and highway facilities, mail and telecommunications offices and sewage plants, the official said.

According to the city's plans, other loans will help build factories producing export commodities or previously imported commodities for the domestic market.

So far, Shanghai has established 178 ventures with foreigners involving 1.3 billion U.S. dollars of foreign funds.

HENAN GOVERNOR INTERVIEWED ON RURAL REFORMS

HK130831 Beijing BAN YUE TAN in Chinese No 10, 25 May 86 pp 18-21

[Article by reporter Liu Yiqing: "Discussing Several Questions Concerning Rural Reforms -- an Interview With Henan Provincial Governor He Zhukang"]

[Text] The Seventh 5-Year Plan covers a crucial period in which China will be carrying out reform in the economic structure in an all-round way. How should we deal properly with the problems emerging in the execution of rural reforms in order to expedite them? This reporter interviewed He Zhukang, governor of Henan Province concerning this question.

He Zhukang, 54, is in his prime. Before he assumed the office of governor of Henan Province, he had engaged in planning and management work for a long time. Thus he had acquired the habit of analyzing problems in a comprehensive way. When the interview began, this reporter put it bluntly and said: Some people say that unhealthy tendencies have resulted from the current economic reform. May I have your views on the relationship between reform and rectification of the party's work style.

"Fundamentally speaking, rectification of the party's work style and reform are identical and the two have dialectical unity. Through rectification of the party's work style, we will be able to create a favorable environment for reform and ensure the healthy execution of the reform measures; and through reform, we will be able to bring about an improvement in party conduct." After saying this He Zhukang cited the following example.

Before initiating reform in the rural areas of Henan Province, every village and production group had an accountant. Some grass-roots cadres embezzled public funds to give lavish dinners and presents, and appropriated collective property, but accountants under these cadres could do nothing about them, and some of them even went along with them in their evil deeds. Earlier this year, Xiayi County reformed its financial and accounting system by calling in accountants from all villages and production groups and establishing accounting service companies in all townships. These companies work for various forms of economic associations and vast numbers of peasants. Xiayi County formerly had over 6,300 accountants. Every year it had to pay out more than 610,000 yuan to absentee accountants. However, with the establishment of accounting companies in all townships, the county selected 285 qualified accounts through a unified examination and the total payroll of these accountants was reduced to only 130,000 yuan. The reduction in the payroll of accountants has lightened the peasants' load.

From this, they realize that this is an advantage of reform. But they are happier to see that after the establishment of accounting service companies in townships, village cadres can no longer keep their hands on financial affairs, thus plugging loopholes in the financial system and checking the unhealthy tendencies of appropriating public money to give lavish dinners and presents. Since last year, Henan Province has adopted dozens of reform measures similar to the aforementioned one and these measures have played a positive and exemplary role in promoting rural reforms.

He Zhukang continued: Since reform is a new undertaking, it is unavoidable to make some errors. However most of these errors were exposed in the process of our work and they have nothing to do with unhealthy tendencies.

As a matter of fact, unhealthy tendencies have existed as a decadent ideology since long ago. They certainly find expression in various forms, no matter whether we carry our reform or not. To deal with this problem, we must rectify the party's work style and persist in reform. We have stressed time and again that we can hardly avoid errors in executing reforms, but we should not refuse them. We must make an overall analysis of problems cropping up in the course of reform and deal with different problems in different ways. It is absolutely wrong to wantonly link the errors committed in reform with unhealthy tendencies, and to make things difficult for reformists and attack them under the pretext of improving party conduct.

Meanwhile, we must develop democracy, strengthen the legal system, and make continuous efforts to improve all reform measures so as to carry the reform through to the end. Moreover, we must deal seriously with cases of seeking personal gain by taking advantage of power under the pretext of reform, and cases of violating the law and discipline.

Some specialized households which have attained prosperity before others, worry that the party's policy of enriching the people will change. This reporter asked Comrade He Zhukang to talk about the question of encouraging some poeple to attain prosperity before others and achieving common prosperity.

He Zhukang said: The relationship between the two matters is also of dialectical unity. Some peasants who become well-off ahead of others, by virtue of their hard work and wisdom, can exert favorable influence on other peasants. In particular, their technology experiences and spirit of blazing new trails point out a means of doing away with poverty and attaining prosperity for vast numbers of peasants and impelling the peasants around them toward becoming well-off together. When these peasants attain prosperity, they can, in turn, inspire those who have become rich ahead of others to seek a higher level of affluence. They will help each other move forward and continuously promote the development of productive forces. Thus more and more peasants will be able to attain prosperity.

After citing some typical examples of people becoming better-off ahead of others in the rural areas of Henan, he said that those who attain prosperity before others can play a positive role in expanding commodity production, improving technology in production and strengthening management. For example, in Minquan County, Zheng Wensheng, an experienced tree-planter, contracted a tree farm which was on the brink of bankruptcy, after he became well-off. He organized over 90 peasants around him, and families with financial difficulties, to run the tree farm. Resorting to his skills and experiences, he gained a new lease on life for the forestry center within a year. The incomes of these people have gone up, with a per capital income of 1,500 yuan as the minimum and 3,000 yuan as the maximum. The province has now witnessed a number of such specialized and individual households.

He Zhukang continued: Due to the long-standing influence of "leftist" policies and egalitarianist thinking, over the past few months, people in some places took a skeptical attitude toward individual and specialized households, alleging that what they had achieved were ill-gotten gains. Some cadres dared not support specialized households, but very few cadres contracted the "red eye" disease and extorted money from "specialized households." This exerted tremendous pressure upon specilized households and some of them were oppressed with doubts and misgivings.

Early this year, a specialized household came to the office of the provincial CPC Committee and asked: "Will the party's policies change?"

On hearing this, Secretary of the provincial CPC Committee Yang Xizong responded with a definite answer: "The party's policy of enriching the people has not changed and will not change. Peasants who attain prosperity through hard work should be supported and encouraged." The provincial CPC Committee took the matter seriously, calling on press circles provincial, party and government department press circles at various levels to further publicize the party's policies, strengthen political and ideological work, and support and encourage specialized and individual households and those who have become well-off ahead of others, to boldly develop production and work hard for their business.

Cadres at all levels must realize that specialized households who attain prosperity through hard work are pace-setters in rural reform and the development of the commodity economy. What they have earned through production should be protected by the law and they should be respected in society. No one is allowed to force them to "give assistance" and to "make donations," nor should one blackmail them either openly or in a disguised way.

Of late, some people have criticized the practice of implementing the central policies according to actual conditions in executing reforms as "countermeasures from the lower levels against the policies of the higher levels." With regard to this question, this reporter asked Comrade He Zhukang to expound his views.

He said: Ours is a unified socialist country. On major questions, we must implement the unified policies formulated by the central authorities and no one is allowed to act as he pleases. However, as our country is vast in territory, it is impossible that all the party's policies are actually concrete and fully suited to the actual conditions of all localities. Therefore, comrades working as local authorities should have a high sense of duty in the implementation of the unified policies and should adopt some concrete and realistic measures according to actual conditions to carry out the central policies and instructions from the higher authorities in a creative manner. As long as these measures benefit the state and the local authorities and help develop the productive forces, we should support them and should not criticize them as "countermeasures from the lower levels against the policies of the higher levels."

In early 1983, He Zhukang and some other leading cadres at the provincial level went to Wuzhi County to investigate and study. They were told by county cadres that after the emergence of individual and specialized households and village-run enterprises, taxation was still under the direct control of the county financial department. This hindered the task of fulfilling taxation and the development of commodity production. For this reason, it was imperative to establish financial departments at the township level. However, the move would involve reforming the county financial system and the central authorities did not prescribe any explicit instructions in this respect then.

Through discussions, the relevant leading cadres of the provincial CPC Committee believed that the central policies were based on the actual conditions of the grass-roots units. If there were no rules and regulations proclaimed by the central authorities for the time being, the local authorities might adopt some measures on a trial basis as long as they were in line with the guidelines of reform and the policy of opening up to the outside world, and reinvigorating the domestic economy. Hence, they selected Wuzhi County as a place to stage an experiment. After conducting tests, they found that tax revenue increased.

In addition, the measure sparked the enthusiasm of cadres at the township level in managing money matters, facilitated the development of commodity production and the economy in many townships, and strengthened the control over individual and specialized households and village-run enterprises. Consequently, the experiment extended to all the townships where conditions were ripe and yielded good results. Before long, the State Council also decided to establish financial departments at the township level.

He Zhukang also said: This made us further realize that in carrying out the party's principles and policies, we should proceed in everything from actual conditions and implement them in a creative manner and should by no means copy mechanically.

After correcting the malpractice of indiscriminately apportioning expenses last year, some places now dare not raise funds for reasonable purposes. With regard to this question, this reporter also asked Comrade He Zhukang to express his views.

He Zhukang said: The Henan provincial government issued a special circular, calling for an immediate end to the malpractice of apportioning improper expenses to lighten the peasants' load. But the circular clearly defined that collecting funds among the masses for reasonable purposes and voluntarily, was an effective measure to improve the financial condition and develop the economy in the current reform of the economic structure.

In recent years, he pointed out, Henan Province has raised a total of about 700 million yuan for running schools. Thanks to the amount of money raised, school facilities in many areas of the province have basically improved and students of Zhengzhou, Nanyang, Xinxiang and other cities and counties now have sufficient classrooms with desks and chairs.

He also said: We encourage efforts to raise funds for developing town enterprises, water conservancy, transport, electric power and other public welfare facilities under the principle of voluntariness, as long as conditions warrant. It is impossible for the state to develop all these under the present situation. Otherwise, our cause as a whole can hardly develop rapidly.

However, in collecting funds for developing public welfare facilities, two principles must be held. First, we must act according to our capability. According to what the peasants are capable of, we must develop what is badly needed and should not try to do what we cannot do. Even for some urgent projects, we should raise funds at a fixed amount and should not collect too much every time and exceed the peasants capabilities. Second, we must discuss issues with the masses. Any move to collect funds should be discussed by the people's congresses at or above the township level, and then a plan should be submitted to governments or standing committees of the people's congresses at the county (city) level for examination and approval. No units and individuals are allowed to apportion improper expenses.

SK010515 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 0930 GMT 31 May 86

[Text] The 5-day provincial meeting on economic structural reform and economic work ended today in Changchun. Participants in the meeting conscientiously studied the guidelines of the pertinent meetings held by the State Council and the speeches by some central leading comrades; exchanged their experiences; discussed and studied some policies, measures, and methods for the current work; and made comprehensive arrangements for the economic structural reform and the economic work in line with the province's specific situation. The meeting participants maintained: The guiding ideology of this meeting is definite, its content is substantial, its demands are specific, and its policies are clear.

Governor Gao Dezhan delivered a summing-up speech. In his speech, Governor Gao pointed out: This meeting is conducive to deepening the province's urban economic structural reform, to promoting the sustained, stable, and coordinated development of the economy, and to fulfilling all tasks for this year. We should fully understand the importance of this meeting, conscientiously implement the guidelines of this meeting, and make new breakthroughs in ideology, measures, and efficiency. We should comprehensively implement the system of each assuming responsiblity for his own work, develop lateral economic cooperation, strengthen enterprise management, introduce various economic responsibility systems within enterprises and the department responsibility system, and strengthen ideological and political work. All departments should rapidly relay the guidelines of this meeting to the grass-roots units to enable the large number of cadres, workers, and staff members to have direct contact with the guidelines, to fully understand the guidelines, and to have a good grasp of the guidelines. We should use the guidelines of this meeting to unify the thinking and actions of cadres, workers, and staff members, and then mobilize initiative in all fields.

This meeting has put forward some new policies and stipulations to be coordinated with the other policies formulated since the beginning of this year. After this meeting, we should vigorously grasp the implementation of these new policies and stipulations. Through their implementation, we should mainly see whether or not our measures are effective and our results remarkable.

With regard to the development of lateral economic cooperation, the upgrading of enterprise management, and the implementation of variuos economic responsiblity systems within enterprises, Governor Gao emphatically pointed out: By the end of June, all pertinent departments at the provincial level should introduce the department work target responsibility system including the responsibility system on the chain work between different departments. Various cities and counties may implement such systems in light of the provincial departments' methods and their specific situations. This work should be conducted in a planned manner, with examinations and appraisals. In implementing these systems we should fully embody the spirit of leadership means service in order to gradually perfect these systems through practice.

Governor Gao pointed out in conclusion: We should firmly and unswervingly implement the system of designating factory directors to undertake responsibility; should give full play to the role of enterprise managers, the role of large and medium-sized key enterprises, and the exemplary role of typical enterprises; and should make progress and create new situations in this regard. At the same time, all localities should closely combine the relay of this meeting's guidelines with the grasping of the current work, give priority to solving the conspicuous problems of various enterprises, and promote the various items of the current work with the down-to-earth implementation of this meeting's guidelines. We must fulfill more than one-half of the annual target for this work by midyear.

The meeting also named 41 six-good enterprises, and held a session on the sale of motor vehicles.

JILIN CONFERENCE ON RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION

SK150535 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 0930 GMT 14 Jun 86

[Text] The Jilin Provincial CPC Committee held a provincial party rectification work conference in Changchun today. The conference relayed the guidelines of the party rectification forum attended by the CPC Committee secretaries of the 11 provinces and municipalities in north China and held by the Central Party Rectification Guidance Committee, made arrangements for rural party rectification in the province, and studied ways to further consolidate and develop the achievements in party rectification of the units at and above the county level.

Wang Xianjin, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, spoke at the conference. Speaking on the party rectification of the rural grass-roots units, Comrade Wang Xianjin said: When taken as a whole, town and township party rectification in our province has been developed soundly, and the results are also fairly good. The important task we now encounter is to concentrate efforts on the preparations for the village-level party rectification while accomplishing the town and township party rectification tasks successfully from beginning to end. Village-level party rectification should be started in an all-round manner in the coming winter and spring. Ours is a predominantly agricultural province, where 30 percent of the party members are peasants. Therefore, successful village-level party rectification is very important to making the rural reform more successful, developing the excellent rural situation, and facilitating the various types of work of the province. In carrying out the village-level party rectification, we should solve the following major problems: First, we should solve the problem of party-member cadres who abuse power for selfish gains and violate law and discipline to a serious extent. Second, we should conscientiously solve the problems in the understanding of rural reform and the party's principles and policies. Third, we should solve the problems of some party members who fail to play an exemplary role, and of some village party branches that are slack and lax in doing their work and that lack combat strength.

Comrade Wang Xianjin emphasized in his speech: In carrying out rural party rectification, it is necessary to adhere to the principle of promoting and ensuring reform and economic development, and resolutely implement the party's rural policies. All the work related to party rectification should help to promote a broader and deeper rural reform, to further improve the rural productive forces, to further enliven the rural economy, and to further develop the peasants' production initiative. This is the criterion deciding whether the party rectification is carried out successfully.

Speaking on consolidating and developing the party rectification achievements, Comrade Wang Xianjin pointed out: Our province's party rectification work has indeed been fruitful, and the achievements are fairly notable. However, a great amount of work remains to be done. The units which have already carried out party rectification should pay attention to guarding against combat fatigue and the idea of getting things done once and for all, and should conscientiously consolidate and develop the party rectification achievements.

At present and for some time to come, we should make unremitting efforts to conduct the education on party spirit in order to raise party members' political awareness. We should also establish and improve necessary systems to maintain the normalization of party building. We should thoroughly correct unhealthy trends, in particular the practice of abusing the authority of one's trade for selfish gains, and those prevailing in cadre work; step up the investigation and handling of major and serious cases; strengthen ideological and political work; and build the spiritual civilization. We should intensify the training of party-member cadres in order to continuously raise their theoretical level and professional competence. We should continue to pay attention to verifying and investigating the three types of persons.

JILIN SECRETARY ATTENDS HUNDRED FLOWERS FORUM

[Excerpts] On 12 June, the Propaganda Department of the provincial CPC Committee, the provincial Institute of Social Sciences, the provincial Federation of Social Sciences, the provincial Federation of Literary and Art Circles, the Jilin branch of Chinese Writers' Association, and the provincial [words indistinct] jointly held a forum to mark the 30th anniversary of the issuance of the policy of letting a hundred flowers bloom and the policy of letting a hundred schools of though contend.

More than 10 comrades, including Guan Mengjue, (Hu Shaofu), Zhang Fengyu, (Jia Xijin), (Yang Gongji), (Yu Yanfu), and (Zheng Derong), made speeches at the forum. They respectively set forth opinions and suggestions on further implementing the 'double hundred' policy.

In his speech, Wang Zhongyu, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, said: In the course of reform, the relations between different sectors of the economy have been readjusted and changes have taken place in both economic and social life. Under the current economic situation in which both the old and new economic systems exist at the same time and the old is being replaced by the new in a step-by-step manner, many contradictions and loopholes in the economic field have been created, and the situation has set forth many new tasks in need of exploration and study by the comrades on te ideological, cultural, and theorectical fronts. Thus, we must bravely explore, create achievements, and pioneer the road of advance. In order to achieve this, we must implement the 'double hundred' policy and advocate the free exchange of different academic views, free exchanges between different schools of thought, and the free development of different artistic styles and different artistic forms. Never should we allow to be repeated such historical lessons as attaching labels on others, arbitrarily beating others with big sticks, regarding academic and ideological questions as political problems, or taking organizational measures for solving problems.

Gao Di, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, met with the participants in the forum and held talks with them. He stated that the provincial CPC Committee will make efforts to implement the 'double hundred' policy to enliven and develop socialist ideology, theory, culture, and art; and to create a free, harmonious, and democratic environment and atmosphere for academic and theoretical study.

PROGRESS OF FORMING POLITICAL PARTIES IN TAIWAN EXAMINED

HK130650 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 23, 9 Jun 86 pp 24, 25

[Article by Xiao Luntian: "Non-KMT Personages in Taiwan Step Up Their Work of Organizing Political Parties"]

[Text] Since 1949, the KMT authorities have taken a very stern attitude toward political groups organized by non-KMT personages, stressing that these political groups must be banned.

Over the past few years, non-KMTS personages in Taiwan have persisted in organizing political groups, and this has challenged the KMT's policy of "banning political parties." In 1984, non-KMT personages who were "public opinion representatives" formed the "Non-Party Public Policy Research Association," but the authorities did not approve its registration. Last year, when the "Non-Party Backup Association" gained a seat in an election, the "Non-Party Public Policy Research Association" tried to set up branch associations to increase its influence. It also attempted to make itself the main force outside the KMT by forming a "political party."

Early this year, the "Non-Party Public Policy Research Association" applied for the establishment of its branch associations in Pingtung County, Kaoshiung City, Taichung City, Taoyuen County, Taipei County, Taipei City, and Yilan County. Feeling ill at ease, the KMT authorities sent people to persuade the association and, on the other hand, asserted that if the association set up its branch associations, the authorities would ban them. But the association did not budge an inch. You Ching, chairman of the board of the association, said: The KMT can use its power to suppress activities outside the party, like the strong bullying the weak, but this will bring a "serious obstacle" to the "whole of politics." The association will openly declare that the establishment of its branch associations is a step toward organizing a political party. If the KMT bans its branch associations, it will formally establish a political party.

After the Kaohsiung incident, the influence of the non-KMT personages in Taiwan was restored. At an "election of local government functionaries" in November last year, non-KMT personages obtained support from 30 percent of the voters, and the vote for the successful non-KMT candidates was quite heavy. This "indicates that a fixed number of voters outside the party firmly support non-KMT personages." Therefore, non-KMT personages have more confidence in organizing political parties. Since non-KMT personages gained support in the "local election," they have had a stronger demand for abolishing the "prohibition against the establishment of political parties."

After the election, some non-KMT personages went to the United States to seek support from memers of the U.S. Congress. A press report said: "The bill proposed by Representative Solarz in 1985 includes demanding that Taiwan strengthen democratization, relax its prohibition against the formation of political parties, and abolish its martial law." During his visit to Taiwan in April this year, Torricelli member of the U.S. House of Representatives Subcommittee on Asian and Pacific Affairs remarked: "Now there is a prominent force in Taiwan demanding democratization, and efforts should be made to speed up the growth of this force for the sake of the ruling party."

While visiting Taiwan during the same period, U.S. Congressman [ke lan si dun 0344 5695 2448 7319] said that Reagan had recently pointed out: "The United States may possibly change its foreign policy. We will decide our attitude toward a local government according to the status of the human rights there, regardless of whether the totalitarian government is composed of left-wingers or right-wingers." U.S. attitude has produced a great impact on the activities of non-KMT personages in Taiwan.

In the past, some non-KMT personages in Taiwan said: "Although the KMT has its organization, it does not have the masses; although there are masses outside the party, they do not have an organization." Other non-KMT personages remarked that there should be an opposition party in a society with democratic politics and that without an opposition party, there would be no democratic politics. Since last year, major matters have taken place on Taiwan island, and they have impacted on the ruling KMT in varying degrees. Some non-KMT personages now maintain that as the KMT "isd in a weak position of political control," it is time that it allowed the establishment of other political parties. In particular, what haappened in the Philippines early this year has encouraged non-KMT personages. Kang Ning-hsiang, a famous non-KMT personage, went to the Philippines to make a survey. Many non-KMT personages wrote articles praising the democratic movement in the Philippines and pointing out: "Taiwan should use the Philippines as a mirror to examine its elections and political development." "Under power politics, an opposition party does not have a perfect organization to work out its policy. This is quite abnormal." "As a result of Marcos' power politics, the balance of democratic forces was undermined, mistakes in policy surfaced, and politics and the economy were corrupt. A ruling party should carefully consider this."

In view of all the factors we have mentioned above, the non-KMT personages in Taiwan have mended their pace in forming parties. While the "Non-KMT Public Policy Research Association" in Taiwan was applying to set up local branches throughout the island, some non-KMT Taiwanese personages in the United States took the lead in taking real action. Tsu Hsin-liang, former magistrate of Taoyuan County; Hsieh Min-tsung, a former political prisoner from Taiwan; and Lin Shui-chuan, former Taipei City councilor, jointly announced at the New York United Nations Plaza Hotel on 1 May. A 'Taiwan Democratic Party Founding Committee: formed by 113 non-KMT Taiwanese residing in the United States has been set up. They also issued a statement declaring that the "Taiwan Democratic Party " would be a "party to break through the ban on forming new parties"; the party founding process would be completed and its membership would reach 5,000 by August; and its headquarters would be moved back to Taiwan by November this year before the general election was scheduled to be held. The three figures also sent a telegraph to non-KMT personages in Taiwan, urging them to take concerted action. They promised that if the KMT government lifted the ban on forming parties and thus enabled the non-KMT forces to form an opposition party in Taiwan before the "Taiwan Democratic Party" would be a "party to break through the ban on forming new parties"; the party founding process would be completed and its membership would reach 5,000 by August; and its headquarters would be moved back to Taiwan by November this year before the general election was scheduled to be held. The three figures also sent a telegraph to non-KMT personages in Taiwan, urging them to take concerted action. They promised that if the KMT government lifted the ban on forming parties and thus enabled the non-KMT forces to form an opposition party in Taiwan before the "Taiwan Democratic Party" moved its headquarters back to the island, the latter would be automatically downgraded to an overseas branch of that opposition party. To this offer the non-KMT personages in Taiwan have had different reactions. Chairman of the Council of the "Non-Party Policy Research Association," Yu Ching, said: "Forming a new party is basically a task which is supposed to be done at home. The founding of a party abroad is a stimulus to us at home. It shows the common will of our compatriots abroad in promoting democratic politics. I would like to tell our compatriots abroad that we have already been doing what they are expecting us to do.

According to reports from Taiwan, the deadlock regarding the party-forming issue and the confrontation resulting therefrom, between the ruling party and the opposition political factions, have caused deep misgivings among the vast number of people who are concerned about the political situation and future of Taiwan. If the KMT persists in its high-handed policy against non-KMT forces, it will inevitably arouse strong resistance from the latter and the public, and the situation on the island will become more complicated and turbulent. In a piteous tone; MINCHUNG JIHPAO [PUBLIC DAILY] said in an editorial: "The ideal of politics is to find out the highest common factor between the majority and the minority through mutual accommodation and compromise. Our country and society need solid unity and genuine harmony. In order to achieve this goal, both the ruling party and the opposition forces should not stubbornly adhere to their own opinions but seek mutual understanding and mutual accommodation."

For the moment, all indications show that the KMT will make a concession to the non-KMT forces and will try to solve the problem step by step through "communication with all social circles" with a view toward alleviating the sharp confrontation between the ruling party and the opposition. Some news media in Taiwan believe that this is an encouraging beginning and a "pioneering undertaking of historic significance to the political development" on the island over the past 30-odd years.

Taiwan is still facing many knotty political issues at present. And the communication between the ruling party and the opposition factions depends on the degree of sincerity shown by the two sides. The KMT and all the non-KMT political forces have yet to make concerted efforts to bring about a relaxed political situation and thus, real political "harmony" in Taiwan.

YUAN CLAIMS FORMING POLITICAL PARTIES NOW INAPPROPRIATE

[Text] Taipei, June 16 (CNA) -- The Executive Yuan restated Monday that, reviewing the current national situation, it is not appropriate to allow organization of new political parties in the country. This is the most appropriate decision the executive body said after full deliberation. The answer came in a written reply to a joint interpellation by several legislators, including Chiang Peng-chien.

Too many political parties will lead to friction and affect the unity of citizens. Such disadvantageous development would immediately cause direct and obvious hazards to the nation and society, the Yuan noted. To set up a sound foundation for long-term national development, the government has strived to attain the basic national goals in promoting political harmony, maintaining social tranquility, protecting public welfare and raising the quality of life, the Yuan pointed out. The government has never changed its policy in implementing constitutonal democracy. Any acts which are destructive enough to national unity and harmony and even to national security and the public interest are not permitted by the law as thery are totally against the aspirations of the people, the Yuan stated.

To those civic organizations registered legally with the authorities, the government will continue to give full support. The government will also assist those civic organizations for their function as a communications bridge between the government and the people, the Yuan stated. The executive body assured that the rights people here have to participate in political activities various available channels, does not depend upon their affiliations with one party or another. The Yuan attributed the present national development to the joint dedication of the government and the people. To boost national strength for a final vitory in the anti-communist fight, it called for continued full support by and solidarity among the people.

CONTROL YUAN MEMBERS CRITICIZE HANDLING OF CAL

[Excerpt] Taipei, June 17 (AFP) -- Two opposition members of Taiwan's top watchdog body have accused the government of failing to properly supervise the national airline and allowing it to run up huge debts. An official of the Control Yuan said Tuesday that Yu Ching and Hsu Wen-cheng urged the Communications Ministry and the Civil Aeronautics Administration [CAA] be given a warning for faulty supervision of China Airlines (CAL).

They said in a report that the government bodies "obviously failed to fulfill their duty of supervising CAL, which has been running huge debts with various flaws in operations," the official said. CAL had outstanding debts totalling 12.2 billion U.S. dollars in October, while its capital amounted to only 62.5 million U.S. dollars, the report said. It said that instead of pushing the flag carrier to improve its financial situation, the government bodies subsidized the airline to cover part of its expenses. "They are also unable to correct flaws in the airline's personnel, promotion and operation systems," the Control Yuan members said. The Control Yuan will consider the call by the two members that a "correction" -- or warning -- be issued to the Communications Ministry and the CAA, the official said.

WEI TINGZHENG DISCUSSES THREE GORGES PROJECT PLANS

["Special dispatch" by correspondent Kung Shuangyin: "Chang Jiang Basin Planning Office Director Wei Tingzheng Discusses the Three Gorges Project; Feasibility Studies May Be Increased"]

[Text] A few days ago, Wei Tingzheng, director of the Chang Jiang Basin Planning Office and a member of the CPPCC, told CHANG JIANG KAIFA BAO [DEVELOPMENT OF THE CHANG JIANG] reporters that all preparatory works of the Three Gorges project are being increased in light of the central authorities' principles of being active and prudent. More in-depth studies of the relevant issues raised by various sides, such as the issue of silt deposits and so on, are being conducted. It is expected these issues can be resolved.

The Chang Jiang Basin Planning Office was established not long after the founding of the PRC and had always worked under the care and leadership of Zhou Enlai. In the last 3 decades, it has carried out a large number of meticulous works and textual studies on the planning of the Chang Jiang Basin and such priority construction projects as the Han Jiang and Danjiangkou water control projects, Gezhou Dam water control project, as well as the Three Gorges water control project. Wei Tingzheng, director of the Chang Jiang Basin Planning Office, is a senior hydraulician. He said that we are fully confident of making the construction of the Three Gorges project a success.

Regarding the water storage line of the Three Gorges project, Wei Tingzheng said that the selection of the normal water storage line should be based on the overall synthetical utilizations, the rational demands of the relevant departments, the resettlement of people displaced as a result of the building of the dam, and the investment capability of the state. He said that in order to make a more careful analysis, in addition to the water storage line plan of 150 meters, we also worked out four different plans of 160, 165, 170, and 180 meters. We also worked out four groups or more of corresponding antiflood restrictive waterlines and preflood low-water lines. Generally, through synthetical analyses, we selected six represenative plans for further comparisons.

Quoting what Minister of Water Resources and Electric Power Qian Zhengying once said, Wei Tingzheng said that the key to the success of the Three Gorges project lies primarily in the displacement of people due to construction of the great dam. Qian Zhengying stressed that in carrying out the work of displacing the people in the area, consideration should be given to: first, the financial capability of the state and: second, the future of the people.

Director Wei pointed out that displacement of the people in the reservoir area is a very scientific social and policy-related task. In carrying out the Three Gorges project, we build projects for displacing the people and adopt the principle of displacing people in a constructive way. This is conducive to the construction of the project, exploitation of various natural resources in the reservoir area, satisfactory resolution of the issues relating to the displacement of the people in the region, and realization of long-standing security. He also said that as this work has just begun, it is still necessary to act according to the construction principle for the mountainous areas put forward by Premier Zhao Ziyang to conscientiously and meticulously conduct experiments at selected spots, learn from experiences, and then gradually use this experience.

PRC CRACKS DOWN ON SHENZHEN BLACK MARKETEERS

HK160246 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 16 Jun 86 pp 1, 2

[By Julina Chan]

[Text] Chinese authorities are cracking down on black marketeers who have been enjoying a flourishing business smuggling goods from Hong Kong to Shenzhen. Last month alone, 110 illegal traders -- half of them Hong Kong residents -- were arrested. Until last month, the total for the year had stood at just 48. Housewives, teenagers and elderly women from Hong Kong are the chief culprits. Yet many apparently do not realise they are committing offences which could lead to the confiscation of their goods, hefty fines or imprisonment for up to two weeks.

The crackdown has involved the setting up of a new Lowu sub-office of the Public security Bureau, China's police, and a strengthening of police manpower.

Weekends and holidays are busy times for the black marketeers, who risk even stiffer sentences from the increasingly vigilant Chinese authorities if their offences are deemed to be particularly serious.

Shenzhen officials told the SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST that more than 1,000 items of clothing from Hong Kong, 82 cartons of imported cigarettes, 36 dozen pairs of socks and a number of other items have been confiscated by Chinese officials at Lowu port control since January.

One of the ploys is to take bundles of both new and second-hand women's clothing into Shenzhen. There are plenty of eager buyers waiting to reach deals in hotel rooms away from the prying eyes of the Shenzhen police. One Fujian trader recently made 22 separate deals with Hong Kong sellers in a single day. He collected six sacks containing 677 items of clothing which he was planning to take back to his native province by lorry for resale at high prices -- before police swooped. Shenzhen officials would not reveal what punishment was imposed.

Hong Kong women are taking advantage of the duty-free allowances to sell goods to mainlanders who have an insatiable appetite for Hong Kong-made goods. The women sell them for cash, or for fresh fruit and vegetables. Cigarettes are also a profitable line.

Shenzhen officials told the POST that in a recent case, four Hong Kong youths aged 16 and 17 crossed the border five times in one day, each taking with him two cartons of cigarettes and some cloth on each trip. The youths bought the cigarettes at duty-free shops for $47 a carton and sold them in Shenzhen counterparts for $57. They were given an average of $15 by mainland middlemen for each five-metre length of fabric. Because of their youth, the four were released after their goods were confiscated.

At present, each visitor from Hong Kong is allowed to take two cartons of imported cigarettes into Shenzhen. Other popular items in the illegal trade include nylon cloth, socks and women's stockings.

The director of the Shenzhen Public Security Bureau's Lowu port sub-office, Mr Tseng Peng, told the POST that illegal activities involving Hong Kong residents were mainly of three types: the illegal trade in duty-free commodoties and clothing, black market currency exchange and petty theft.

The risks, though, do not come from just getting caught. Some women trying their hand at currency dealing have been robbed, said Mr Tseng. Taxi drivers who act as middlemen take these women to outlying areas of Shenzhen, such as Futian, where they are easy prey to robbers.

Mr Tseng said that some Hong Kong people have also fallen victim to the need for secrecy in their illegal transactions. Their mainland contacts pad out wads of money with plain paper, which the Hong Kong would-be black marketeer cannot check immediately because these transactions have to be done quickly to avoid the police.

A total of 203 Hong Kong residents, according to the CHINA NEWS SERVICE, have been convicted in Shenzhen for illegal behaviour, out of a total of 777 cases. Eighteen of the Hong Kong people were caught picking pockets in the shops in the Shenzhen customs building since Lunar New Year.

Mr Tseng said the Hong Kong traders face four types of penalities: re-education, fines, "procedural detention" for 15 days and repatriation. All items involved in illegal transactions are confiscated. Mr Tseng warned that the authorities were determined to wipe out fraud and cromes which "disturb the public order."

SHENZHEN LAUNCHES CAMPAIGN AGAINST ABORTION MIDDLEMEN

[By Julina Chan]

[Excerpts] Shenzhen officials have launched a campaign to wipe out illegal middlemen who profiteer by introducing Hong Kong women to hospitals for abortions. Mainland taxi drivers and women agents who "lead the way" to clinics and hospitals risk being detained and jailed. Authorities plan to increase plainclothes police patrols and to prosecute offenders.

The SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST reported last week that an increasing number of Hong Kong women were crossing the border for Shenzhen's abortion "services". Taxi drivers who took women to particular clinics were being paid as much as $100 for each client. In the early 1980's, some hospitals supplied taxi drivers with their business cards but this practise was stopped about two years ago.

Mr Tseng Peng, director of the Shenzhen Public Security Bureau's Lowu sub-office, said the drivers and agents were considered to be illegally profiteering. He said no middlemen were required for Hong Kong women who needed the abortion facilities in Shenzhen.

Mr Tseng believed most of the drivers and agents were members of syndicates, but he refused to elaborate. He said a number of taxi drivers and women who were involved in the racket had been convicted, fined and jailed. Mr. Tseng cited a mainland woman who had been caught "many times" in the vicinity of the railway station, and was said to be "99 per cent successful" in spotting women looking for a clinic.

At present, at least eight hospitals and clinics across the border offer abortions. Charges range from $350 to $700 for each operation. Some clinics charge Hong Kong women more than triple the rate charged to mainland residents, who pay an average of 30 yuan (about HK$72) per operation.

PRC WANTS TO LIMIT POST-1997 HONG KONG EXECUTIVE

[By Chris Yeung]

[Text] China wants the executive and the legislature in post-1997 Hong Kong to be on an equal footing and be governed by "mutual checks and balances." This was the official message brought back by a group from the Basic Law Consultative Committee who returned yesterday from Beijing after detailed discussions with senior Chinese officials on the drafting of the Basic Law. The officials said the two branches should not have a subordinate-leader relationship. The chief executive should not enjoy as much power as that now accorded to present governors.

The remarks on the grey areas over Hong Kong's future political system were made by Mr Li Hou and Mr Lu Ping, two of the top officials of the Hong Kong and Macao Affairs Office under China's powerful State Council. Mr Li's comments were revealed yesterday by the delegation's deputy leader, Mr Man Sai-cheong. Mr Li, who is No. 2 in the office headed by director Mr Ji Pengfei, said the future legislature should not have power to cast a no-confidence vote on the chief executive, nor should the chief executive be vested with the power to disband the legislature.

The Joint Declaration stipulates that the legislature shall be constituted by elections, and that the executive authorities shall abide by law and be accountable to the legislature.

Earlier, different interpretations over the term "accountable" stirred up controversy, and Chinese officials maintained that grey areas over the future political system in the Sino-British pact should be defined.

According to delegate Mr Chang Ka-mun, Mr Li said his definition of the future relationship was shared by the British and Chinese governments during negotiations on Hong Kong's future. They reached consensus on the meaning of some of the major terms used in the Joint Declaration, Mr Chang, Mr Li defined the crucial term "accountability" in four areas. They were:

-- The executive shall produce periodic policy reports to the legislature.

-- The executive shall answer questions by the legislature over government policies.

-- The legislature shall be vested with powers to scrutinise government budget and approve expenditure.

-- The legislature shall be vested with powers to impeach the chief executive and officials of secretary rank who have committed a crime and report to the central government in Beijing.

Another delegate, Mr William Tsui, quoted Mr Li as saying the future chief executive should not be merely a symbolic leader, but enjoy "certain" powers in administration. Mr Li told delegates that the Chinese Government has yet to decide the scope of the chief executive's powers. He said the future legislature should be constituted by members, through both direct and indirect elections but details were to be hammered out after wide consultations.

The 13-member delegation have held discussions with top Chinese officials including Mr Ji and mainland members of the Drafting Committee during their three-day stay in Beijing.

Members gave their views on a wide range of issues including political structure, the future Beijing and Hong Kong relationship, residents' rights and obligations and the economy.

Delegation leader Dr S.Y. Zee said mainland officials and members were willing to speak on a number of sensitive issues. According to delegate Mr Fung Kin-kee, Mr Lu said the future chief executive and secretary-level officials did not have to be members of the Chinese Communist Party.

On the controversial relationship between the constitutions of Hong Kong and China after 1997, Mr Li reportedly favoured stating clearly that the affairs of Hong Kong shall be confined by the Basic Law.

It avoids any application of clauses in the Chinese Constitution to Hong Kong people after 1997.

Dr Zee quoted Mr Lu as saying that any discussions on party politics should consider whether it would be conducive to the well-being of Hong Kong after 1997. Mr Lu also said the future political system should be able to cater to the interests of different sectors of the community.

Hong Kong delegates believe the Chinese officials favour direct elections to the future legislature. The mainland officials showed special interest in previous elections, such as the Urban and Regional Council elections, Mr Man said.

Meanwhile, a vice-chairman of the Drafting Committee, Mr T.K. Ann said he would raise the question of freedom of foreign remittance and low taxation rate at a meeting of a sub-group on economics which he will join. Mr Ann said he would also propose writing into the Basic Law, in legal terms, the guarantee for the maintenance of Hong Kong's capitalist system for 50 years.

TALKS HELD WITH UK, U.S. ON SATELLITE LAUNCHES

[Text] Chief engineer of the China Great Wall Industry Corp. (CGWIC) Chen Shouchun, left Beijing for London on June 7 at the head of a six-member delegation for talks with the London-based Inmarsat on questions concerning costs and insurance of the Chinese launching of several marine monitoring satellites for the international organization.

The following day, Henry A. Schwartz, president of the Teresat Co. of the United States, headed a delegation to China to Negotiate with the CGWIC, the Wanyuan Co. and the China Launching Telemeasure Control (CLTC) on China's launching of two communication satellites for his company. The talks ended with the signing of an agareement between both parties. A CGWIC delegation will later be sent to the United States for negotiation with the Teresat Co. on the signing of a contract.

Prior to this, a delegation from the Western Union Telegraph Co. of the United States approached the China Insurance Co. from June 1-4. The two parties discussed insurance questions concerning the scheduled Chinese launching of a 1.4-ton Western VIS communication satellite in October next year.

According to reliable sources, Mr. Paul S. Visher, president of the United States Hughes Aircraft Co., recently proposed to the CGWIC that a satellite launching ground for long-term coopeation be set up on a Hawaii Island where the Chinese rocket carriers and launching technology shall be exploited to launch American Civilian satellites in cooperation with the American company. The suggestion has received positive response from the Chinese side, and negotiation on related substantial questions between both sides is expected to be held soon. It was reported that the bulk of American satellites launched were made by the American company.

CPC RELATIONS WITH OTHER COMMUNIST PARTIES VIEWED

[Text] Beijing, 13 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Although there are still differences between the CPC and the Japanese Communist Party, they still should look forward. This was pointed out at a news briefing this afternoon by Wu Xingtang, spokesman for the International Liaison Department of the CPC Central Committee.

He said: These differences mainly involve some views on the suspension of relations between the two parties. Last year, representatives of the two parties contacted each other. Through the contact, the two sides know each other's position and viewpoints better. The CPC representatives explained the responsibilities that the CPC had to assume for the suspension of relations between the two parties. Wu Xingtang also said that the two parties have not resumed relations yet, but they should look forward.

Speaking on relations between the CPC and the Portuguese Communist Party Wu Xingtang pointed out: Last Autumn, a CPC delegation visited Portugal and contacted the Portuguese Communist Party. In March this year, the Portuguese Communist Party also sent a delegation to China. This was the first visit by a Portuguese Communist Party delegation in more than 20 years. Wu Xingtang believes that contacts between the CPC and the Portuguese Communist Party will continue.

[Text] Warsaw, Jun 15 (XINHUA) -- Troops from Poland, the Soviet Union and Democratic Germany are holding joint manoeuvres in an unspecified area, the official news agency PAP disclosed today. Members of the Polish Commission for National Defense had "watched the joint military exercises by allied troops from naval and army units of the Polish, Soviet and Democratic German Forces," the report said. But it didn't say when the war games had begun, nor did it give any details about the venue, purposes or size of the exercises. The report also said a special meeting of the commission was held today in the maritime military area in Poland. Members of the commission had watched manoeuvres and visited training centers in the area, it added.

HU YAOBANG ACCUSES USSR OF FLIGHTS TO SPY ON PRC

OW171144 Tokyo KYODO in English 1118 GMT 17 Jun 86

During the talks with Malinowski, Hu reportedly revealed that the Soviets had conducted "spy" aircraft flights as often as 30 times since early this year. Soviet troops are still deployed near the Sino-Russian border, Hu was quoted as saying. However, Hu did not clarify by which routes the alleged "spy" Soviet planes approached China or whether they trespassed into China's airspace, the diplomatic source said. But Hu stressed the Russian flights were for "spying" activities, the source said.

During the meeting with the Polish speaker, Hu expressed deep distrust toward the Soviet Union, pointing to "a difference between words and deeds." Hu said that, while Soviet party leader Mikhail Gorbachev expresses a determination to improve relations with China, Moscow continues such unfriendly activities (as the alleged spying flights) toward China in actuality, the source said.

This is China's first such accusation against Moscow since May 1978 when the Chinese Foreign Ministry protested that Soviet soldiers aboard a helicopter and 18 military boats had crossed the border into the northeast China province of Heilongjiang. It was not immediately clear whether China had lodged an official protest to Moscow over the latest alleged spying flights. But the same diplomatic source did not discount the possibility that Vice Foreign Minister Qian Qichen might have taken up the incident during the eighth vice-ministerial normalization talks in Moscow in April.

In his denial of a possible quick improvement of ties with Moscow during the meeting with Malinowski, party General Secretary Hu also cited the so-called "three obstacles" to improved Sino-Russian relations, the same diplomatic source said. The "Three obstacles" alluded to by the Chinese are the Soviet support for Vietnam's military presence in Kampuchea, the Soviet troops on the border with China and the Russian military presence in Afghanistan.

Meanwhile, while commenting on Hu's accusation concerning the alleged Russian "spy" planes, some Western military sources in Beijing pointed to the possibility that the Russian airborne "spying" may have something to do with North Korea's permission for Russian military aircraft to fly over North Korea. Pyongyang has allowed Soviet military planes to fly over North Korea since the end of 1984, the Western sources said. The number of Russian flights over North Korea rapidly increased this spring, probably for reconnaisance against the U.S.-South Korea joint military drill "team spirit" and other espionage activities, the same sources said.

During such flights, Russian planes might come close to China over the Yellow Sea, the sources speculate. The Chinese are said to be very nervous about such matters, the sources added. There is also speculation that China might have served a request toward Pyongyang to retract the permission for Russian military flights over North Korea.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON PHILIPPINE VICE PRESIDENT'S VISIT

Talks With Deng Xiaoping

[Text] Beijing, 17 Jun (XINHUA) -- Chairman of the CPC Central Advisory Commission Deng Xiaoping said today that China and the Philippines have sufficient conditions to be very good friends.

This morning, at a meeting with Philippine Vice President and Foreign Minister Salvador Laurel in the Great Hall of the People, Deng Xiaoping praised the people of the Philippines for making a significant choice last February. He said: "We feel very happy about this."

He said: China and the Philippines have long enjoyed close relations. Relations between the two countries have been fine, almost devoid of any problems or disputes, since they established diplomatic ties in 1975. China has always respected the choices made by other peoples of their own accord, he said, expressing the belief that the friendly and cooperative relations between China and the Philippines will develop further.

The vice president's talks with Chinese leaders during this visit have fully manifested the close friendly relations between the two countries, he added. Deng Xiaoping also said that President Corazon Aquino is welcome to visit China at any convenient date.

Laurel expressed appreciation and gratitude for China's timely sympathy, understanding, and support at the time of the founding of the new Philippine Government. He pointed out that the new government received the Chinese Government's recognition immediately after its formation, and that 1 week later, a cultural delegation from the Chinese Government signed the first agreement with the new Philippine Government in Manila. The Philippines regards the Chinese Government and people as its good friends, he said.

Laurel said: The sincere friendship between the two people is of long standing and well established. Preserving and strengthening the friendship between the Philippines and China is one of the goals the new Philippine Government is working for.

He said: Over the past 2 days, he and Chinese leaders discussed questions of common concern in a frank, serious, and friendly way, and the two sides shared very similar views. The talks have been very fruitful.

Deng Xiaoping briefed Laurel on how China resolved the Hong Kong issue satisfactorily by using the "one country, two systems" method. He said: International reaction to the "one country, two systems" concept has been good. The Chinese Government is also thinking of using the same method to resolve the Taiwan question.

Deng Xiaoping said: The Hong Kong and Taiwan questions are practical and actual questions that confront China. The "one country, two systems" method has been proposed in order to resolve these questions in a peaceful way instead of by resorting to force. He said: "The solution of many disputed international issues involves the use of either a peaceful or forceful method. We stand for peaceful methods, not forceful ones."

Laurel expressed appreciation for the way the Chinese Government resolved the Hong Kong question. In his opinion, the Taiwan question is an internal issue of the Chinese people and should be resolved by the Chinese people without external interference. The Philippine Goverment pursues the "one China" policy, he reiterated.

When Laurel arrived at the Fujian Hall today, he held Deng Xiaoping's hand and said: "I earnestly wish to see you." He told Deng Xiaoping that "this was his third visit to China, and he made many friends in China." Compared with what he saw on his two previous visits, he said, China has now undergone many significant changes.

Among those attending the meeting were Wu Xueqian, state councillor and minister of foreign affairs, and Zhu Muzhi, minister of culture.

[Dispatch from correspondent Cheng Hsiang: "China, Philippines Discuss Sovereignty Over Nansha Islands"]

[Text] Beijing, 17 Jun — Philippine Vice President Laurel said that the question of sovereignty over some of the islands in the Nansha archipelago was raised during his meeting with Deng Xiaoping. According to Laurel, Deng Xiaoping said that the Nansha archipelgo issue is not something that requires an immediate decision, and we can wait a while more. I believe that this question can be resolved when the time comes.

Deng Affirms Contacts With NPA Cut

[Text] Beijing, June 17 (AFP) -- China has stopped all contacts with communist insurgents in the Philippines but may continue to extend "fraternal greetings" to the Philippine party, Philippine Vice President Salvador Laurel said here Tuesday.

Mr. Laurel said Chinese leaders had also promised to extend a total of 40 million dollars in renewed and newly-offered trade credit lines, while attempting to end this year the Philippines' chronic deficit in trade with China.

Analysts said the Chinese pledges of aid, trade and non-interference extended to Mr. Laurel during his three-day visit had cemented warm relations between the new government of Corazon Aquino and China. Beijing is eager to strengthen ties with Southeast Asia and dispel lingering suspicions that China supports communist insurgencies there, analysts noted.

Mr. Laurel said top Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping and Premier Zhao Ziyang assured him the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) had "stopped all contacts with the Communist Party in the Philippines" and that there was now "no contact whatsoever." But he left open the possibility that China would continue to extend "fraternal greetings" to the Philippine communists whose New People's Army (NPA) have agreed to hold peace talks with Mrs. Aquino's government.

Mr. Laurel confirmed that negotiations between the Philippine goverenent and the NPA were "ongoing" with contacts between the two within the last month but declined to give details because "too many lives are at stake."

Chinese leaders had admitted China extended material supprt to communist insurgencies throughout the world during the first ten years after the Chinese Communist came to power in 1949, but such support had long since ended, he said. Mr. Deng's assurances that contacts had stopped meant that the NPA could no longer misconstrue "any fraternal greetings that may be extended as encouragement on the part of the People's Republic of China to the Philippines communist Party to proceed with subversive activities," he said.

It was too early to know that effect the move would have on the NPA moral or whether it would encourage the insurgents to turn to Vietnam or the Soviet Union, he said. he did not explain how it could be that all contacts were stopped while China might still continue to send fraternal greeting.

Speaking to reporters in a Philippine Embassy hall decorated with "people power" posters and drapes of bright yellow, the color of Mrs. Aquino's campaign to out former President Ferdinand Marcos, Mr. Laurel said he wished to thank China for its prompt recognition of the new government when it came to power in February.

On economic relations between the two countries, Mr. Laurel said China was taking "positive and specific measures" to correct this year a chronic trade imbalance between the two nations.

Philippine officials travelling with Mr. Laurel said that the Philippines' defict with China last year was 350 million dollars on a total trade of about 550 million. The cumulative deficit over the last 14 years was about 1 billion dollars, the officials said. China has agreed to renew a 20-million dollar trade credit line previously extended to the Philippines as well as to extend another 20 million dollar trade credit facility on terms to be agreed between the two nation's banks.

Agreement had also been reached on a pricing formula for China to supply Manila with the balance of previously agreed-upon oil purchase on a deferred payment basis, Mr. Laurel said. The oil would be worth about 25 million dollars.

A Chinese trade mission currently in the Philippines had already signed contracts for fertilizer and copper concentrates worth 8 million dollars, while another 40 million-dollars-worth of contracts were expected to be concluded in the next few days, Mr. Laurel said.

He said that the two countries had also agreed to hold talks on the opening of consular posts, with a Chinese consulate proposed for Cebu City in the Philippines and a Philippine consulate proposed for Xiamen, a port in coastal Fujian Provine that is the original homeland of many Filipinos of Chinese ancestry.

Asked if he had purchased souvenirs in the tradition of former first lady Imelda Marcos, who was reported to have bought hundreds of suitcases of Chinese handicrafts, Mr. Laurel said he had also made some purchases but on a rather smaller scale - ten handkerchiefs.

Laurel Holds News Conference

[Text] Beijing, June 17 (XINHUA) -- Salvador H. Laurel, Philippine vice-presient and foreign minister, said here today that he would bring with him not only the goodwill of the Chinese Government and people but also their concrete expression of support to Philippine current efforts for national economic recovery and growth.

Speaking at a news conference, Laurel said he had a fruitful exchange of views with Chinese leaders. He added that Chinese leaders are understanding and sympathetic with economic problems facing the Philippines and gave their support to its economic recovery program.

Referring to Philippine trade deficits with China, he said a 28-man Chinese trade mission is now in Manila holding talks with the Philippine Government on measures to expand the variety and to increase the volume of goods China imports from the Philippines. Laurel said the Philippines welcomes Chinese investments in such areas as mining, wood, and paper pulp industries.

He said that as relations between the two countries had expanded rapidly in the last 11 years, their governments had reached agreements to hold formal discussions soon on the opening of a Philippine consulate in Xiamen and a Chinese consulate in Cebu City, the Philippines.

Laurel agreed with Ulanhu, adding, "the visit is indeed very fruitful." He said there were no obstacles in Philippine-Chinese relations and his visit had made their friendship even sounder. He suggested to send more Philippine students to China to study Chinese, saying that common language would make them more close in diplomatic, economic and trade relations.

Seeing the visitors off at the airport were Chinese Minister of Culture Zhu Muzhi and Vice Foreign Minister Liu Shuqing.

["CPC General Secretary Accorded Warm Welcome by Mayor of Paris" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Paris, June 17 (XINHUA) -- Jacques Chirac, mayor of Paris, gave a grand reception today in honor of visiting Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang at the Town Hall l'Hotel de Ville de Paris.

Chirac, who is also prime minister of France, said in a welcoming speech that Paris felt privilegd to have the honor of giving such a reception to Hu Yaobang as a leader of the world's most populous nation and as a distinguished envoy of the oldest civilization.

He praised Hu and other Chinese leaders for their excellent judgement and foresight in implementing the policy of modernization and of opening to the outside world which have already yielded remarkable results.

France and China, though far apart from each other geographically, are close to each other in their viewpoints, Chirac said. Both will not tolerate foreign intervention in the affairs of other countries and both reject the division of the world into two opposing blocs, Chirac said, adding that as members of the U.N. Security Council, both France and China are regarded as a balancing power.

In reply, General Secretary Hu said that it had been his long-held, sincere hope to visit Paris which has witnessed a series of major social changes that have propelled the progress of human civilization in modern history. It was also because that Paris has a place of pride in the history of cultural exchange between the Chinese and French peoples.

After recalling the historic decision made by the late general Charles de Gaulle and Chairman Mao Zedong to establish diplomatic relations between the two countries in 1964, the visiting Chinese leader noted with gratification the development of their bilateral relations over the past two decades.

"We both treasure national independence and are eager to preserve peace. We share the strong desire to further reinforce our relationship, and particularly to increase our economic and technological cooperation, and we are both determined to work together for still closer Sino-French relations," Hu said. Progress in Sino-French friendly cooperation will contribute not only to the common prosperity of our two countries but also to the maintenance of world peace, Hu stressed.

A grand welcoming ceremony was held for Hu upon his arrival earlier in the day at the Town Hall.

About 500 guests from both sides were present at the reception which proceeded in an exceptionally friendly atmosphere. After the reception, Chirac, in his capacity as French prime minister, had talks with General Secretary Hu at his office.

Hu, Chirac Stress Cooperation

[Text] Paris, June 17 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Communist Party leader Hu Yaobang and French Prime Minister Jacques Chirac attached great importance to the Sino-French cooperation at their speeches here this evening. Speaking at the dinner he held in honor of General Secretary Hu Yaobang, who arrived here yesterday on a four-day visit, Chirac said that Hu's visit is especially significant and France attaches importance to the cooperation with China. "It gives me great pleasure to see that we have identical views on international relations," he said.

He said that France and China have the same will to safeguard their national independence. So far as France is concerned, he said, the national independence is based on the credible nuclear deterrent force which, he said, concerns whether the country can take its destiny into its own hands.

He said that the French Government calls for an immediate end to the military intervention from outside in Kampuchea and Afghanistan so as to let the peoples of the two countries choose freely their destiny.

He described China's support for European construction and unity as precious and expressed his thanks for it.

In reply, Hu, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party, praised the French people for cherishing independence and freedom exercising considerable impact on the process of history. As a European nation, France is playing an increasingly important role in international affairs, Hu said.

On Sino-French relations, Hu said: "The development of the friendly and cooperative relations between China and France not only brings benefits to both Chinese and French peoples, but also is in the interest of the cause of the maintenance of world peace."

Hu stressed China and France have a solid political basis for the development of bilateral relations and good objective conditions for further expanding economic and technological cooperation.

Hu, on behalf of the Chinese premier, invited the French prime minister to pay an official visit to China at his convenience.

Attending the dinner were Chinese Vice-Premier, Li Peng, Fei Xiaotong, Vice-Chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, and other members of Hu's party.

Hu Speaks at Chirac Dinner

[Text] Paris, June 17 (XINHUA) -- Chinese party leader Hu Yaobang declared today that Sino-French relations in all fields are bound to reach a new high and will continue to develop in a stable manner on a long-term basis. At a dinner hosted by French Prime Minister Jacques Chirac this evening, Hu, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China, said that although a vast distance separates China and France, exchanges of visits between the nations go back many years.

"With the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and France, our traditional friendship and exchanges have entered a new stage," Hu stated. The Chinese party leader quoted from the late French President Charles de Gualle: "It is imperative for France and China to develop their relations and expand their cooperation.

"The far-sighted policy decision taken by General de Gaulle and Chairman Mao to establish diplomatic relations has produced rich fruits since then," Hu continued. "We would like to join French friends in working untiringly in this regard," Hu said.

In recent years, French and Chinese leaders have held consultations on major international issues on a regular basis. Bilateral trade has increased yearly, economic and technological cooperation has expanded and the exchange of visits has grown. "The development of the friendly and cooperative relations between China and France not only brings benefits to both Chinese and French people, but also is in the interest of the cause of the maintenance of world peace," Hu said.

Hu praised the contributions of Prime Minister Chirac to the friendship and cooperation between China and France. Not long ago, Hu recalled, Chirac said he had a special feeling for Sino-French relations and wanted to promote their development. Indeed, Hu said, "there is still potential for the development of the relations between our two countries."

Hu said China and France both have long histories and brilliant cultures, cherish their own national independence, pursue independent foreign policies of peace, are devoted to maintaining peace, and respect each other as equals. In conclusion, Hu said, "these common points provide our two countries with a solid political basis for sound cooperation in all fields."

Further Remarks by Chirac

[Text] Paris, June 17 (XINHUA) -- France and China share converging views on the fundamental issues in international relations, French Prime Minister Jacques Chirac said here tonight at a dinner he hosted in honour of visiting Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang.

Chirac stressed that both France and China are determined to preserve their national independence. For France, its independence is based on a reliable nuclear deterrent while a reliable defence should not ignore the strategic and technological challenge of space research, said the prime minister.

He quoted the late General Charles de Gaulle as saying to the effect that peace on the earth would be secured only when China becomes an inseparable part of peace and when China and France can understand each other. He went on to say that both France and China stand for the settlement of disputes through negotiations. In this respect, the Sino-British declaration on the question of Hong Kong has set an example to follow, Chirac said.

The French prime minister noted that in the spirit of its consistent diplomatic principle, the French Government wants an immediate end to the foreign military intervention in Kampuchea and Afghanistan and a peaceful reunification of Korea through negotiations between its North and South.

Chirac gave his sincere appreciation of China's consistent support for Europe to reinforce its unity. Chirac paid high tribute to China's current economic reform. He said France is willing to strengthen its cooperation with China and will do what it can to help China in the process of development. The prime minister stressed that what is happening in China has proven decisive to the destiny of the world. Because of this, he said, France attaches extremely great importance to its cooperation with China. Considering France-China relations and the issues of world equilibrium and peace, he said, "We hold that General Secretary Hu Yaobang's current visit to France has special significance."

Hu, who arrived here yesterday at the start of a four-day official visit, briefed Hospin on the progress China has made in the economic and political fields in recent years. Feted by National Assembly Head

[Text] Paris, June 17 (XINHUA) -- Chinese leader Hu Yaobang said here today that Sino-French frienship and cooperation will surely make further progress with the common efforts of the two governments and the two peoples. Speaking at a luncheon hosted by president of the National Assembly Jacques Chaban-Delmas, Hu said, "Leaders of our two countries and our two peoples have the common desire to educate our children to dedicate themselves to the long-term frienship between our two countries and to the cause of world peace."

Praising General Charles De Gaulle as a great statesman respected by the Chinese people, Hu said, "We will sincerely thank those statesmen whether they are dead or are still alive for their contributions to the cause of Sino-French friendship," he said.

Noting that he and Chaban-Delmas were both born in 1915, Hu said they were young men in their 20s during World War II, who dedicated themselves to their own countries. "We saw by our own eyes some of our relatives and compatriots die during the war," he said. "We do not want to see our children experience the tragedy of a third world war."

Chaban-Delmas said he and Hu participated in the resistance movement during World War II. "Those who took part in the movement always feel like old friends at the first meeting," he said.

Stressing that Sino-French relations are based on mutual trust and friendship, he said, "France and China are all peace-loving countries but we are not pacifists." The peace we adovcate is a peace for the people who stand on their own feet not for the people who are enslaved, the French parliamentary leader said. General Secretary Hu had a tour of Musee du Louvre and Chateau de Versailles later in the afternoon.

Li Reiterates Open Policy

[By reporter Ma Fangyun]

[Text] Paris, 17 June (XINHUA) -- Li Peng, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and vice premier of the State Council, who is accompanying General Secretary of the CPC Central Committee Hu Yaoban on his visit to France, reiterated in Paris today that China would continue to steadfastly implement the policy of opening to the outside world.

At a reception given in his honor by the France-China Committee this afternoon, Li Peng said: Now that the door is open, it will not be shut. The policy of closing the country to international exchanges during the late period of China's feudal society was an historic mistake. China will never again make such a mistake.

Li Peng briefed some 250 French industrialists and businessmen about China's economic development in recent years as well as its future goal, that is, to help the people to prosper before the end of this century, and then to spend 30 to 50 more years to reach or approach the level of the developed countries. He said that, to this end, two conditions are necessary -- a peaceful international environment and reform of the economic system.

Turning to Sino-French economic relations, Li Peng said that prospects for economic cooperation between the two countries are bright. He said: China needs to study its ongoing modernization drive. It can learn from France's advanced technology and experience, and is ready to cooperate with France in this respect, especially in energy, transport, telecommunications, metallurgy, and power generation.

He said that the two countries could adopt three methods for economic cooperation -- expanding normal bilateral cooperation, offering preferential loans to promote French exports to China, and running Sino-French joint ventures or opening enterprises in China with only French investment.

In conclusion, Li Peng expressed hope for continual growth of Sino-French trade and economic relations.

Further Remarks by Li Peng

[Report by Tang Hongju]

[Text] Paris, 17 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Li Peng said here this afternoon that the wheel of China's current reform would not stop, nor would it go backward. Li Peng said this to more than 300 friends from French industrial and commercial circles at a reception given by the Franco-Chinese Committee.

He said that the estimated economic growth rate of China for this year would be about 7 percent. He believes that this can be achieved through making efforts and may very well be exceeded. Some foreign friends think that he slowing down in China's economic growth compared with the preceding few years shows that perhaps some trouble is being encountered. Li Peng gave the explanation that fundamentally that view was not correct. As a matter of fact, last year, China's economy took a stride forward, mainly by carrying out reform on the prices of its agricultural products. Facts have proved that reform was in the main successful. Our setting a slightly lower target for our economic growth rate for this year is aimed at continuing to perfect the new price system. Moreover, after all, 7 percent is still a very high growth rate.

Li Peng stressed: A country's construction and economic development should be neither too slow nor too quick. Too slow a growth rate may give rise to economic depression, while too quick a growth rate is apt to give rise to imbalance and drastic economic fluctuation. Therefore, he advocates a harmonized and stable pace of development.

FRENCH AMBASSADOR TO PRC INTERVIEWED ON RELATIONS

["Excerpts" of an interview with French Ambassador to the PRC Charles Malo by CHINA DAILY reporter Gao Shi in Beijing "On the Eve of Hu Yaobang's visit to West Europe"]

[Text] Q. How do you describe the relationship between China and France?

A. It has been excellent, except for some trouble during the "Cultural Revolution." I cannot see any conflicts of interest between the two countries. China and France have similar views on major international issues, such as the superpowers, national defence, arms control and North-South relations. Prior to every UN General Assembly session, China and France have conducted sincere and friendly consultations. Top officials of the two countries exchange views every year, not only on international issues but also in the fields of bilateral trade, commerce, economic, culture, science and technology.

Q. What is the significance of Hu Yaobang's visit to France?

A. It is both significant and normal, though it is the first by a top Chinese Communist Party leader. It is the result of French President Francois Mitterrand's invitation when he visited China. Nearly all Chinese leaders stop in France when they visit Western Europe. For instance, both Deng Xiaoping and Premier Zhao Ziyang did.

Hu Yaobang's visit will further develop Franco-Chinese relations and contribute to better understanding between the leaders of the two countries. Hu Yabang will explain China's modernization targets and the Seventh Five-year Plan to French leaders, who will tell the Chinese leader about French development plans. There are 13 Sino-French joint ventures in China and the number is on the rise. I don't have exact figures on French investment in China, but I can tell you the French Government is encouraging its firms to make more. In 1985 and this year, the French Government granted two low-interest loans to China.

Q. There was a trade deficit on the Chinese side last year. What are your views on the matter?

A. Over the long-term, Chinese-French trade can be said to be in balance with deficits sometimes on the Chinese side, sometimes on the French side.

It is the sincere hope of the French Government to import more Chinese goods and for China to import more French goods as well. We understand that China will not have enough foreign exchange for imports unless its exports are increased. The French Government hopes China will provide a greater supply of products for export. The current supply to France is below capacity as many countries are seeking to expand trade with China.

Q. What about exchanges in other fields?

A. There are hundereds of Chinese students studying in France and about 50 French students in China. We hope to expand present broadcast and television co-operation between China and France.

In autumn of this year, we will welcome an ensemble of more than 220 Chinese artists and musicians to France. An automobile rally from Paris to Beijing is scheduled for 1987. And in 1988, an exhibition of 20th century French art will be held in Beijing.

PRC-FRANCE ECONOMIC, TECHNICAL COOPERATION VIEWED

["Round-up: China, France Forge Stronger Economic Ties (by Ma Fangyun)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Paris, June 14 (XINHUA headline] -- It was rare 20 years ago to see a China-made product of French markets. But, today they are common in Paris, ranging from glistening silk from China's Zhejiang Province, exquisite porcelain from Jiangxi, mellow maotai spirit from Guizhou as well as perfumed jasmine tea from coastal Fujian Province.

Foreign goods have been commonplace in Paris for a long time, but the appearance of so many varieties of Chinese commodities reflects the sustained development of economic relations between China and France. According to French statistics, trade between the two countries was barely 400 million francs in 1964 when they established diplomatic relations.

Trade grew to an average of 609 million francs annually in the late 1960s and then to 1,642 million in the 1970s. In the 1980s bilateral trade has jumped to an average of 6.8 billion francs annually. In 1985, Sino-French trade topped the 10 billion franc mark, totalling 11.451 billion francs, 28 times that of 1964. Closer cooperation between the two countries in the economic field has played a part in this trade boost. China's policy of opening to the outside world broke new ground for Sino-French cooperation, especially in energy, telecommunications, electronics, space technology, transportation, chemical industry, farming, and food.

Along with the intensified cooperation, complete sets of equipment, transfer of technology, creation of joint ventures, compensation trade, and processing of raw materials have been introduced. Statistics show that in 1985, China and France signed more than 30 contracts on technological introduction which covers semiconductor expertise, integrated circuits, electric locomotives, telephone exchange equipment, mining experiments and embryo transplants.

By the end of last year, China and France had established 14 joint ventures and six joint-run enterprises covering construction, leather, furniture, costume, car and wine-making. Four contracts for surveying and exploration of offshore oil also were signed. In addition China and France have emphasized regional ties. The city of Tianjin and four of China's provinces -- Sichuan, Shandong, Anhui, Guangdong -- have formed sister relations with six French regions or entities.

During a 1984 visit to France by Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang, the governments signed two agreements on investment protection and prevention of double taxation.

Last year, a long-term agreement on economic relations and cooperation was revised to say France and China will take effective measures to create conditions to promote mutual beneficial cooperation and to speed up economic relations. Meanwhile, the two governments will upgrade the Sino-French economic relations and cooperation mixed committee from the director level to minister level. France is a leading developed West European country with advanced industry and agriculture, although China only in the last decade embarked on its modernization, which now is in full swing. China's policy of opening to the outside world has added another favorable condition to Sino-French cooperation.

BUSINESSMAN LECTURES ON SINO-BRITISH TRADE

[Text] London, June 13 (XINHUA) -- To open up the Chinese market, more appealing price offers and more direct investments are needed from foreign companies, a senior Chinese businessman said here. Jing Shuping, executive director of the China International Trust and Investment Corp. (CITIC) and vice chairman and president of the China International Economic Consultants Inc. (CIECL) was the speaker at this year's Sir John Keswick Memorial Lecture in London on June 12, 1986.

At the famous round lecture room of the Royal Institution of Great Britain, Jing told the audience from business, industrial, and academic circles in Britain that China's Seventh Five-Year Plan adopted not long ago is offering favorable opportunities to British companies which are seeking to expand trade and economic cooperation with China.

"British products are quite acceptble in quality and technology, but they are not competitive in price. That is why it is rather difficult for Britain to open up the Chinese market," Jing said. "If British corporations can make more appealing offers in price and get more involved in direct investment, then, with the support of British governmental soft loans, I believe the prospect will be even brighter," he added. He noted that "in the 1986-1987 period alone, China plans to import 3,000 items of advanced technology," but "in order to import more, we have to export more."

The annual Sir John Keswick Memorial Lecture series started four years ago, in memory of Sir John Keswick after his death in 1982. Sir John overcame many difficulties and contributed much to the opening up of trade channels and the development of economic cooperation between Britain and China after the founding of new China. Many of those present at the lecture were old friends of China, including former British Prime Minister Edward Heath. Heath said before the lecture, "1986 is an important year in the increasingly warm relationship between the Chinese and the British peoples, as true friends." Chinese ambassador here Hu Dingyi was also present on the occasion.

CITIC is responsible for the utilization in China of foreign investment and the introduction into China of advanced technology and equipment for running joint enterprises. But CIEC is an independent consulting firm specialized in providing economic, legal and financial consulting services to both domestic and foreign clients.

ITALIAN PRAISES PRC CONTRIBUTION TO WORLD PEACE

[Text] Rome, June 16 (XINHUA) -- China's policy to break the hegemony of the United States and the Soviet Union helps contribute to world peace, said Vittorino Colombo, president of the Italy-China Economic and Cultural Exchange Association (ICECEA) today. In an interview with XINHUA and Radio Beijing on the forthcoming visit by Chinese party leader Hu Yaobang, former Senate President Colombo said that Hu's visit to Britain, Federal Germany, France and later to Italy indicates that China attaches great importance to Europe. Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Chinese Communist Party, is scheduled to arrive here on June 19 for a five-day official visit to Italy.

Colombo praised China for its positive role in the international arena, saying that China, which favors a pluralistic world structure, has chosen to break the hegemony of the two superpowers, and that participation in world affairs by Europe, China, Japan and Australia will help keep a balance of power and contribute to world peace and development. He said, "China's choice is also Italy's choice. For it is very dangerous to give the United States and the Soviet Union, the two gendarmes, a free hand to handle big issues like world peace." Stressing that "Italy needs China and vice versa," Colombo said that trade between the two countries must be beneficial to both sides and that Italy must enable China to reach a trade balance. "The ties should not be confined to the exchange of finished products and raw materials, but must also include technology transfers which will help China modernize," he added.

Speaking on the future work of the ICECEA led by him, he noted that the organization will help people in economic circles to get to know about China, which is not just a big producer of arts and crafts but has already embarked on the road of industrialization and economic development. ICECEA will also encourage Italians to invest in China, as the reform now under way there is reliable and foreign investment is profitable, he said.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON PERUVIAN PRIME MINISTER'S VISIT

Talks With Zhao

OW131054 Beijing XINHUA in English 1035 GMT 13 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 13 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said today that as long as the Third World remained underdeveloped, world stability could not be maintained. During talks here with Luis Alva Castro, chairman of Peru's Council of Ministers, Zhao said world economic conditions were tense. Because of trade protectionism practised by developed countries, the prices of farm produce and semi-finished goods were plummeting, and Third World debts were growing. "The developing countries are faced with huge difficulties," he said. From a long-term point of view, these difficulties will pose a threat not only to the Third World, but to developed countries as well. The problem is both economic and political.

The two leaders exchanged views on bilateral relations and other international affairs of mutual concern. Zhao noted the good relations between China and Peru since the establishment of diplomatic ties in 1971. They are both Third World countries, and share similar views on many significant international issues. Great potential exists for bilateral trade and economic co-operation. BEIJING XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese at 0758 GMT on 13 June carries a similar report on the meeting which adds: "He said he believed the two countries friendship and cooperation will continue to grow."]

Regarding world affairs, Zhao pointed out that no substantial changes had occurred following the Geneva talks between the United States and the Soviet Union. The U.S. -Soviet arms race is very likely to continue, but "at present, the people of the world care about peace." "China follows an independent foreign policy of peace, not seeking alignment with any big power, opposing hegemonism, keeping to the five principles of peaceful coexistence, and always standing by the Third World and fighting for the interests of these countries," he said. He said the problem of foreign debts should be solved through the development of economies rather than through sacrificing economic developing, and added: "Debtor nations and creditor nations should hold talks and settle the problem by assuming common responsibility."

Alva agreed that China and Peru were friendly countries, and that bilateral relations had developed well since 1971. He hoped friendship and mutual support would continue. Peru pursues policies of peace, independence, non-alignment, mutual respect of sovereignty and non-interference in other nations' internal affairs, and opposes colonialism and hegemonism. Referring to debts, he said Peru would not accept the supervision of any international institution. It would make direct contacts with its debtor nation and hold talks with international financial organizations. "Peru will repay debts according to its abililty and interests, within the limit of 10 per cent of its total exports," he said.

Alva also briefed Zhao on the goals of Peru's ruling People's Party, and the endeavors of the government to fulfill these goals. Before the talks, Zhao presided over a welcoming ceremony for Alva, and met the Peruvian leader, his wife and visiting party in the Great Hall of the People.

[The XINHUA Chinese version adds: "Present at the ceremony and the meeting were Wang Bingqian, state councillor and minister of finance; and Ai Zhisheng, head of the Chinese government's reception group and minister of radio and television."]

Zhao on L.A. Tensions, Debts

[Text] Beijing, June 13 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said that tension and debts are two major obstacles to the peace and development of the Latin American countries. Speaking at a banquet he gave here this evening for Luis Alva Castro, chairman of Peru's Council of Ministers, Zhao said the two problems also seriously affect the world situation, thus causing deep concern among the international community.

"The Chinese Government resolutely supports the efforts of the Contadora and Lima Groups for peace in Central America," he said. He recalled the recent summit of five Central-American countries to explore, through direct consultation, ways to tide over the crisis and promote political, economic and social development in the region.

Zhao described the event as a demonstration of the desire of the countries and peoples of Central America to solve their own problems, which, he said, is helpful to the easing of tension in the region. Zhao continued that the Chinese people deeply sympathize with the plight of the Latin-American debtor nations. "Peruvian President Alan Garcia Perez has clearly pointed out," Zhao acknowledged, "that his country will repay its debts, but neither at the expense of its peoples interests nor by allowing deficits."

He expressed support for the position of the Cartagena Group, of which Peru is a member, that countries should develop their economies to increase their ability to repay debts, and its demand that both debtor and creditor nations share the responsibilities. "The essential way to settle the debts of the developing countries lies in reforming the irrational international financial and trade systems, and establishing a new and equitable international economic order," he added. "We favor the proposition of combining this long-term goal with the pressing problems facing the developing countries," he said.

The Chinese premier also paid tribute to the achievements of the Peruvian people in safeguarding their state sovereignty and developing their national economy and culture. The Peruvian people have contributed positively to the regional integration, unity and cooperation of the Third World countries, and peace in Latin America and the world as a whole, he said.

Zhao expressed satisfaction with the expanding cooperation between China and Peru in various fields since the establishment of diplomatic relations between them in 1971. "While visiting some South American countries last year, I personally felt the friendly feelings of the Latin-American people toward the Chinese people," he said, adding that Sino-Latin-American friendly cooperation enjoys broad prospects.

In reply, Alva said Peru and China have maintained a close relationship of cooperation and understanding. Today, he said, the two countries are facing unusual challenges with the same firmness. They are clear that only by their own efforts can they obtain future prosperity. "However, our visit and the warm reception accorded us here demonstrate that when these people grasp each other hands to show the unity of the peoples of the Third-World countries, there are no barriers that cannot be overcome," he added.

Although the two peoples live far apart, they share many common political objectives and stands, he stressed. He expressed respect for China's achievements and continued efforts for progress, and wished the country prosperity.

Meets Hu Qili

[Text] Beijing, June 13 (XINHUA) -- A senior official of the Communist Party of China (CPC) said today that his party attaches great importance to its relations with the People's Party of Peru.

Hu Qili, member of the Political Bureau and Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, said this at a meeting with Luis Alva Castro, chairman of Peru's Council of Ministers, here this afternoon.

Hu expressed the belief that Alva's visit to China will promote the relations between the two parties based on independence, complete equality, mutual respect and non-interference in each other's internal affairs.

Hu welcomed Alva on behalf of the CPC and General Secretary Hu Yaobang, adding that before his departure for Europe, the general secretary had asked him to convey his regards to President Alan Garcia Perez, chairman of the Peruvian People's Party, through Alva.

He said that he was pleased with the achievements of the People's Party in safeguarding Peru's national independence and developing the national economy since it came to power last July.

He briefed Alva on China's political and economic development in recent years. Alva in turn briefed his host on his party's history, policies and achievements. Hu said that the two parties have a lot to learn from each other.

Alva expressed the hope that his visit will further the friendship between the two parties and the two countries. He thanked General Secretary Hu Yaobang for the 100 walking tractors he gave Peru last year. These tractors have been put to good use in his country, he added.

Deng Reviews PRC Experience

[Text] Beijing, June 14 (XINHUA) -- Senior Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping said today that China's experieces of the past 60 year proved that it was correct for a country to formulate policies based on national conditions.

China had always sought truth from facts, as was urged by the late Chairman Mao Zedong. Any other approach would result in failure, Deng said at a meeting with Luis Alva Castro, chairman of Peru's council of Ministers.

The Chinese leader reviewed the seven years since 1979, when China adopted policies aimed at building socialism with Chinese characteristics, and said good results had already been achieved. He was replying to a request by Alva for a summary of China's experiences gained during its revolutions.

Reviewing the 60-odd years since he joined the revolution at 16, Deng said: "There are two sides to the experience, one is good and successful, the other bad and unsuccessful." "China's experience can be studied but not copied," he pointed out, adding that China suffered losses after the founding of new China in 1949 because it imitated other models.

Developing countries would unavoidably meet with difficulties on their way ahead. But as long as they introduced independent policies according to their own conditions, they would succeed. "Errors are inevitable. If we draw lessons from our errors, explain them well to the people and thus win their support, we will be able to overcome the difficulties and our cause is bound to move on," Deng said.

Expressing his gratitude for Deng's remarks, Alva agreed that the Peruvian Government has also adopted policies according to its own conditions. He said he was confident Sino-Peruvian friendship and economic and technological co-operation would continue to strengthen and expand.

Deng said Alva's visit to China would play a significant role in promoting friendship between their countries and peoples. Both were developing countries, and through joint efforts they could certainly boost co-operation. He added: "With countries like ours developed, there will be more hope for world peace."

Peng Zhen on State System

[Text] Beijing, June 14 (XINHUA) -- Peng Zhen, Chairman of the Standing Committee of China's National People's Congress (NPC), said today that China's laws would not change even if the desire of any of its leaders changed. "This is because we have taken a lesson from the 'Cultural Revolution (1966-1976)'," he explained.

He made the remarks while giving a brief account on China's state system, legal system and the role of NPC to visiting Luis Alva Castro, chairman of the Council of Ministers of Peru, at a meeting today. He stated that the task of the NPC was to perfect socialist democracy and legal system so that there are laws for people to follow, and law breakers will be dealt with.

Speaking on bilateral relations, Peng said friendly relations have been set up between governments and parliaments of China and Peru. He noted that he appreciates the achievements made by Peruvian Government in developing national economy and improving people's living standard, and its effort for strengthening the unity of Latin American countries.

Alva said it is important to further strengthen the friendship between the two peoples. "This is why I am here paying a visit to your country," he told Peng. He conveyed an invitation by the president of Senate and speaker of the Chamber of Deputies of Peru to Peng to visit Peru.

Peng thanked the Peruvian parliament leaders for the invitation.

Alva Gives Return Banquet

[Text] Beijing, 14, Jun (XINHUA) -- Luis Alva Castro, chairman of Peru's Council of Ministers, and his wife gave a return banquet here this evening. Chinese State Council Premier Zhao Ziyang was invited to attend the banquet. Speaking at the banquet, Alva said that China and Peru have many similarities, with both peoples facing great challenges in their own environment with the same determination and courage. He said that the Chinese Government has put forward proposals to Peru for cooperative projects in various fields, adding that this demonstrates China's sincerity and concrete action in strengthening and consolidating its cooperation with other developing countries.

Alva said that Peru has closely watched the arms race, especially between the great powers, which has brought mankind closer to destruction. He praised China for its efforts at disarmament and its condemnation of the arms race. He added that the arms race is undoubtedly immoral in view of the pressing needs of the hundreds of millions of people living in abject poverty.

In reply, Zhao Ziyang said: Over the last few days, the distinguished Peruvian guests had a wide range of exchanges with officials of various Chinese Government departments. The two countries share many identical or similar positions. We both pursue an independent foreign policy, are dedicated to safeguarding world peace, and contribute our share to promoting South-South cooperation, while striving to build our own countries and to develop our national economies.

Zhao Ziyang said: As members of the Third World, China and Peru have the same wish to further their friendly cooperation, which accords with the fundamental interests of their peoples. Your Excellency's visit will surely further the friendly cooperation between our two countries.

State Councillor Wang Bingqian and Chairman of the Chinese Reception Committee and Minister of Radio, Cinema, and Television Ai Zhisheng also attended the banquet.

This morning, Chairman Alva placed a wreath at the monument to the people's heroes and toured the mausoleum of Chairman Mao Zedong. He was visited by Chinese Minister of Foreign Economic relations and Trade Zheng Tuobin at the Diaoyutai State Guesthouse this afternoon.

XINHUA ROUNDUP ON PERU'S POSITIVE FOREIGN POLICY

["Roundup: Peru Pursues Positive Foreign Policy (by Yan Yuezhen)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Lima, June 12 (XINHUA) -- Peru, with its positive foreign policy, has in the past year played an active role in the international political arena, especially in Latin American affairs.

Last July 30, two days after Alan Garcia Perez was sworn in as Peruvian president, Peru, joined by 13 other Latin American nations, issued the "Lima statement," condemning both conventional and nuclear arms buildups and calling for a Latin American integration process and regional cooperation.

Later, Peru, Argentina, Brazil and Uruguay formed the Lima group to support the Contadora Group's peace efforts in Central America.

President Garcia has recently reaffirmed his country's willingness to help bring about peace to Central America and has condenmed U.S. military aid to Nicaraguan anti-government forces.

The U.S. policy in Central America is "extremely wrong," Garcia said. "The U.S. has no reason to intervene or invade militarily into Nicaragua."

Peru will "break relations with any nation which invades Nicaragua," Garcia added.

While explicitly opposing intervention by the superpowers into Central American affairs and supporting the Contadora Group's peace efforts, Peru, by adhering to its policy of peaceful co-existance, has made great efforts to improve relations with neighboring countries.

Last October, Peru and Ecuador signed agreements strengthening cultural exchange and technical cooperation and a joint plan on the use of the Amazon River, ending a long-time territorial dispute between the two nations.

Since 1941 the two countries had been involved in frequent military clashes in the shared border area at the upper reach of the river.

Last year's exchange of visits by the Peruvian and Chilean foreign ministers was seen as important in building mutual confidence, since Peru and Chile fought a war over the saltpetre area, a nitrate mining zone, along the Pacific 100 years ago.

Early in January, Peruvian Prime Minister Luis Alva Castro arrived in Havana to become the first top Peruvian leader to visit Cuba since 1975.

Peru and Cuba have also resumed diplomatic relations at the ambassadorial level since January, ending a dispute caused by the entry of 10,000 Cubans into the Peruvian Embassy in Havana five years ago.

In a further bid to improve relations with other Latin American nations, the Peruvian leaders, including President Garcia, have paid or will pay visits to Cuba, Ecuador, Chile, Argentina, Uruguay, Panama, Bolivia and Mexico.

In addition, Peru has also experienced a steady development in its relations with other countries throughout the world. It has established diplomatic relationships with 12 Asian, African and Latin American countries since last August and new trade ties with a number of Middle East and African nations. There has also been a remarkable increase in the commercial activities between Peru and Arab countries.

The Peruvian Government advocates the establishment of a nuclear-free zone in the South Pacific, favors the integration process in Latin America and endorses economic cooperation by members of the Andean pact organization. Peru has also proposed the establishment of a Latin American monetary fund to guarantee the traditional access of Latin American countries to financial aid from international institutions especially during tough international financial circumstances.

The Peruvian Government supports the people of Africa and other parts of the world as well, in their struggle for liberation and national independence. It condemms the South African regime for its apartheid policies and the repeated invasion on Zimbabwe, Botswana and Zambia. Last August, Peru shut down its consultate in Capetown, South Africa, to demonstrate its determination to oppose racial discrimination in any form.

It also issued a strongly-worded statement denouncing the U.S. raids on Libya and terrorism in all forms.

The Peruvian Government's suggestion that only 10 percent of a country's total earnings from exports be used to repay Latin American debts has been highly endorsed by other Latin American countries.

President Alan Garcia Perez described the debt problem as a "conflict between the rich countries and the poor, the South and the North."

Luis Alva Castro, president of the Council of Ministers, said "Peru can never accept, enter into negotiations on, or tolerate the conditions which request our national independence for exchange." He called on debtors and creditors to take joint responsibility for the present foreign debt crisis.

In a recent interview with XINHUA, Alva Castro outlined his government's foreign policy. It includes opposition against imperialism, non-alignment, union with the people of all countries, Latin American integration and endorsement of self-determination for people throughout the world.

Alva Castro told XINHUA that the Peruvian Government attaches great importance to the development of Sino-Peruvian relations. Both China and Peru are active in maintaining world peace, he said, it is this ultimate goal that has closely linked the two countries.

16TH SESSION OF NPC STANDING COMMITTEE CONTINUES

New Rules for Foreign Diplomats

OW161521 Beijing XINHUA in English 1450 GMT 16 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 16 (XINHUA) -- China's regulations on diplomatic privileges and immunities (draft) were submitted to the ongoing 16th Session of the National People's Congress Standing Committee for examination here today.

Vice-Foreign Minister Qian Qichen made an explanation of the draft today. He said that with the development of the domestic situation, the change of international attitude to special diplomatic treatment and, especially, the conclusion of the Vienna convention on diplomatic relations, China's existing regulations cannot meet the needs of the situation and new regulations are necessary.

He said there are now 117 foreign diplomatic entities and organs related to the United Nations in Beijing, while more and more important foreign guests are coming on temporary visits to China.

Touching on the principle behind the drafting of the new regulations, he stressed that they must conform to the Vienna Convention on Diplomatic Relations.

China joined the Vienna Convention in November 1975. Qian said it is necessary for China to add regulations to make up for omissions in the Vienna Convention, in the spirit of the convention and according to China's circumstances.

The draft provides detailed provisions on special treatment for missions and diplomatic agents, families of diplomats, members of the administrative and technical staff of missions and their families, members of the service staff and foreigners who come to China temporarily.

As for consular privileges and immunities, Qian said that China will tackle these issues with member nations of the Vienna Convention on consular relations in accordance with the convention and with non-member nations in accordance with the principles of mutual preference.

China became a member of the Vienna Convention on consular relations in July 1979.

Land Use Law Considered

OW171402 Beijing XINHUA in English 1341 GMT 17 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 17 (XINHUA) -- Leaders of the National People's Congress examined today in panel discussions a new land law (draft) to stop the growing waste of China's precious farmland.

Meeting here today, members of the Standing Committee of China's highest legislative body called for quick passage of China's first land-use legislation.

Peng Dixian, vice-chairman of the Sichuan Provincial People's Congress Standing Committee, said that as agriculture is the foundation of China's economy, it is urgent to strengthen land management.

Units that fail to cultivate farmland within six months should be fined for "wasting land resources," he said. The fines could be used for farm improvements or for water conservation projects, he added.

Shen Hong, vice-chairman of the NPC Law Committee, suggested calling the new law a "land management law" rather than a "land law" to emphasize China's need to regulate use of its land.

Wu Juetian, a ranking offical of the Ihih Kung Tang (one of china's eight democratic parties) Central Committee, urged the NPC leaders to halt the casual use of farmland for such nonfarm projects as buildings and roads.

"The problem is serious," he said. "We need detailed rules and regulations as soon as possible."

ZHAO URGES DEFENSE SECTOR TO SERVE INDUSTRY

OW171236 Beijing XINHUA in English 1210 GMT 17 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 17 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang today asked national defense science, technology and industry units to undertake bold reforms and make a strategic shift to serve civilian production better.

The premier was addressing the participants at a meeting on defense science, technology and industry, which closed today. The meeting decided to put the potential of the military at the serve of national economic construction and the modernization program.

Ding Henggao, minister in charge of the National Defense Science, Technology and industry Commission told the meeting that units in the field had contributed much to enhancing the country's defense capability and promoting the social productive forces. The defense industry had already started civilian production, he noted. However, he added, the existing administrative structure restricts it from doing a still better job in manufacturing civilian products.

He urged scientists and workers in the industry to make use of their advantages in technology and equipment to help solve key technical problems of civilian production. Otherwise, such problems will have to be solved through introducing technology from outside, he said.

Participants at the meeting noted that due to this strategic shift in guiding principle, military production will be greatly reduced, and it is possible to put more military enterprises, workers and technical forces into national economic construction. They stressed that they were determined to work out a joint military-civilian industrial structure that would be full of vigor and vitality.

The meeting started June 11 and participants included leading figures of institutions concerned with defense science, technology and industry at the central and local levels. The premier received them today in the company of top Army leaders Yang Shangkun, Yu Qiuli, Yang Dezhi and Zhang Aiping.

FORMER BANK HEAD PUNISHED FOR MALPRACTICE

OW172013 Beijing XINHUA in English 1439 GMT 17 Jun 86

["Former Bank President Receives Suspended Death Sentence for Economic Crimes" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Guiyang, June 17 (XINHUA) -- A former southwest China bank president who broke the rules and embezzled more than one million yuan only to lose it to an unfaithful accomplice has received a suspended death sentence, local court officials said today.

Chen Yanchang, former president of the Agricultural Bank of Fuquan County in southwest China's Guizhou Province, was convicted in April of embezzlement, neglect of duties, and speculation with public funds by a local Intermediate People's Court, the officials said.

They said his death sentence would be reviewed in two years and carried out or commuted depending upon his behavior. Chen's appeal of the sentence was rejected June 13 by the Guizhou Higher People's Court.

Chen was charged with participation in three cases of economic crime, the largest of which involved 1.2 million yuan. Altogether, his manipulations of funds, which began in 1983, cost the bank more than 800,000 yuan, according to court officials.

One of Chen's accomplices in the largest of the three cases, Li Wenbo, a former official with the local Bureau of Commerce, was sentenced to 12 years in prison. Another convicted accomplice, Lu Daxun, a former official of the Duyun City department store in Guizhou, was sentenced to 10 years. Quan Xinqin, a local hospital nurse married to Li, received a two-year suspended sentence for her involvement in the crime. Court officials said her sentence would also be reviewed in two years. Li Lu and Quan were all convicted of speculating with public funds and profiteering in China's private economy.

Court officials said Chen first ran afoul of legitimate banking practices when he carelessly invested 400,000 yuan in a local township-owned kiln business between January 1983 and December 1984. They said the kiln's products were so inferior that they could not be sold, and the kiln went out of business. As court officials described it, in the second case, which began in January 1985, Chen moved from neglect of duty to outright fraud. He installed his son as head of a marketing supply service department he created under the bank's supervision. Aside from supplying sales services to local enterprises, the department was supposed to be a public service, giving work to young people without jobs.

The officials said Chen used his power as bank president to have the Trust Department loan his son's department 300,000 yuan, with the understanding that 40,000 yuan a year would be repaid out of the service department's profits. But, they said, the money was instead used by Chen and his son as venture capital for their own private marketing business. According to court investigations, the 1.2 million yuan swindle began in March 1985, when Li and Quan signed a 11.7 million yuan agreement to buy gunnysacks from a northeast China company. Before they had taken delivery of the sacks, they contracted with another enterprise to sell them at a much higher price.

But to make the profit, officials said, Li and Quan had to finance part of the original purchase. For that, they went to Chen. He told them he would arrange for a bank loan to leverge the purchase if they would make the bank department contolled by his son a partner in the gunnysack deal.

Once Li and Quan agreed, Chen and his son gave them 100,000 yuan out of the money they had diverted earlier in the year, said the officials. Then Chen asked his son to have his department apply for a loan of 1.1 million yuan to finance the department's participation in the gunnysack business. And he saw to it that the loan was granted.

According to the court, rather than invest the 1.1 million in the gunnysack operation, Chen had the money deposited in a bank in Guangzhou in the name of Lu, the other convicted accomplice. But apparently without telling Chen, Lu withdrew the money on April 1, 1985, and scattered it in accounts throughout China. More than 175,000 yuan still has not been recovered.

FORUM DISCUSSES EFFECTS OF 'MA DING' INCIDENT

HK171548 Beijing JINGJIXUE ZHOUBAO in Chinese 8 Jun 86 p 1

[Report: "Research Institute of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought Under the Academy of Social Sciences of China and the Federation of Economic Societies Jointly Hold "Ma Ding Incident and the Double-Hundred Policy' Forum"]

[Text] The Research Institute of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought Under the Academy of Social Sciences of China and the Federation of Economics Societies jointly held a small-type forum on the "Ma ding incident and the double-hundred principle" on 28 May. A summary of the forum is as follows:

Feng Lanrui: We are holding a small-type forum here today. Please talk about your understanding of the "double-hundred principle" concerning the "Ma Ding incident." We should like to ask Comrade Ma Ding to take the floor.

Song Longxiang (Ma Ding): I specialize in philosophy, and I am a layman and a beginner in economics. My article has brought about wide-ranging discussions at home and abroad, as well as a mighty uproar, which I never expected. My presence here today is aimed at listening to your views and learning from you.

Ma Jiaju: The principle of letting a hundred schools of thought contend should be engaged in by all schools of thought as the principle itself suggests. Things would not be successfully conducted if only the proletarian and the bourgeois were mentioned. It has been 30 years since the double-hundred principle was first proposed. The principle is still being promoted, and the crux of the question is to draw a demarcation line between a few aspects; namely, between political, and academic questions, between propaganda, and research work, between theoretical research and research work, and between academic concepts and economic strategic decisions.

Rong Wenzuo: In order to implement the "principle of letting a hundred schools of thought contend," it is necessary to bring forward socialist democracy. In the field of social sciences, bold exploration was regarded as exceeding the boundaries, and such practice would have been censured in the past; and exploration which has been proved correct through practice was not awarded with any prizes, and this isn't fair.

An award appraisal system concerning philosophy and the social sciences should be set up as quickly as possible. Those scholars who are bold at exploration and blazing new trails should be encouraged, those middle-aged and young scholars in particular.

Shi Zhengyi: We can learn much from Ma Ding's article. The economics circles should know something about philosophy. The very fact that a comrade engaged in the study of philosophy should have proposed some questions undergoing study in economics circles is worthy of our study. Many questions are awaiting exploration in the theories of our national economics, in which the principle of letting a hundred flowers bloom, letting a hundred schools of thought contend is likewise necessary.

Jiang Yingguang: Ma Ding's article has actually played a very good role. He has chosen a very good topic, which should be understood first. New York's ZHONG BAO, criticized this article. That is normal, and criticism should be welcomed. But the question is what attitude should those at home adopt. How can it work if criticism is conducted without first referring to the original text?

Cui Shaolin: The basic spirit of the double-hundred principle is to encourage the free airing of views. Problems will emerge if speeches are blocked. The implementation of the "double-hundred" principle will continue to meet with resistance from now on, and the road ahead will still be tortuous and rough. We must have a long-term plan, a strategic view, and perseverence in our practice. Otherwise, it would be very difficult for our society to make progress!

Li Zezhong: We must have faith in implementing the double-hundred principle. The Marxists doctrine as well as other doctrines develop and grow sturdy precisely through struggle. We should allow people to cite facts and to reason with facts. We must be good at drawing benefits and lessons from bourgeois economic theories; otherwise, we will never be genuine Marxists.

Wei Dianhua: The implementation of the "double-hundred" principle and the advocating of bold exploration concern not only economics circles but also literature and art circles and all academic circles. We should not set the reform of the economic structure against the building of spiritual civilization. It is necessary to promote the building of material civilization as well as the building of spiritual civilization through reform.

Zhang Xianyang: It is necessary to link the "double-hundred" principle with bringing forward socialist democracy. Academic freedom is an important component of socialist democracy, which is our right stipulated in the Constitution and must be guaranteed by the law.

SCHOLAR INTERVIEWED ON POLITICAL STUDY, REFORM

[Report by Liu Beixian: "'Political System Reform Is Inevitable' -- Interview With Yan Jiaqi, Head of Political Research Institute, Chinese Academy of Social Sciences" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Beijing, 17 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Some people now advocate that a reform of the political structure must be carried out simultaneously with the economic reform. This is a new trend of opinion in china.

One of the people who hold this viewpoint is Yan Jiaqi, director of the Political Research Institute of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences.

The "Short-Term Objective: and the "Long-Term Objective"

Yan Jiaqi holds that reform of China's political structure is inevitable. As a "short-term objective," we now urgently need to reform the cadre system, the structure of government institutions, the relationship between the party and the government, the division of powers among governments at different levels, and the jurisdiction of governments at different levels. He said: The defects of the cadre system have affected the smooth development of China's economic structural reforms. Therefore, it is necessary to formulate the PRC law on state functionaries as soon as possible.

As for the "long-term objective," Yan Jiaqi said: The reform of the political structure involves things in four aspects: First, the leadership system of the party and the state should be reformed and improved, and the horizontal division of powers among government departments at the same level should be rationalized. Second, the "vertical division of power" between the central authorities and local governments should be rationalized. Third, the functions of the governments should be better defined and social institutions should undertake more affairs which were previously handled by governments so that government institutions can better play a role in state administration. Fourth, the system of people's congresses should be further improved so that the people can better participate directly or indirectly in the political decision-making process and so that the people's congresses can better play a role in exercising state power.

Yan Jiaqi said: "The ultimate purpose of reforming the political structure is to change the situation of a highly centralized leadership system and to establish a socialist political system with a high degree of democracy and a scientific decision-making structure. At the same time, this will strengthen and improve the party's leadership."

He said: In the process of reform, we should establish modern concepts and inroduce new concepts from abroad. "Western culture has not only the dross but also the essence. It also includes 'national tradition' and the 'elements which go beyond national boundaries,' and the latter is all of mankind's common culture wealth which contributes to mankind's progress and civilization." We may learn from such foreign things as scientific government management systems, supervisory systems, classification of government positions, and the use of law as a means of management.

Th Study of Politics Has Broken Into Some Forbidden Areas

Yan Jiaqi is 44 years old this year. He is the youngest research institute director in the Academy of Social Sciences, and is also comparatively young among his colleagues in the Political Research Institute.

The study of politics is a sensitive area. In China, no one was allowed to touch this area for more than 30 years. In March 1979, Deng Xiaoping proposed restoring the study of politics. Through 5 years' preparations, the Political Research Institute was finally established in July last year.

At present, this institute publishes two periodicals, namely, ZHENGZHIXUE YANJIU [THE STUDY OF POLITICS] and GUOWAI ZHENGZHUIXUE [FOREIGN POLITICS]. The scope of its research involves quite a few "forbidden areas." The institute has assigned special personnel to study such subjects as government management, the system of appointing and removing government officials, government structure, rules and regulations for parliament, and peace.

Yan Jiaqi said: "Only an open country can study politics." He recently published an article in a newspaper, saying that science is a world of "three no's": No forbidden areas, no ideology, and no peaks. He emphasized that for political science, all polticial issues can be subjects of research, and different opinions should be allowed to exist and to contend with each other. "If the issue of the political struture cannot be taken as a subject of scientific research, there will not be any effective reform of the political structure."

The study of "One Country, Two Systems"

Yan Jiaqi graduate from the Chinese Science and Technology University in 1965. A the university, he majored in physics and mathematics. He said: "At the university, I mainly studied natural science. This enabled me to naturally take the study of political phenomena and the political structure as a subject of scientific research."

After graduation from the university, he was enrolled by the Philosophy Research Institute of the Academy of Social Sciences as a postgraduate student. During the "Cultural revolution," he collected a lot of data about the political system and studied the political systems of other countries. In 1982, he published a book entitled "State Political Structure." He began to change his profession and concentrated on the study of politics when establishment of the Political Research Institute was prepared.

At present, he is busier and busier at his work as the study of politics is becoming more mature. He often publishes articles in newspapers and attends academic seminars. He is also busy with writing. A 280,000-character book "On Heads of Governments" will soon be published. This book discusses more than 460 heads of state and government leaders in various countries of the world and their power, changes, personality, and art of leadership, as well as their marriages and families.

Yan Jiaqi has also studied the Hong Kong issue and the concept of "one country, two systems." His works have been published in HONGQI, GUANGMING RIBAD, ZHENGZHIXUE YANJIU, and other journals. Once, when he met with some people of Hong Kong political circles, he proposed that Hong Kong leaders after 1997 should meet three requirements: First, they should stand for the reunification of the motherland, recognize only one china, that is, the PRC, and make contributins to the peaceful reunificatin of the motherland. Second, they should agree with the maintenance of the existing capitalist system and make contributions to the prosperity in this capitalist region. Third, they should have the ability to maintain the stability of this region.

LIAOWANG VIEWS POLICY TOWARDS RELIGIONS

HK180441 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION No 23, 9 Jun 86 pp 9, 10

[Article by Zhang Chunting and Han Hua: "China's Policy Towards Religions Is a Long-Term Policy -- Responsible Persons of Party and State Departments in Charge of Religion Answer LIAOWANG Reporters' Questions" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] How can the Chinese Communists who are atheists allow theists to exist? Is the policy on the freedom of religion implemented in China an expedient measures? Will the policy be changed in the future? Many people at home and abroad still have doubts about China's policy on the freedom of religion. For this reason, our reporters paid a special visit to the responsible persons of the departments in charge of religion of the CPC Central Committee and the State Council and asked them to answer questions on this.

QUESTION: SOME PEOPLE ASK: SINCE THE CHINESE COMMUNIST PARTY BELIEVES IN MARXISM, HOW CAN IT ALLOW PEOPLE TO BELEVE IN GOD, ALLAH, BUDDHA,...?

Answer: Respect and protection of the freedom of religion is a basic policy of the Chinese Communist Party. This policy stipulates that all citizens enjoy the freedom to believe or not to believe, the freedom to believe in one religion or another, the freedom for those who belived in the past not to believe at present, and the freedom for those who did not believe in the past to believe at present. The citizens who believe and the citizens who do not are politically equal and enjoy the same rights and responsibilities. The essence of this policy shows that the question of religious belief is an ideological question concerning the citizens' freedom of choice and is totally a personal matter for the citizens.

China has her own independent policy towards religions which completely conforms with the situation in China. Marxists believe that the differences in ideology and beliefs between believers and nonbelievers is less important than unity in their political, economic, and other fundamental interests, which is of grear importance. The purpose of the Chinese Communist Party in implementing such a policy is to unite all the people who either believe or do not believe to build our socialist motherland with joint efforts. To realize this great unified goals the fundamental starting point and reason for the implementation of the policy on the freedom of religion. As to whether to believe in God, Allah, or Buddha, people can decide by themselves.

QUESTION: IS THE CHINESE COMMUNIST PARTY'S POLICY ON THE FREEDOM OF RELIGION AN EXPEDIENT MEASURE OR NOT? HOW LONG WILL THE POLICY BE IMPLEMENTED IN THE FUTURE?

Answer: It is a long-term policy which will be implemented until religions naturally die out in the future. As for how many years the policy will be implemented, no one can be certain. Basically, so long as there are people who follow religions, even a few people who follow religions, this policy will continue to be implemented. Therefore, the policy is not an expedient measure, but a long-term unchangeable policy.

As a social entity, religious organizations are still a kind of objective existence, so it is impossible for religious to die out within a short period of time. As an ideological system and a world outlook formed over a long period of time, religious belief has a strong adaptability and conservativeness, so its influence among some people in the socialist society will inevitably continue to exist for a long time in the future.

This is because the various difficulties and hardships caused by natural and man-made calamities have enabled some people to still blindly believe in the existence of superhuman forces and believe that mankind is controlled by superhuman forces and cannot cast off the influence of such forces.

Because socialist China is not in a vacuum isolated from the rest of the world, the complicated international environment surrounding her has a thousand and one links with her and a great impact on her. This situation will continue to exist for a long time in the future.

There are numerous reasons for us to cite. Basically, in the socialist society there are still no conditions for religions to die out. Only after many years of social development and when mankind has eliminated classes and greatly developed its capability to control nature, that is, only when the social roots and cognitive roots for the existence of religions have died out, will religions die out. Communists are materialists. In the opinion of communists, the emergence, development, and elimination of religion is a long historical process, so they must do things according to this objective law.

Communists do not deny that religions will eventually die out, just as they do not deny that the Communist Party and state will eventually die out. However, as to whether this means that we can try to artificially eliminate religions by relying on administrative orders within a certain period of time, disregarding the objective law of the development of history, the history of the "Cultural Revolution" has proved that it is detrimental to do so.

In the years when the "ultraleftist" line occupied a dominant position in the country, the Chinese Communist Party once made serious mistakes in its religious work. However, that was in the past. After smashing the "gang of four," the CPC Central Committee quickly and completely summed up the historical experiences and lessons in its religious work, further expounded its basic views on the question of religion in the socialist period, and reformulated its basic policies towards religion. These basic policies will be the guide for our religious work before religions die out.

Question: IN YOUR OPINION, IS THERE ANY RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN THE OVERALL IMPLEMENTATION OF THE POLICY ON THE FREEDOM OF RELIGION AND THE NEW POLICIES ADOPTED SINCE THE 3RD PLENARY SESSION OF THE 11TH CPC CENTRAL COMMITTEE?

Answer: Of course, there is. Thanks to the implementation of various new policies, an unprecedented prosperity has emerged in our country. It is under such a new situation that our religious work has taken on an unprecedentedly new look. Not long ago, Comrade Deng Xiaoping said: Among the series of new policies put forward by our party in recent years, as far as the domestic policies are concerned, there are two major policies: "One is to politically develop democracy, and the other is to carry out economic reforms and simultaneously carry out reforms in other fields."

The present good situation in China's religious field is just one manifestation of "political developing democracy." Just as one responsible person who has been charge of religious work for many years said: When we talk about our religious work, we should not only talk about the religious work itself, but should also see how the policies formulated by the central authorities regarding the question of religion conform with the will of the people and enjoy the support of the people. We should see the stability of China's social system and social life.

QUESTION: IN YOUR OPINION , WHAT CHANGES HAVE TAKEN PLACE OR ARE TAKING PLACE IN CHINA'S RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS AND THE IDEOLOGICAL OUTLOOK OF THE BELIEVERS IN CHINA AS COMPARED WITH THE SITUATION IN THE PAST? DOES RELIGION HAVE ANY POSITIVE ROLE IN THE SOCIALIST SOCIETY OR NOT?

Answer: No, religion is not restricted by the social system, and all religions change when the social system changes. Compared with the situation in the old society, religion in the new China is no longer the tool used by the exploiting class to rule and oppress the people. Along with the further transformation of the socialist economic system, fundamental changes have already taken place in China's religious system, and the overall situation in China's religious circle has changed. The feudal priviliges and exploiting system in religions have been abolished. Religion has been separated from politics, law, and education. Some foreign clergymen, under the guise of religion, who had for long invaded China and enslaved the Chinese people, have been displaced by China's own patriotic clergy who observe the law and support socialism. Today, religion has become a self-run undertaking of the people who believe. The negative role of religion is being restricted and the good traditions of religion are being developed and have begun to develop along the orientation which conforms and coordinates with socialism. For example, the rational parts of some religious moral standards still conform to the building of socialist spiritual civilization, so they can play an auxiliary role. The masses of people who believe, as citizens of the socialist society, have been actively taking part in socialist construction. Many believers have also become model workers and have made contributions to the building of the modernizations in their motherland. All these certainly conform with socialism and also show that change in the relationship between religion and society are taking place and religion is playing a positive role in the society.

QUESTION: IS IT RIGHT TO SAY THAT MARX' CONCLUSION THAT "RELIGION IS THE OPIUM OF THE PEOPLE" HAS BECOME OUTDATED? IS IT RIGHT TO SAY THAT RELIGION NO LONGER HAS AN ANESTHETIC AND NEGATIVE EFFECT ON THE PEOPLE?

Answer: I don't think that it is right to say that. The conclusion that "religion is the opium of the people" is the main component of the Marxist religious outlook and is the "cornerstone." However, we cannot say that the conclusion is the whole of the Marxist religious outlook, nor can we say that religion can only play an anesthetic role. In the people's revolutionary history at home and abroad, there are examples of making use of religion to call on the people to carry out revolutions. However, we cannot negate the conclusion that "religion is the opium of the people" because of this.

Although some changes have taken place in the religious organizations and among the believers in the new socialist period, no changes have taken place in the nature of the ideology and world outlook on religion. This is because the essence of religion is still the "reflection of illusion" and "upside-down world outlook," and is still idealism in the garb of religion. The anesthetic role of religion still cannot be denied. Of course, communists do not force the religious circle and the masses who believe to accept this view. However, it is wrong to obstinately make Marxism suit and satisfy the beliefs of believers or to explain Marxism in the religious views when applying Marxism in religious studies.

QUESTION: AS FAR AS WE KNOW, IN SOME AREAS, WHILE THE POLICIES TOWARDS RELIGIONS ARE BEING IMPLEMENTED, SOME FEUDAL AND SUPERSTITIOUS ACTIVITIES HAVE AGAIN GAINED GROUND. HOW WILL YOU COPE WITH THEM? WHAT KIND OF RELATIONSHIP IS THERE BETWEEN THIS SITUATION AND THE ANESTHETIC ROLE OF RELIGION?

Answer: Religious activities refer to the normal religious activities carried out by various religious organizations and believers according to their respective religious beliefs and religious rites. These activities differ from feudal and superstitious activities. The government should protect normal religious activities and deal with the feudal and superstitious activities according to their respective situations. All the banned reactionary superstitious sects and secret societies, religious authorities, and witches are not allowed to resume their activities. All those who formerly lived on such professions as fortune-teller, face-reader, geomancer, and so on should be taught to make a living with their own labor and should be banned from cheating people with superstition, according to the law. Those who seriously harm people's lives and damage people's property must be punished according to the law. We should also issue orders and notices to ban such activities as building the patriarchal clan temples and organizing clanmen in a feudal way. Those who carry out counter revolutionary and counter socialist activities in the garb of religion must be dealt with according to the law. The anesthetic role of religion is a negative role which is innate in religion. In China, as the socialist ideology is in a dominant position, this negative role of religion is certainly being restricted. At any rate, the feudal and superstitious activities are harmful and detrimental and must be negated.

JINGJI RIBAO ON USING FOREIGN FUNDS IN RURAL AREAS

[Article by Ying Qiu and Hui Qun: "Broad Prospects for International Cooperation in the Rural Monetary Field"]

[Text] Introducing and using foreign funds for the development of China's agriculture and commodity economy, and in particular for the development of the planting and breeding industries, animal husbandry, marine production, and processing industry in poor areas, is an effective method to invigorate the rural economy. Many countries in the world have succeeded in using foreign funds to develop their planting and breeding industries, animal husbandry, marine production, and processing industry for agricultural products, to promote their agricultural development, and to solve the problem of food and clothing as well as the materials for light and food industries.

Take India, Mexico, Pakistan, and the Philippines as examples. Agricultural development has been fast in these countries since the 1970's, and this development is described as the "green revolution." An important factor for this development is the extensive introduction of foreign funds, apart from the gradual mastery of a whole set of methods to apply and manage agricultural funds.

The Agricultural Bank of China, which has authority to introduce foreign funds and credit, has, since 1981, obtained loans totaling $168 million from international monetary organizations, to support crops and marine production and agricultural product processing industries in the rural areas of Guangxi, Hubei, Hunan, Fujian, and Anhui. Initial results have been achieved.

As agricultural enterprises have a slow capital turnover, scattered funds, poor economic results and are greatly affected by natural conditions, their loans should be for longer terms and interest rates should not be too high. This must be taken into consideration while seeking foreign loans. Most of the foreign funds the Agricultural Bank of China has obtained are from the World Bank group and the UN International Fund for Agricultural Development (IFAD). The loans it has obtained from the World Bank group have a mounted to $157 million and those from the IFAD have totaled $25 million. In addition, the Northern Europe Investment Bank has provided it with commercial loans of 25 million Swiss francs over a term of 25 years, for use in building dairy farms and milk processing farms in Hebei Province.

The World Bank group and the IFAD are international monetary organizations run by governments. They credit funds originate from donations by governments and state banks and therefore their loans require the guarantee provided by state banks or state financial organizations. Similar organizations are the International Monetary Fund, the UN International Development Association, and regional international monetary organizations including the Asian Development Bank. China is a member country of these organizations. The common characteristics of these organizations are that their loans are aimed at developing agriculture, culture, education, and health work in the most underdeveloped regions. They provide long-term at low interest rates. Some of their loans are offered without interest but with very low commitment fees or service charges. Such loans are called "soft loans" and are generally offered between governments or international monetary organizations. Loans and commercial loans with normal interest rates and duration of repayment are called "hard loans." According to the definition by the World Bank and other international monetary organizations, the "most underdeveloped regions" refer to regions with per capita annual income below $170. Some regions in China's countryside come under this category.

The management of "soft loans" is by no means soft. Take the World Bank as an example. It is very strict in selecting the rural projects for which its loans will be offered and in assessing the economic results of these projects, and its methods are scientific and advanced. The World Bank required the Agricultural Bank of China to calculate the annual input and output of every project according to a fixed formula, to assess its annual cost and economic results, to evaluate the value of money at different times, and, by excluding the factor of inflation, to use international average prices to predict the viability of every project and the competitiveness of the products it will produce.

The World Bank then made its decision based on the feasibility of the project concerned. After the project had been confirmed, a system of contract notarization, loan inspection, and guarantee was established between the Agricultural Bank of China and the World Bank. The Organization that would provide the loan was responsible for the advance delivery of 50 percent of the relevant funds. This helped enhance the sense of responsibility of the lending organization.

For the purpose of using international funds, the foreign funds department of the Agricultural Bank of China has done a great deal of work, learned advanced international methods for project evaluation, and trained specialized personnel. The Agricultural Bank of Guangxi Province used the loans provided by the World Bank to support 594 projects including growing 150,000 mu of fruit trees, building 140,000 mu of economic forests, developing 30,000 mu of marine production, and raising hundreds of thousands of domestic animals and fowls. The Agricultural Bank of Hubei Province used the loans offered by the IFAD to support 179 projects including the breeding industry and the agricultural product processing industry, solving, to a large extent, the supply of nonstaple food and food for tourists in large and medium-sized cities. Some of their products have been exported to the international market and have produced good economic results. The World Bank and other international monetary organizations have expressed satisfaction over the ability of the Agricultural Bank of China to properly arrange the use of the loans offered by them, and they have suggested providing China with new loans for expanding rural commodity production.

We can predict that there is still greater potential and brighter prospects for using foreign funds, carrying out international cooperation, and absorbing advanced foreign monetary managerial experience to make China's rural socialist economy prosperous.

XINHUA COMMENTARY ON ENTERPRISE SERVICE QUALITY

[Excerpts] Beijing, 17 Jun (XINHUA) -- Commentary by XINHUA reporters Xia Junsheng and Yan Zhenguo: The Key To Improving Service Quality Is To Have a Correct Operational Thinking.

Currently, the service quality of some enterprises is poor because their leaders, with incorrect operational thinking, only want to make more money and infringe customers' interests at will. Of course, enterprises must consider their own economic results, but socialist commerce and service trades should never forget the fundamental purpose of serving the people and should pay attention to ensuring both good economic results and social benefits.

Can this be achieved? Let us take a look at some facts:

While counters for small commodities are becoming smaller and smaller and the variety of small commodities is becoming more and more limited in many stores, the Baiguanglu General Merchandise Market in Beijing Municipality has increased small-commodity counters from 16 to 28, carrying some 5,500 kinds of small commodity. More than 50 percent of the commodities carried by the market are small.

The Baiguanglu Market is a medium-sized market in a residential district. The market lacks famous-brand merchandies and attractive goods in great demand, and the district is unlike the busy shopping districts, where there are many shoppers. However, the market attracts many customers because it has a great variety of small commodities and a good service attitude. Many customers, coming to buy small commodities, also found it convenient to buy large merchandise there. In this way, the small commodity business has promoted the sale of large merchandise. In last 5 years, the market has doubled its volume of business and profits.

After vegetable prices were decontrolled, someone at the Chaolei Vegetable Market in Beijing Municipality suggested that the market should deal less in vegetables and sell more profitable goods. However, the party branch of the market held that, as vegetable supply concerns all families, state-run vegetable markets should never think of profit only and forget the responsibility of ensuring vegetable supply to local residents and stabilizing vegetable prices, and that they should sell even more vegetables. The Chaolei Vegetable Market has achieved good economic results, as well as good social benefits, because it has correct operational thinking and good management, and strives to sell more at a small profit.

These facts show that enterprises can achieve good economic results and social benefit simultaneously, and the key to the achievement is the leaders' having correct operational thinking. Enterprises should make profits, but the profits must be made in a decent way.

SERVICE GROUP TO HELP ENTERPRISES SOLVE PROBLEMS

[Report by Wang Li: "Dalian Sets Up Policy Coordination Service Group To Help Enterprises Solve Problems"]

[Text] In the light of the new situation and problems that have emerged in current industrial and communications production, the principal leading cadres of the Dalian City CPC Committee and the government selected 26 enterprises including the Dalian chemical plant and Dalian iron and steel mill and two lines of trade to make an on-the-spot investigation. They adopted the method of giving different guidance to different kinds of enterprises and invigorating enterprises one by one to earnestly help enterprises solve problems and thus find a way out for enlivening Dalian's industrial enterprises in an all-round manner.

The 26 enterprises including the Dalian chemical plant yielded respectively 65, 67, and 68 percent of the gross industrial output value, before-tax profit, and total tax payments and profit delivery of all the city's state-owned industrial enterprises. The problems found in these enterprises were mainly in the following four areas: 1) how are we to enhance the enterprises capacity for self-development and self-transformation; 2) how are we to enhance enterprises' ability to export its products and earn foreign exchange; 3) how are we to improve our enterprises' economic results; and 4) how are we to actually implement the economic responsibility system and exercise staff and worker initiative.

In the light of the above-mentioned actual problems, the leading comrades of the Dalian City CPC Committee and government have made arrangements to set up a policy coordination service group and a system of regular Friday office meetings.

All the relevant coordinating departments have begun to do a large amount of specific work through the coordinated study of the regular office meetings. This has not only accelerated the process of studying and solving the problems, but also heightened enterprises' confidence in reform and invigoration. The enterprises have reflected that in the past they did not fully understand the policies. They wanted to find some people to ask, but they could not find those who know the situation. Now the leading comrades of those departments have taken the initiative to come to the enterprises to help them solve problems. This is indeed like the practice of sending charcoal in snowy weather.

Dalian City's policy coordination service work mainly has the following five characteristics:

-- the principal leading comrades of the various coordinating departments personally led teams to go deep among enterprises to learn the actual situation and thus be able to make quick decisions in solving problems.

-- the problems that can be solved within the scope of the state policies and regulations and the limit of the city's power, have all been basically solved without a shifting of responsibilty or delay.

-- accommodation has been used to solve urgent key problems and thus help enterprises to promptly overcome actual difficulties.

-- They have taken the initiative to provide service in enlivening enterprises and have not restricted themselves to solving problems at regular meetings alone. For example, the tax department has taken the initiative to collect 48 requirements from enterprises and studied and satisfied 26 of them. The bureau of price administration has satisfied four requirements put forth by enterprises outside the regular meetings.

They have adopted flexible and diversified work methods, studied large number of problems, mainly at regular meetings, and solved departmental problems through mutual consultation. When an enterprise had a lot of problems to solve, they held on-the-spot meetings there to make decisions right there.

So far, among the 74 problems related to the city's tax, labor, and price departments, industrial and commercial bank, financial department, and planning and foreign economic relations and trade committees, 50 have been solved or partially solved, accounting for two-thirds of the total number. They have not solved the rest of the problems because conditions for solving them are not mature.

[Excerpts] The film "Wild Mountains," which reflects Chinese farmers' changing lifestyles and values, has won Best Film in the Golden Rooster Awards, China's equivalent to the Oscars.

Liu Zifeng was awarded Best Actor for his role in "The Black Cannon Incident," probably one of the country's most controversial films in recent years.

"We tried to see that most of the jurors were older or middle-aged artists, with a certain proportion of young people," said Zhang Qing, the association's spokeswoman. "It's quite natural for the results of the three prizes to be different," Zhang said. Some of the prize-winning films, such as the "Gunshot in the Suolun River Valley" and "The Black Cannon Incident," have not yet been released to the public. The prize-giving ceremony for all three awards will be held in Beijing this autumn.

PENG ZHEN ON IMPORTANCE OF YANAN SPIRIT, STYLE

[By reporters Ma Jiqi and Ji Shangzhi]

[Text] Xian, 13 Jun (XINHUA) -- During his recent inspection trip in Shaanxi Province, Comrade Peng Zhen pointed out that it is necessary to inherit and carry forward the Yanan spirit and work style while carrying out socialist construction.

Peng Zhen arrived in Xian from Luoyang on 6 June. On the afternoon of 11 June, he addressed a meeting attended by leading cadres of Shaanxi Province and Xian.

Peng Zhen said: Yanan spirit and work style are the heirlooms of our revolution. They mean that we must seek truth from facts, and serve the people wholeheartedly. Today China's socialist construction is in progress, and reform is being carried out in all economic sectors. Thus, we must proceed from these "facts," find out their laws, and work according to objective law. Only by doing this can we minimize or avoid subjectivism, recklessness, and major mistakes.

Pen Zhen said: Serving the people wholeheartedly is our party's only objective as well as our party's fine tradition and work style developed in the Yanan days. As in the past, it serves now and will continue to serve as a guiding principle for the conduct of each and every communist. Today some communists have forgotten this fundamental obligation and have abused their power for personal gain and engaged in various other irregularities. This runs counter to our party's objective. While we improve party conduct today, we should educate all party members on the need to serve the people wholeheartedly. Each and every Communist Party member must keep in mind that they are the servants of the people and not their masters, and that they have the obligation only to serve the people wholeheartedly, not the privilege to abuse their power for personal gains.

Peng Zhen said: Self-reliance and hard work should continue to be stressed in the realization of China's modernization program. Self-reliance and hard work are an important aspect of the Yanan spirit and work style. He said: Emphasizing self-reliance and hard work does not mean that we should not study and introduce advanced foreign technology.

On the contrary, we think that a socialist society and a communist society can be built only by utilizing the achievements of scientific, technological, and cultural development of the world. To study and introduce advanced technology from foreign countries in order to expedite China's socialist construction, it is absolutely essential for the country to have a policy of opening to the outside world. This policy does not run counter to the spirit of the party which, during its Yanan days, stressed the need of foreign assistance on the basis of self-reliance.

RENOVATION OF CONFUCIUS' BIRTHPLACE PLANNED

[Text] Jinan, June 14 (XINHUA) -- The Chinese Government plans to allocate 12.9 million yuan in the next five years to repair buildings and relics in Qufu, Shandong Province, the birthplace of Confucius (551-479 B.C.), China's most famous philosopher, a local official said today.

Kong Xianglin, a direct descendant of Confucius and president of the Qufu County Cultural Relics Committee, said that the planned allocation is 1.8 times the figure for the previous 36 years.

The money will be used to repair the manor of Confucius' descendants and the Confucian temple and surroundings, install fire warning and telephone systems, clear unsightly buildings and lay underground sewage pipes.

Some 300 workers are already working on the temple and manor. Repair work on the Kuiwen Pavilion -- a major building in the Confucian temple -- is estimated to cost 1.2 million yuan and is scheduled to be completed this year.

Almost all the relics damaged during the "Cultural Revolution" (1966-76) have been restored, Kong said.

Qufu, founded during the Western Zhou Dynasty (11th century -771 B.C.) is a major tourist attraction and a center for studying confucianism and traditional Chinese culture.

Since 1979, the number of tourists has increased at an annual rate of 30 percent to reach 1.3 million last year.

YU QIULI ON ARMED FORCES FINANCIAL INSPECTION

OW170451 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1529 GMT 16 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, 16 Jun (XINHUA) -- At a briefing on a general inspection of the observance of financial and economic regulations throughout the Armed Forces, Yu Qiuli, deputy secretary general of the Central Military Commission and director of the PLA General Political Department, pointed out this afternoon: Making a general inspection of the observance of financial and economic regulations throughout the Armed Forces is an important measure to strengthen the revolutionization, modernization, and regularization of our Armed Forces. To do a good job in financial management, it is necessary to improve and strengthen the financial and economic systems step by step, in addition to stepping up ideological education in this regard. Besides, it is also necessary to have a supervision and inspection system to ensure the implementation of the financial and economic systems.

Yang Shangkun, Yang Dezhi, Zhang Aiping, and Hong Xuezhi heard the briefing, at which Yu Giuli spoke on behalf ot eh Central Military Commission. He said: The general inspection of the observance of financial and economic regulations throughout the Armed Forces started in March this year. The inspection shows that the Armed Forces have strictly implemented the principles, policies, rules, and discipline laid down by the party Central Committee, the State Council, and the Central Military Commission. However, some problems have also been discovered through the inspection. Facts show that it is very necessary to make such a general inspection of the observance of financial and economic regulations, which is of great significance in stopping violations of the law and discipline, improving our work, rectifying our party style, and promoting Army building.

Yu Giuli aid: In handling the problems discovered through the inspection, it is necessary to uphold principles and act with party spirit. Those violating financial and economic regulations or party discipline and state law, no matter which leadership level or who is involved, should be dealt with sternly, without sparing anyone's sensibilities or being accommodating and indulgent toward anyone. When the facts of a case are certified, a decision on it must be promptly made, and it must not be put off for long. Under no circumstances must big problems be turned into small ones and small problems into no problem at all. Party organizations at all levels and all Communist Party members must take a clear-cut stand and must not practice favoritism as a matter of principle.

On instituting and improving various systems in the Armed Forces from now on, Yu Giuli said: To effectively do the work of financial management, it is necessary to have supervision and inspection within the financial departments, by auditing organs, and by discipline inspection departments. In addition, it is also necessary to give full scope to democracy and to rely on the masses for supervision and inspection. Only thus will it be possible to ensure the correct implementation of the financial and economic systems.

WANG YUZHAO ADDRESSES ANHUI MILITARY MEETING

OW110423 Hefei ANHUI RIBAO in Chinese 27 May 86 p 1

[Excerpts] The party committee of the provincial Military District held a meeting of first secretaries of party committees in units under the provincial military district from 21 to 24 May. The meeting earnestly made concrete arrangements for implementing the central authorities' important instructions on the work of the Armed Forces in the new period and putting People's Armed Forces departments under local authorities.

In accordance with the central authorities' requirements, all country-level People's Armed Forces departments in the province will be put under local authorities before the end of June. This major reform meets the needs of national economic construction, and it is part of the Army structural reform and reduction-in strength reorganization.

Li Yuanxi, commander of the provincial Military District, delivered an opening speech at the meeting. Zhang Linyuan, member of the Standing Committee of the Provincial CPC Committee and political commissar of the provincial Military District, made a report entitled "Adapt Ourselves to a Strategic Shift, Do a Good Job in Putting People's Armed Forces Departments Under Local Authorities, and Further Bring About a New Situation in the Work of the Militia and Reserve Forces." Tang Zhen, commissioner of the Suxian Prefectural Administrative Office, briefed those present on experiments aimed at putting the Suxian County and Suzhou City People's Armed Forces Departments under local authorities. Wang Yuzhao, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, chairman of the provincial People's Armed Forces commission and governor of the province, made an important speech at the meeting. He particularly pointed out: Reducing the number of Armed Forces members by 1 million and putting country (city and district) People's Armed Forces Departments under local authorities are a major reform in the structure of the Armed Forces. This absolutely does not mean, however, that the effort to build the reserve forces for national defense has been weakened. Under no circumstances must we regard the work of the militia and reserve forces as not essential. We must further enhance our understanding and achieve unity in thinking. We must clearly understand the status and role of the work of the militia and reserve forces in the new situation and strengthen our leadership over this work. From now on, the secretaries of prefectural, city, and county (district) party committees will serve concurrently as secretaries of the party committees of military subdistricts or People's Armed Forces departments. Consequently, their responsibility for the work of the People's Armed Forces will be heavier than now, and they must play a leading role in the party's taking care of the Armed Forces.

Present were Yang Yangliang [2799 3057 5328], member of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee, Shao Ming, vice governor; and Guo Shengkun, Zhang Jinbao, Zhang Honggui, Lu Kuangheng, and Xue Ruiyang, leaders of the provincial Military District.

All prefectural, city, and county (district) party committee secretaries, military subdistrict commanders and political commissars, and People's Armed Forces department directors and political commissars throughout the province attended the meeting, totaling 430 persons.

HENAN CADRES' 'ROUGH' METHODS WRECK VILLAGE PLANNING

HK160355 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 15 Junh 86

[Excerpts] (Suanzhangkou) village of Cuanzhuang township in Jixian County has applied simple and rough methods in planning the construction of the village, instead of basing the work on local realities. Houses have been demolished and trees destroyed, causing strong resentment among the masses.

As an example of what happened, villager (Gu Shiqing) was forced to move out of his house. His family was harshly treated by the village cadres. Villages party branch secretary (Chen Quanhua) and villagers' committee chairman (Gu Jiezhen) took no notice of his entreaties and went so far as to evict his 68-year-old father from the house into the bitter cold, while forcing (Gu Shiqing) to demolish the house. Eight pear trees in the countryard were cut down. The old man tried to hang himself, but was saved by someone who discovered him.

The masses of (Suanzhangkou) village strongly resented the actions of the village cadres. They sent representatives on 61 occasions to report the situation to the departments and leaders concerned to township, country, and city. On 6 March, the country forestry bureau sent a 6-man investigation team headed by a deputy bureau chief to the village to find out what had happened. They visited each household and also verified the facts with the village cadres. They reported to the county CPC Committee and government on 7 March, pointing out that the actions of the (Suanzhangkou) village cadres ran counter to the masses' desires and violated law and discipline to a serious extent. They recommended that the matter be seriously investigated and that those responsible be held accountable.

However, it was not until 16 March that the county planning and construction commission, which was responsible for village construction, sent a 4-man team to (Suanzhangkou) to investigate. They arrived at 1500 and left at 1710. During this period they stayed in the company of village party branch secretary (Chen Quanhua). The team affirmed that the main orientation of the village cadres was correct, and demanded that the township authorities encourage and support them. They also wrote up an investigation report and sent it to the county leadership.

Faced with two totally different investigation reports, the county CPC Committee and government failed to send anyone to the village to find out the truth, nor did they carry out any further investigation. The problem of the village was only brought up for discussion at a meeting attended by responsible comrades of the county at the end of May. Due to the differences between the two investigation reports, no views on dealing with the matter were put forward. The problems of this village are still unresolved today.

HENAN COMMENTARY DEMANDS IMPROVED CADRE WORK STYLE

HK160357 Zhengzhou Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 15 Jun 86

[Station commentary: "Do Not Turn a Good Thing Into a Bad Thing"]

[Excerpts] If something that was originally good is handled by people with incorrect thinking and work style, it may turn into a bad thing. The problem that has occurred at (Suanzhangkou) village in Jixian County is a typical example of this. The aim of planning village construction is to promote rural economic construction and all undertakings. This is in fact a very good thing. However, the cadres of (Suanzhangkou) village adopted simple and rough methods.

In May last year, in view of the work style problems of grass-roots cadres in Henan, Comrade Hu Yaobang wrote an important comment demanding that people be disposed to resolve these problems within about 2 years. The provincial CPC Committee subsequently issued a document on seriously rectifying cadre work style. However the cadres of (Suanzhangkou) village totally ignored the comment of the leading central comrade and the views of the provincial CPC Committee and simply did their own thing. This resulted in serious violation of law and discipline.

It should be noted that when some people from the department in charge went to (Suanzhangkou) to carry out a so-called investigation, they held that the main orientation of the village cadres was correct and demanded that the township cadres encourage and support them. "The main orientation is correct," this term of the Cultural Revolution, is still around, and it is evident how deeply its poison runs. If you want to talk about main orientation, then our main orientation can only be to achieve the general goal and task for the end of the century set by the CPC Central Committee, this is in the fundamental interests of the masses. Are you trying to say that those people who ignore party instructions and the masses' interests and seriously violate law and discipline by issuing compulsory orders have a correct main orientation?

The problem that has occurred at (Suanzhangkou) tells us that the question of cadre work style is a major issue that cannot be neglected. It is now a year since Comrade Hu Yaobang's comment on the work style problems of Henan grass-roots cadres was issued and the provincial CPC Committee's document was transmitted. During this period, the province has carried out rectification of cadre work style in conjunction with party rectification. Marked achievements have been scored. However, we must not overestimate the achievements in rectifying cadre work style.

To meet the demand for solving the cadre work style problem in about 2 years, and to avoid a repeat of incidents like that at (Suanzhangkou), we must organize the cadres to restudy Comrade Hu Yaobang's comment and the provincial CPC Committee's document and also seriously review its implementation.

GUIZHOU MEETING STRESSES CORRECTING MALPRACTICES

HK060255 Guiyang Guizhou Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 5 Jun 86

[Excerpts] At the fourth report meeting on straightening out party style in the provinical organs, convened on 5 June by the CPC Committee of the organs, Liu Hanzhen, secretary of the committee and secretary of the provincial Discipline Inspection Commission, said that in currently straightening out unhealthy trends, it is necessary to do a good job in tidying up discipline and correcting sectoral malpractices while grasping major and important cases. In this way there will be a further turn for the better in party style.

Comrade Liu Hanzhen said: The provincial organs have scored great success in correcting unhealthy trends. They have further straightened out party style and investigated and dealt with a number of major and important cases. However, there is still slackness in discipline. Unhealthy trends in the ideological and political fields remain serious. Their main expressions are as follows:

1. Political liberalism. Certain cadres and party members randomly fire off their views on party policies on all kinds of occasions. Instead of speaking out at party meetings, they talk in an indiscriminate fashion outside the meetings. They tolerate erroneous words and deeds instead of criticizing and boycotting them.

2. Irresponsible bureaucratism remains very serious. People who pursue this are divorced from reality and the masses and lack the proper sense of responsibiltiy toward the cause of the party and people, to the extent of causing economic losses and a bad political impact.

3. There is serious ideological individualism and selfishness. Such people beg their organization for power and official posts. Some also try to get things done by means of cultivating relationships, enter by the back door, and organize factions.

Although these negative things do not constitute the main current, they have seriously damaged the party style and social mood and harmed the prestige of the party and government. They have aroused discontent among the party members, cadres, and masses. There can be no fundamental turn for the better in party style and social mood unless these things are straightened out and corrected. While grasping major and important cases, we must therefore tidy up discipline and correct unhealthy trends in the ideological and political fields.

Comrade Liu Hanzhen stressed: We must correct sectoral malpractices. The leaders at all levels must attach great importance to this work and get a thoroughly good grasp of it.

SICHUAN CURBS UNHEALTHY TRENDS IN FOREIGN AFFAIRS WORK

HK090209 Chengdu Sichuan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 8 Jun 86

[Text] According to SICHUAN RIBAO, in close connection with the reality of foreign affairs work, the province's foreign affairs departments have seized on universal problems that arouse great objections among the masses and worked hard to correct unhealthy trends and carry out in depth the work of straightening out the party style.

In the second half of last year, the central authorities issued a number of circulars on curbing the practice of randomly sending groups and individuals on trips abroad. After investigating and taking stock of the situation, the provincial foreign affairs office discovered that problems of this type had also occurred in Sichuan. The office held that these problems constituted a new unhealthy trend amid the new situation of opening up to the world, and that resolute action must be taken to correct it. Last October, with the agreement of the provincial CPC Committee, a foreign affairs work leadership group was specially set up, which formulated jurisdiction powers regarding approval for temporarily sending people abroad and inviting people abroad to visit.

As a result of strict adherence to the foreign visit procedures, the pactice of randomly sending groups and individuals on visits abroad has been effectively curbed. The number of groups sent abroad from January to May was 55 less than in the same period last year, while the number of individuals sent declined by 42 percent.

XIZANG HOLDS ON-THE-SPOT MEETING ON PARTY STYLE

HK131357 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 11 Jun 86

The regional machinery repairing and assembly plant is an enterprise which has some 300 staff members and workers and which regards the repairing and assembling of motor vehicles as its main work. Over the past few years, this plan has ensured good party style, persistently regarded the regulation of the market as the main work, promoted business, and has ben bold in carrying out reform. This plant has become the first advanced enterprise in the whole region.

At the on-the-spot meeting, some 500 leading comrades from all regional departments, bureaus, and commissions, Lhasa City, and some factories, mines, and enterprises listened to a report on the experience of the machinery repairing plant in doing well in grasping the building of party style and promoting economic development, which was made by (Lou Jin), machinery repairing plant CPC Committee secretary and to reports made by comrades on doing a good job in national unity, on acting as good workshop supervisors and shift and group heads, and on young people who made a slip and who turned from bad people to good people.

All of them unanimously praised the machinery repairing plant for doing work well. They declared that they would bring the machinery repairing plant's experience back and straighten out the party style of their own systems, units, and enterprises, do well in reforming their structures and enterprises, and make more contributions toward invigorating Xizang's economy.

Attending the on-the-spot meeting were leading comrades of the regional CPC committee and regional Discipline Inspection Commission, including Basang, Dangzin, Gyanincain Norbu, and (Yuxi Duoma).

When the meeting was about to conclude, Comrade Basang, regional CPC Committee deputy secretary and regional Discipline Inspection Commission secretary, delivered an important speech. He demanded: CPC committees and party groups at all levels and party members throughout the region must further correct guiding ideology, unify understanding, do well in grasping the positive and negative examples, strengthen education in party spirit, party style, and party discipline, enhance party members' and cadres' ideological conscientiousness, and strengthen immunity [against bad party style]. They must strengthen ideological and political work in the new situation and give further play to the vanguard and exemplary role of party members. They must give full play to the masses' role of supervising party members and cadres. They must draw a clear demarcation line between reform and unhealthy trends, vigorously do well in reforming enterprises, and really straighten out party style.

XIZANG COMMENTARY ON PROBLEMS IN BUILDING PARTY STYLE

HK131401 Lhasa Xizang Regional Service in Mandarin 1130 GMT 11 Jun 86

[Station commentary: "Straighten Out Party Style in a Down-to-Earth Manner"]

[Excerpts] If a unit wants to do its work well and if an enterprise wants to increase production, it is extremely important to do well in building party style. The regional machinery repairing plant can exist in the course of competition and find a new way in the face of a severe test. One of the important reasons is that this plant's party style is good. Good party style can bring about good factory work style and good factory work style can bring about national unity. This experience should be seriously learned by all trades and professions and used by them for reference.

At present, the progress of the work of straightening out party style in our region is, as a whole, healthy and the situation is good. However, we must see that the work of straightening out party style has been started for a short time and has developed very unevenly. Some units and leading comrades have lacked necessary understanding of the work of straightening out party style and have not seriously and vigorously grasped the work of straightening out party style. Results are not marked. Some are afraid of tackling tough problems, have not vigorously investigated and dealt with big and important cases, and have progressed slowly. Some others are weak and have not dealt with things which, they know, are incorrect. Our attention must be drawn to these problems.

At present, our region's structural reform is being tensely carried out. In what kind of mental state shall we deal with this reform? This is a touchstone for testing whether our party style is correct or not. Some people are too impatient to wait. This state of mind is comprehensible but does not conform to the principle of prudence and safety. If we are overanxious for quick results, we always get the results which run counter to our desire. Some people have kept on waiting and taken a passive attitude toward reform and are in a state of inertia, it shows that their selfishness is doing mischief and they have worried about their personal gains and losses. Some others have set straightening out party style against reform and not used the straightening out of party style to promote reform but have held that the straightening out of party style will affect reform. This is a muddled idea.

The correct attitude is that like the machinery plant, we must not wait and must organically integrate the straightening out of party style with reform in enterprises, and with the sense of a high degree of political responsibility, straighten out party style, do a good job in production, and do our work well.

We must use good party style to ensure the smooth progress of reform in enterprises. The material achievements in reform in enterprises will further promote the improvement of party style. In short, there is a great deal of work in straightening out party style. Those who do this work well must continue to work hard, strengthen education in party spirit, party style, and party discipline for party members, enhance their ideological and political awareness, and give full play to the vanguard and exemplary role of party members so as to strive for a basic turn for the better in party style. The units which make slow progress and do not vigorously grasp this work must intensify study, heighten their understanding, quickly catch up, really grasp the work of straightening out party style, and make achievements as soon as possible.

We believe that if the whole party grasps the work of straightening out party style and if all party members work hard together, party style will surely be straightened out in a down-to-earth manner and basically improved at an early date.

YUNNAN MILITARY DISTRICT CORRECTS UNHEALTHY TRENDS

HK121524 Kunming Yunnan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 11 Jun 86

[Text] In the course of correcting unhealthy trends, the Yunnan Military District has persisted in beginning with the leadership organs and leading cadres, been bold in exposing problems, and scored good achievements. The Discipline Inspection Commission of the Central Military Commission has recently transmitted their experience.

In the past, many problems of party style existed in the Yunnan Military District. Some of them were relatively serious. Since the beginning of this year, its CPC Committee's attitude has been resolute, been bold in tackling tough problems, and solved four problems which evoked strong repercussions from the masses:

1. It has corrected the unhealthy trend of rushed promotions. Last year the military district did a rush job in promoting 105 cadres. They received wages and woollen military uniforms in accordance with their new posts. The obstacles to correcting this mistake were very big. However, on the basis of doing ideological work well, in March, its CPC Committee revoked all orders on promotions.

2. It has corrected the mistake of organs setting up companies and engaging in commerce. During party rectification last year, it was discovered that organs had set up enterprise offices to engage in commerce. However, this problem had not been solved all along. Its CPC Committee has now abolished the enterprise offices.

3. It has increased investigating and dealing with the cases of violation of the law and discipline. The CPC Committee has organized personnel to step up investigations both inside and outside the Military District and has now investigated 11 cases.

4. It has corrected the housing unhealthy trends. After retirement, some retired veteran cadres continue to occupy their original houses and some forcibly occupy new houses. After localities allocate them houses, some cadres transferred to civilian work still have not moved out of their original houses. The CPC Committee has regarded clearing of households as a focal point of straightening out party style and reorganizing barracks. At present, 38 households have now moved out of the barracks.

TAIWAN-U.S. TRADE RELATIONS BECOME STRAINED

HK180338 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE in Chinese 1030 GMT 17 Jun 86

[Report: "Trade Relations Between the United States and Taiwan Are Becoming Strained: -- ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE headline]

[Text] Hong Kong, 17 Jun (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) -- According to a news report from Taipei, the trade relations between the United States and Taiwan are becoming strained due to huge U.S. trade deficits plus the ever increasing demands of protectionists. This has been reported by Taiwan newspapers.

According to the newspapers, since last year both sides have held a series of talks on balancing their trade relations. During the talks, the U.S. side strongly demanded its counterpart to relax its restrictions on the import of U.S. goods and to reduce import duties on U.S. goods. At the same time, it also demanded that when buying major equipment, Taiwan should first buy U.S. products. However, despite many rounds of talks, both sides have failed to reach a satisfactory agreement. Under the pressure of protectionism at home, since the beginning of this year the United States has taken relatively strong measures against Taiwan. One is that in accordance with the trade bill, the United States announced that an investigation would be conducted concerning the ratio of overseas sales of the products of Taiwan's ratified joint-venture motor vehicles industries. The other is that it has been decided that beginning next year, restrictions will be imposed on the quantity of Taiwan's machine tools and equipment and textiles exported to the United States. Meanwhile, the United States is considering abolishing the preferential tariff treatment given to Taiwan.

To ease the tension in its relations with the United States resulting from unbalanced trade, Taiwan has recently decided to make talks on balancing bilateral trade relations, which are being held in Taipei, Taiwan indicated that it would reduce tariffs on 71 U.S. products was demanded by the United States, but the reduction rate would be under 50 percent. As for the relaxation of restrictions on the import of U.S. tobacco and wines as demanded by the U.S. side, Taiwan expressed the hope that the United States will respect Taiwan laws governing government-controlled sales of tobacco and wine, but it would give fair treatment to U.S. tobacco and wine.

The bilateral talks are still in progress.

U.S.-Taiwan trade has always been the pillar of Taiwan's foreign trade. Data reveal that the total volume of last year's bilateral trade amounted to $19.516 billion or more, comprising 38.4 percent of Taiwan's total trade volume. This incuded $14.74 billion worth of Taiwan exports to the United States. From January to April this year, Taiwan had a blance of export trade with the United States totaling $5.51 billion, or an increase of 21.4 percent over the same period of last year. Last year, Taiwan imported U.S. goods worth only $1.646 billion, or a decrease of 3 percent as compared with the corresponding period of last year.

WIDE ANGLE MIRROR REPORTS DENG CONSIDERING RETIREMENT

[Text] Hong Kong, June 17 (AFP) -- China's top leader, Deng Xiaoping, 81, is seriously thinking of retirement, a China-watching magazine reported in its latest issue published here on Tuesday. Mr. Deng has indicated several times that he will retire soon, and he repeated his plans recently to two prominent visitors from Hong Kong, WIDE ANGLE reported. Mr. Deng reportedly told two members of a committee drafting a constitution for Hong Kong after the British colony reverts to Chinese rule in 1997 that he would rather give way to younger leaders while alive than see an abrupt transition of power caused by failure of his health. The magazine said that significant changes in the upper echelons of the Chinese power structure were likely to take place before the 13th National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party in 1987. WIDE ANGLE said Mr. Deng had to pick a successor in the plenum to replace him in the Chinese Communist Party's Politburo and Central Advisory Commission. Mr. Deng will be reappointed for another five years if he cannot find a replacement then, the magazine said.

DENG XIAOPING SPEECH CITED AS BASIS FOR REFORM

HK171447 Hong Kong PAI HSING in Chinese No 122, 16 Jun 86 p 17

["Confidential Document": "A Speech of Deng Xiaoping for Restricted Use Only"]

The speech (transcript) for restricted circulation carried here was also delivered by Deng Xiaping in the same period. Because it was a document for restricted use only, the author could speak with even less inhibition, and certain viewpoints were even more incisive. For example, in asserting that: "The method of the party ruling over the country cannot be practiced any more," he pointed out sharply the basis of the reform currently launched on the China mainland.

This speech, made in 1980, has never been published at home or abroad. Therefore, it is a reference document of great value. It shows the readers that Deng Xiaoping had realized as early as in 1980 that the "party's domination over everything" is wrong and that he had also noticed the trade union issue in Poland. At the same time, however, it also reminds us that there has been no indication of a change in the practice of the party's rule over the state during the past 6 years since Deng made the speech. [end editor's notes]

The rights, obligations, and ways of doing things of our party organizations at all levels need modification. At the grass-roots level, we must make up our mind to change the situation in which party members dominate the masses, party branch secretaries dominate all other cadres, and party organizations dominate all other organizations. Our party committees should no longer take on and intervene in everything. The party's leadership should be exercised in the formulation and implementation of its line, principles, and policies. And the essence of the party's work is to support and lead the people in mastering the country. This principle must be implmented throughout the country as well as in party organizations at all levels.

Our party organizations and party members must always stand by the people and immerse themselves among the masses to find out their needs, listen to their appeals, and take different measures to fight for and safeguard their interests. The party organization neither equals the government nor the organ of state power. The method of the party ruling over the country cannot be practiced any more. It is necessary to strengthen the party's leadership over the ideological and political fields. However, neither party organizations nor party members have the right to force the masses to accept their views. Our party organizations should only appeal to and inspire the masses to do something, and exercise influence on them with the exemplary role of party members, rather than force them to accept one idea or another of the party. It is necessary to abrogate all the privileges enjoyed by grass-roots party organizations. If we fail to make up our minds to introduce a reform to solve all these issues, our party will be in a position antagonistic to the masses. Such a situation has already emerged in some localities and units.

Our tradition of centralized party leadership took shape during the period of revolutionary war. The CPC Central Committee especially issued the "Decision on Unification of the Party's Leadership Over Anti-Japanese Bases and Readjustment of the Relations Between Different Organizations" on 1 September 1943. At that time, as our central task was to fight the aggressors, a centralized leadership was imperative. In the period of socialist construction, we have to face much more complicated work, tasks, and problems. Since everything has to be accomplished on the issuance of directives and decisions by the party and nothing can be done otherwise, many problems that should have been solved remain unsolved, and the masses are very discontented with such a situation. Some of our cadres, including high-ranking cadres, still accustomed to the old practices, have not yet realized that this is wrong and they are not ready to make a change. If you try to break down the old conventions, they will ask you: what is the use of the party committee and the secretary then? A provincial CPC Committee secretary said: The centralized leadership is our cherished heritage which must not be discarded.

It is imperative to change the situation in which the party dominates over all organizations. it is necessary to conscientiously consider how to readjust the party's position in the country's social life as a whole and reform our party organizations and state organs. Apart from the methods and forms of leadership, placed before us are a series of issues relating to the reform. We must make specific studies to find out the answers to such questions as which problems should be solved by which units or organizations, in what way these problems should be solved, how the party is going to exercise leadership over various mass organizations, and what role these organizations are going to play, and so on. Unsatisfied with the government-run trade union, the Polish workers established their own independent trade union. Can we say we are not facing a similar problem? Anyway, we surely cannot go on with the old practice any more. We must formulate a law on plant management to properly stipulate various relations.

In brief, it is now clearer and clearer to us that the old conventions we have practiced before are no longer suited to our present and future tasks and, therefore, definitely must be changed. This problem has already shown up abroad, for example in Poland, and at home. We must take real action to find out a method to change the situation. If we do not make a change and if our party fails to exercise leadership skillfully, our party organizations at all levels are very likely to become obstacles to the four modernizations.

I am still pondering over this issue...

FOREIGN MINISTRY CONDEMNS APARTHEID IN SOUTH AFRICA

OW181208 Beijing XINHUA in English 0945 GMT 18 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 18 (XINHUA) -- China reiterated today its strong condemnation of the South African authorities for maintaining apartheid and atrocities in repressing the black masses and attacking neighbouring countries.

A Foreign Ministry spokesman said at the weekly news briefing here that on the occasion of the tenth anniversary of the Soweto carnage commemorated by the South African people, the South African authorities further intensified their armed repression of the activities of the black people, persecution of black leaders and control over the press. At the same time, they made another armed attack against Botswana, he added.

He said: "The Chinese Government and people have always sympathized with and supported the South African people in their struggle against racism and stood for the reasonable proposition and just demand by the international community to impose sanctions against the South African authorities." "We are convinced that with the full support and solidarity of all the justice-upholding countries and people, the South African people will surely be able to attain their goal of eradicating the system of apartheid through unremitting struggle," he said.

PRC VOTES FOR UNSC RESOLUTION ON SOUTH AFRICA

[Text] United Nations, June 18 (XINHUA) -- The U.N. Security Council today failed to adopt a resolution condemning and punishing South Africa, because of opposition by the United States and Britain, two permanent Council members. At the request of Angola, the Security Council called a session to consider South Africa's recent military raid on the Angolan part of Namibe. During the three-day meeting, representatives from many countries condemned South Africa's aggression and demanded sanctions against South Africa. A draft resolution, that was vetoed by the U.S. and Britain, noted that armed invasion of Angola by South Africa constituted "a flagrant violation of the sovereignty and territorial integrity of that country, as well as a serious threat to international peace and security". The draft demanded that South Africa withdraw all its military forces from Angolan territory.

The Security Council decided to impose "selective economic and other sanctions" against South Africa, including suspending all new investments and guaranteed export loans, banning sales of krugerrands, restricting sports and cultural relations, prohibiting new contracts related to the nuclear field and sales of computer equipment. The draft was submitted by five non-aligned countries, including Ghana and Madagascar. China and 11 other Security Council members voted for it, with France abstaining.

PRC DELEGATE SPEAKS AT PARIS MEETING ON S. AFRICA

[Text] Paris, June 17 (XINHUA) -- China today urged the world community to exert strong pressure and impose political and economic sanctions against the South African regime so as to force it to dismantle the apartheid system.

In a speech at the World Conference on Sanctions Against Racist South Africa held in Paris, Zhou Jue, head of the Chinese delegation, denounced the South African authorities for their recent imposition of the state of emergency.

Zhou said wyile talking vociferously about "reform" and their intent to abolish the "pass law" so as to deceive public opinion both at home and abroad, the South African authorities continue to stick to their intransigent position in order to maintain their racist rule. He said that in the past year, about 1,600 people were killed and more than 25,000 detained without interrogation in South Africa.

"Most recently, in order to prevent the South African people from commemorating the 10th anniversary of the Soweto incident, the South African authorities blatantly declared on June 12 the so-called nation-wide 'state of emergency', giving the army and police unlimited power to brutally suppress the South African people," he said.

He also condemned the Pretoria regime for its intransigence in obstructing the independence of Namibia and its intrusions into the neighbouring countries and the recent armed attacks on many African countries. He stressed that "facts have once again demonstrated that the racist policy pursued by the South African authorities constitutes the source undermining peace and stability in southern Africa." He pointed out that such audacity and assuredness on the part of the South African authorities in intransigently persisting in their system of apartheid and their foreign policy of aggression are inseparable from the abetment, connivance and support from certain forces in the world.

Zhou said, "The international community should strictly implement the relevant resolutions adopted by the United Nations, and exert strong pressure on the South African authorities by taking effective measures of sanctions against them in political, economic and other fields so as to force them to abandon thoroughly the system of apartheid." "The Chinese Government and people have always sympathized with and supported the just struggles waged by the South African people against the racist rule, and will not have any political, economic or trade relations with the South African authorities," he stressed. He said, "The Chinese Government and people have provided material support within their means to the people of South Africa and Namibia. We will, as always, join unswervingly the international community and the people of all countries in a continued effort to bring about an end to the racist rule in South Africa."

He proposed the world conference to take the following measures against racism:

-- To demand the South African authorities release Nelson Mandela and other black leaders immediately and unconditionally, lift the ban on nationalist organizations and adopt practical measures to abolish apartheid.

-- To appeal to the international community to further increase its political, moral and material support to the people of South Africa and Namibia, and front-line countries.

-- To call on the U.N. Security Council to take effective sanctions against South Africa in accordance with the relevant provisions of chapter 7 of the U.N. Charter. Pending a security decision on this matter, all countries should implement relevant resolutions adopted by the U.N. General Assembly and Security Council on the imposition of sanctions on South Africa and strictly implement resolutions 418 (1977) and 558 (1984) of the Security Council concerning an arms embargo on South Africa.

TRADE LIBERALIZATION IN GENEVA URGED

[Text] Geneva, June 17 (XINHUA) -- Removing barriers and liberalizing trade are major issues to be resolved by the international community, a Chinese representative said today at the special council of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT). Qian Jiadong, China's permanent representative to the United Nations office at Geneva, said international protectionist pressures show no sign of declining, but instead keep increasing.

Agricultural trade frictions are intensifying, and trade restrictions have notably expanded in the textiles sector, he pointed out. "It is hoped that the new round of multilateral trade negotiations will contribute to strengthening and improving the trading system, and to promoting trade and economic development of the world as a whole and of the developing countries in particular," he added. Qian said China is regulating imports and exports by increased use of such economic levers as exchange rates, customs duties, taxes and export credits. According to Qian, China's total import-export volume for the next five years has been targeted for an annual average growth rate of seven percent, reaching 83 billion U.S. dollars by 1990.

He also assured that China is committed to pursuing its present policy of opening to the outside world and activating its domestic economy. The current economic structural reform is developing both in width and depth, he said. Qian said the scope of imports depends on export earnings, and under the present conditions, foreign exchange shortages will occur from time to time. Government measures to restrict excessive imports are therefore necessary to deal with the current situation, and they are justified even under gatt provisions, he continued.

China, Qian said, wants to resume its membership in GATT and to attend September's ministerial meeting. At present, China is attending GATT meetings in the capacity of observer.

GATT VIEWS TRADE PROTECTIONISM, PRC MEMBERSHIP

OW180834 Beijing XINHUA in English 0724 GMT 18 Jun 86

[Text] Geneva, June 17 (XINHUA) -- Participants at the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) special council meeting today criticized rising trade protectionism in the world. Several representatives from developing countries to the 91-nation body criticized trade restrictions by developed countries on imports of farm produce, textiles and other goods from the developing countries. They demanded the enforcement of GATT free trade rules.

Representatives from India, Sri Lanka, Nigeria and Singapore called on the developed countries to keep their promise at the 1982 GATT ministerial council to renounce protectionism. Some of them criticised U.S. import restraints on farm produce and textiles. EEC representative Tran Van Thinh also called for an end to protectionism in the interests of global trade development. He also expressed support for resuming China's membership in GATT and for China's participation in the new round of international multilateral trade talks.

REAGAN SUGGESTS U.S., SOVIET FOREIGN MINISTERS MEET

[Text] Washington, June 14 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan has sent a letter to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev calling for a meeting between Secretary of State George Shultz and Soviet Foreign Minister Eduard Shevardnadze to prepare for the next superpower summit.

"THE WASHINGTON POST" quoted unidentified White House officials as saying the letter, "conciliatory" in tone, was delivered by Arthur Hartman, U.S. ambassador to the Soviet Union, last week. In the letter, the paper said, Reagan proposed that Shultz and Shevardnadze had been scheduled to meet in mid-May to prepare for a summit in the United States this year, but the meeting was cancelled by Moscow on April 15 shortly after the U.S. bombing raid on Libya.

The letter was sent at a time when Reagan's decision to disregard the SALT II Treaty has drawn harsh criticism from the Soviet Union and when relations between the two superpowers seem to be deteriorating after a promising meeting between Reagan and Gorbachev in Geneva last November.

The Soviet Union warned that if the United States really scraps the SALT II Treaty, it would affect "in the most serious and negative way" overall U.S.-Soviet relations and the chance for a second summit in particular. However, at a news conference last week Reagan predicted there would be another summit with Gorbachev, but he did not say when.

WEINBERGER SAYS U.S. TO STUDY USSR PROPOSAL

[Text] Washington, June 18 (XINHUA) -- U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger has rejected key points of the latest Soviet proposal for a 30 percent cut in strategic arms in exchange for a U.S. agreement not to withdraw from the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty for at least 15 years, the CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR reported today.

The proposal, made by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev Monday, would also allow the United States to conduct "laboratory research" into the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) which the Soviet Union had previously insisted be abandoned.

The White House said the Reagan adminstration is giving the proposal "serious study and consideration" and looks forward to "discussing the matter in the arms talks in Geneva" with the Soviet Union. But Weinberger told reporters yesterday the latest Soviet offer is "just another method of defining (U.S.) strategic defense out of existence." "I would be very much opposed to anything that gave up our right to withdraw" from the ABM Treaty which prohibits the development, test and deployment of weapons designed to intercept intercontinental nuclear missiles, he said.

Earlier this month, Weinberger dismissed the Soviet proposal, floated in the Geneva talks but not made public at that time, as a "side-door" scheme to kill the U.S. "star wars" program.

Press reports here say the Reagan administration is divided over how to respond to the new Soviet initiative. Some officials see little merit in it while others believe it may offer at least the basis for fruitful negotiations. Analysts predict that the administration is not likely to formulate a clear-cut response before the windup of the current round of Geneva talks June 26.

ECONOMIST CITED ON PRC ECONOMIC REFORM

[Text] New York, June 17 (XINHUA) -- A leading U.S. economist said here today that the ongoing economic reform in China is very sound, creating greater opportunities for future development. "China is developing its own model, an approach that combines social objectives, historical perspectives and economic goals. The unique blend is ever important," explained Robert D. Hormats, director of the Goldman, Sachs and Co., a major U.S. investment and securities firm based in New York.

In an exclusive interview in his office in Manhattan with XINHUA today, Hormats noted "China is a big and important country. It should have its own model, not imported from somewhere else. It may incorporate good points from other countries, but the ultimate products are Chinese."

Hormats visited China last May. He said that during the recent trip which took him to Beijing, Shanghai and Dalian, he saw that "the new economic measures work. The state has a role to play, though reduced somewhat. It is essentially a market-oriented socialist economy, and not capitalist at all." "The Chinese are in an economic long march and the world should not expect them to achieve instant success as these things take time. But there is no doubt that the reform will lead to a major boost to production and the quality of life of the Chinese people in a reasonably short period of time," he added.

Hormats had held important government posts before he joined the investment firm. He was the senior economic adviser in the White House in the early 1970s. He served as deputy U.S. trade representative during the Carter administration and as assistant secretary of the state for economic and business affairs under the Reagan administration in 1981-82.

He said that China is a developing country and its cautious approach to the world financial market is "absolutely right." "There are three key issues when a country turns to the international financial markets," he observed.

-- Appropriate amount of exposure. "Do not borrow too much that you get into debt problems," he warned. A balanced ratio of debt servicing to a country's export earnings should range between 15 to 20 percent.

-- Effective use of the borrowed money. Obtained funds must be utilized to finance feasible and good projects that can generate enough money to ensure substantial returns. That is the productive borrowing.

-- A combination of debts in different currencies and maturities. It is very bad for a country to get into a situation where it has too much of its borrowing denominated in any one currency. When that currency appreciates, it will cost more to repay it.

He expected that China would eventually have more access to the world financial markets. Among the three major regional markets, North American, Europe and Asia, China might have an equal chance, leaning toward Asia because of the geographical proximity.

U.S. STOCK EXCHANGE OFFICIAL HAILS PRC FINANCIAL POLICY

[Text] New York, June 12 (XINHUA) -- An influential American economist, fresh from a visit to China, has praised the country's financial policy, describing it as "well-balanced" and "prudent."

Rogers M. Kubarych, vice-president and chief economist of the New York Stock Exchange, said China's ratio of foreign debt is very low in comparison to its export earnings and national income. Therefore, China's capacity for absorbing foreign debt is and should be high, in comparison with other developing countries, Kubarych said.

In an exclusive interview with XINHUA in his New York City office today, the respected economist said he did not agree with the idea that the shortage of foreign currency in China is the ultimate obstacle to the country's ability to do business. "This constraint can be relaxed if the right strategy and planning are insituted," he said. If large projects such as the development of China's natural gas, coal or telecommunications industries are carried out, suppliers' credits from exporters can often be utilized to help pay the costs, he said.

Kubarych described it as "natural" that there are periods during its development process when a country runs a certain amount of current account deficit, and to finance the deficit, it has to seek long-term funding through external borrowing. "Long-term funding with a modest current account deficit is a legitimate development strategy," he explained. "Consequently, I expect China to be in the world market for years to come."

During his 10-day stay in China, Kubarych said he was highly impressed by the progress made under the policy of opening to the outside world and the understanding he gained of the problems now facing the country, through conversations with Chinese officials, bankers and entrepreneurs.

Unlike many other countries which fail to detect problems before they crop up, Kubarych said "we have got a clear impression that officials in China recognize the problems, and act intelligently ahead of time to make sure that they are manageable. That is a good sign of success."

SHANGHAI OFFICIALS MEET WITH U.S. DELEGATION

[Text] Shanghai, June 9 (XINHUA) -- Robert Strauss, head of a U.S. delegation and former chairman of the Democratic Party, said here today that he will come to Shanghai again and again to seek more investment opportunities.

Strauss' delegation includes 60 bankers, entrepreneurs and lawyers, and was here to attend the three-day Shanghai International Economic Relations and Trade Meeting which closed here today. Strauss, a partner in the legal firm of Akin, Gump, Strauss, Hauer and Feld, has visited Shanghai three times over the past seven years.

Strauss said that great changes have taken place in China in recent years and the current economic reform shows the orientation of China's development. Those factors are attracting American entrepreneurs and bankers to invest in Shanghai.

Lu Guoxian, deputy director of the Shanghai Commission of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade, said that economic relations and trade show that "a good start" has been made between the U.S. and Shanghai, China's biggest industrial and commercial center. The official disclosed that Shanghai had absorbed American investment totalling 367 million U.S. dollars by the end of 1985. This is second after Hong Kong among investment from all foreign countries and regions.

Vice-mayor of Shanghai Li Zhaoji said that Shanghai is willing to cooperate with all overseas investors from economic, trade, financial, and science and technology fields. He noted that Shanghai has enjoyed the preferential conditions and special open policies granted by the central government.

Strauss and other U.S. delegates showed great concern for further development of Shanghai-U.S. economic relations and trade at the meeting. They offered opinions and suggestions for further development of the bilateral economic cooperation. Representatives of 15 U.S. businesses held negotiations with Shanghai industrial, communications, banking, foreign trade and agricultural departments, and concluded letters of intent on a number of projects. An American cable corporation intends to provide a Shanghai cable plant with technological services to bring its products up to American standards.

PRC TRADE MINISTER ON SINO-U.S. ECONOMIC RELATIONS

HK180729 Beijing GUOJI SHANGBAO in Chinese 5 Jun 86 p 1

[Dispatch by reporter Li Bida: "Zheng Tuobin Optimistic About the Development of Sino-U.S. Economics and Relations"]

[Text] "There is tremendous potential for developing our bilateral relations in many areas, including economics, trade, science, technology, intellectual development, and administration and management. Fully tapping this potential is a priority task now for China and the United States in accelerating the development of their long-term stable economic and trade relations," said Zheng Tuobin, minister of foreign economic relations and trade, on 2 June when he attended the Sino-U.S. trade and investment law symposium in Beijing.

A question of greatest concern to people is what the prospects are for the development of economic and trade relations between China and the United States. Zheng said he "is optimistic" about this. He thinks that there are three favorable factors worth noting: First, there are friendly state relations between China and the United States which have created a relatively favorable environment for continuing to develop their bilateral economic and trade relations. Second, there has already been a fine beginning for their bilateral economic and trade cooperation, and all the circles in the two countries have the good desire for further development of cooperation. Third, China and the United States each have their economic advantages and there are many spheres in which they can compensate for each others' deficiencies; therefore, there is tremendous potential for them to develop cooperation in many spheres.

Minister Zheng Tuobin pointed out that the following was vital for the further development of Sino-U.S. economic and trade relations:

First, they should quicken their pace in removing the negative factors that hinder the development of their bilateral economic and trade relations.

In U.S. legislation, there have been various kinds of special regulations toward China which have had a serious negative impact on Sino-U.S. economic and trade relations. Over the past few years, the U.S. Government has made some progress in a few spheres to solve these problems. However, the United States should quicken its pace in doing so and radically abrogate or revise the legislation that is not suited to the times.

Second, the two sides should conscientiously promote the balanced development of Sino-U.S. trade.

Over the past 10 years or so, China has almost always had a huge deficit in its direct trade with the United States. From 1972 to 1985, the trade deficits on the Chinese side in Sino-U.S. trade totalled as much as over $16 billion. If we fail to change this long-standing trade deficit, it will certainly affect China's payment capacity and hinder the growth of its import from the United States and the continuous development of Sino-U.S. trade. We hope that there will be even greater development in Sino-U.S. trade under the conditions of increased Chinese exports to the United States in order to strike a positive trade balance. In order to achieve this balance, both China and the United States should make efforts. We hope that the U.S. Government will further open the market, abolish certain undesirable restrictions to imports from China, and conscientiously encourage imports from China.

Third, the two sides should continue to increase the level of their economic and technological cooperation.

China's import of technology will continue to switch from importing technology mainly for special new projects to focusing on importing technology for the technological transformation of its existing enterprises. It will particularly encourage the import of the technology that can help it increase its exports. Transfer of technology and the level of the technology to be transferred will become an important condition for China and the United States in selecting cooperation items. Under the new situation of the quick development of Sino-U.S. economic and trade relations, the level of economic and technological cooperation between the two countries should be one of the important yardsticks for measuring the economic and trade relations between them. Over the past few years, China and the United States have scored achievements in their cooperation in this area. However, we should say that there have as yet been very great human restrictions on the transfer of technology. We hope that the friends in various circles in the United States will continue their efforts to remove the existing human restrictions and continue to make new contributions in developing Sino-U.S. economic and technological cooperation.

Fourth, the two sides should vigorously intensify their cooperation and create even more favorable conditions for U.S. enterprises to invest in China.

Over the past 2 years, Sino-U.S. joint ventures and cooperative ventures and U.S.-owned enterprises have developed relatively quickly on the basis of equality and mutual benefit, but it is necessary to continue to accelerate their development. We hope that the Sino-U.S. agreement on avoiding double taxation and preventing tax evasion will come into force as soon as possible and that the talks on the agreement on protecting investment between China and the United States will make quicker progress in order to facilitate quicker development of the investment cooperation between the two countries.

XINHUA ROUNDUP VIEWS U.S.-CANADA 'TRADE WAR'

["Roundup: Canada-U.S. Trade War Casts Shadow Over Free Trade Talks by Zhang Yuanting and Chen Nanxin" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Ottawa, June 5 (XINHUA) -- The current trade war between Canada and the United States with its focus on the imposition of tariffs has cast a grave shadow over the ongoing free trade negotiations which started on May 21. Without warning Canada, the United States announced on May 22, one day after the free trade talks started, that it would reimpose a 35 percent tariff on Canada's cedar products, a move which would bring Canada a loss of more than 15 million Canadian dollars (over 10 million U.S. dollars) and make 4,000 related workers jobless.

This protectionist move on the part of the United States has angered both the Canadian Government and people. Prime Minister Brian Mulroney charged that the imposition of U.S. tariffs was "appalling and unacceptable." He asked the Reagan administration to consider cancelling the decision and compensate for the losses suffered by Canada's lumber industry.

The rejection of Canada's demand by the United States led to Canada's announcement on June 2 of measures to reimpose and increase tariffs on imported U.S. products such as books, computer parts, cider, christmas trees, oat meal and oil for making asphalt. The measures are to take effect tomorrow, the same day when U.S. tariff increases on imported cedar shakes and shingles from Canada become effective.

It is estimated that as a result of Canada's retaliation, the country will earn annually nearly 80 million Canadian dollars (50 million U.S. dollars), an amount which more than offsets the losses it suffers for its cedar exports to the United States.

The situation went from bad to worse as the U.S. International Trade Commission voted on the same day (June 2) to allow penalty duties of almost 41 percent on Canada's steel products used in oil and gas wells, the exports of which were valued at about 90 million U.S. dollars last year.

Despite the retalitatory measures against the United States, the Mulroney government is concerned that the intensified trade war might harm the interests of both countries, Canada in particular. First of all, Canada is afraid that its penalty duties on U.S. products might lead to further retaliations from the United States. For the country's exports rely heavily on U.S. markets. Last year, Canada registered a 20 billion Canadian dollars (13 billion U.S. dollars) surplus in its trade with the United States. Canada, of course, wants to maintain this status quo, if not to increase the surplus.

The huge U.S. trade deficit with Canada has evoked public criticism on the United States. Among the 300 bills presented to the U.S. Congress calling upon the Reagan administration to take protectionist actions to curb imports, many call for the reduction of imports from Canada, covering such items as iron and steel, cooper, sugar, asbestos, fish and wood products.

Secondly, Canada's retaliatory move has also met with opposition from some companies and enterprises at home. Publishers have expressed dissatisfaction with the price hike for imported books after the imposition of tariffs. U.S. books and publications account for 90 percent of Canada's books imports, valued at more than 336 millions Canadian dollars (over 224 million U.S. dollars). The government retaliatory measures have disquieted the lumber industry, which fears that its softwood exports might become the next target of U.S. retaliations. Last year, Canada's softwood exports to the United States stood at 3.5 billion Canadian dollars (2.3 billion U.S. dollars).

Since Prime Minister Mulroney last September accepted President Reagan's proposal to hold free trade talks between the two countries, a heated debate on the necessity of such talks has swept all over Canada. Some western provinces voiced their support for the negotiations because they have natural resources and semi-finished products to export, while Eastern provinces like Ontario and Quebec, which are not in a position to compete with U.S. giant companies, have their reservation about the talks.

Mulroney, who is in favor of free trade talks with the United States, held that through free trade with the United States, Canada will become stronger in its economy and more competative in the world market.

Canada and the United States are each other's largest trading partners. Two-way trade between the two countries exceeded 160 billion Canadian dollars (over 106 billion U.S. dollars) in 1985. The United States sells more products to Canada than to the member states of the European Community, and its exports to Canada are twice as much as those to Japan.

The Canada-U.S. trade war has cast a grave shadow over the just started free trade negotiations. Whether or not Ottawa and Washington will reach an agreement on removing trade barriers still remains to be seen. But one thing is certain, that is, both governments have a long and tortuous way to go before they can obtain their goals.

PRC REFUSES COMMENT ON 'FISHERMEN' DEFECTING TO ROK

HK190526 Hong Kong AFP in English 0424 GMT 19 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 19 (AFP) -- China refused to comment Thursday on reports of the apparent defection of 19 people who reached South Korea from China in a small boat. A Foreign Ministry spokesman, asked to comment on the report, said: "We have nothing to tell you."

The group, initially described as fishermen in distress, in fact included farmers, civil servants, merchants, truck drivers, welders and a cook, newspapers in Seoul reported.

(They were said to have travelled by foot and train from the Guangxi Autonomous Region in southern China to the Shandong peninsula in the north, where they bought a small boat and sailed across the Yellow Sea to the west coast of South Korea.)

KIM IL-SONG DENIES DPRK PLAN TO INVADE SOUTH

[Text] Pyongyang, June 17 (XINHUA) -- The Democratic People's Republic of Korea President Kim Il-song said today the North does not want to "invade southward" and has no will to impose communism on the South. Kim told a Chinese military goodwill delegation led by Li Jiu-long, commander of the Jinan units of the People's Liberation Army, that the Korean reunification problem ought to be solved in a "peaceful way."

Kim said North Korea does not want to fight a war, which will damage the country's construction. Korea needs peace, he said, and the North is taking measures to ease tension on the peninsula. He said South Korean and U.S. propaganda on the threats of "invasion from the North" is an excuse for the U.S. occupancy of South Korea.

Kim told the Chinese delegation, which included several Chinese volunteers who fought the U.S. troops in Korea in the 1950s, that the Korean people will never forget the Chinese people's help during and after the war.

After the interview the Korean leader feted the visitors. The delegation arrived in Pyongyang on June 13.

DPRK PROPOSES TRIPARTITE TALKS TO EASE TENSION

(By reporter Gao Haorong)

[Text] Pyongyang, 17 Jun (XINHUA) -- The Supreme Headquarters of the Korean People's Army [KPA] issued a press communique today, calling for tripartite talks between the military authorities of North and South Korea and the United States to ease tension and eliminate confrontation on the Korean peninsula.

Specifically North Korea proposed that talks be held in Panmunjo, or another place in July between the minister of the People's Armed Forces of the DPRK, the commander in chief of the UN forces in [illegible] Korea, and the South Korean defense minister.

The press communique was released by Yi Hong-sun, deputy chief of general staff of the DPRK People's Army, at a press conference at the People's Cultural Palace in Pyongyang today. The press communique said: Armed confrontation along the Korean demilitarized zone "has reached the hightest level since the cease-fire, causing a most serious situation of distrust and military confrontation." The tension on the Korean peninsula must be eased as soon as possible, and war must be prevented at any cost. Under the present circumstances, "it is necessary to, first of all, adopt measures for relaxation in the military field." "Only if relaxation in the military field is realized is it possible to resume the dialogue, which has been interrupted, in a good atmosphere and to seek the correct way of peaceful reunification based on mutual trust."

According to Yi Hong-sun, the above-mentined proposal was contained in a letter sent on 9 June by O Chin-u, first deputy for the Supreme Commander of the KPA and minster of the People's Armed Forces, respectively to William Livsey, commander in chief of the UN Forces in South Korea, and Yi Ki-paek. Due to delay caused by the other side, the letter was delivered to the U.S. and South Korean sides at Panmunjom at noon today.

In the letter, O Chin-u said that the military authorities from the three sides may discuss "questions concerning the suspension of military exercises and arms buildup, reduction of troops and military expenditures, and observation of the original stipulations in the Korean cease-fire agreement," or they may discuss questions put forth by the United States and South Korea "which are conducive to easing the tension on the Korean peninsula."

O Chin-u proposed that talks be held in Panmunjom or another place that is convenient to all parties. O Chin-U proposed that the talks be held in July, and that a preparatory meeting be held in Panmunjom on 27 June to be participated by three working representatives from each side and an appropriate number of entourage members.

O Chin-u urged the United States and the South Korean authorities to pay attention and make a positive response to North Korea's latest peace proposal.

PROPOSAL FOR TALKS WITH U.S., ROK LAUDED

OW171828 Beijing XINHUA in English 1801 GMT 17 Jun 86

["Commentary: A Constructive Proposal for Easing Tension on the Korean Peninsula (by Gao Haorong)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Pyongyang, June 17 (XINHUA) -- A proposal, made here today by the Supreme Command of the Korean People's Army (KPA) calling for talks between the military authorities of the North and South parts of Korea and the United States, is a real and constructive proposal for easing present tensions and confrontation.

This is the first time that North Korea has made such a proposal since the division of the Korean nation 41 years ago.

The proposed talks involve O Chin-u, minister of the People's Armed Forces of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK), William Livsey, commander in chief of U.N. Forces in South Korea and Li Ki-paek, South Korean "defense minister."

Letters containing the proposal were sent today to the concerned parties in Panmunjom, a truce village.

The supreme command of the KPA considers it urgent that those who hold real power in the armies of the North and the South sit around one table and discuss all possible military measures for easing tensions and confrontation on the Korean peninsula and to arrange favorable circumstances for dialogue.

Since the beginning of the year, the unstable situation on the peninsula has aroused concern. The North-South dialogues which began in 1984 have been suspended due to the "Team Spirit 86" joint military exercises held in February by the United States and South Korea.

The United States and South Korea also announced that such joint military exercises will be held each year until 1988. Further, they decided at the "annual security consultative meeting" and "U.S.-S. Korean military commission meeting" in April to maintain U.S. forces in South Korea. The U.S. and South Korea have staged a series of joint military maneuvers since the end of "Team Spirit 86". During this time South Korean troops have also held consecutive military exercises without the United States. These developments have caused great concern within the DPRK.

In view of the situation, the DPRK has proposed the advent of talks between the military authorities of the two sides to "discuss the ceasing of military exercises and the reduction of armies and military expenditures and the keeping of the original rules of the truce agreement." This will certainly contribute to the elimination of strains caused by military confrontation and to the avoidance of military clashes.

The North-South dialogues have made some progress in the last two years, but their resumption requires some preconditions. If the proposal was accepted by South Korea and the United States, it would no doubt help promote the reopening of the economic talks, the Red Cross talks and a preliminary meeting for parliamentary talks between the North and the South.

North Korean leaders want the North-South talks to continue thus paving the way for an eventual summit meeting. This desire once again shows the North's sincerity.

In January this year, North Korea announced it would stop large-scale military exercises beginning in February and all military exercises during the period of the North-South dialogues. This time, the North has suggested that all military authorities involved in Korea hold talks in July in Panmunjom or a place convenient to all participants. It has proposed that all parties hold a working session June 27 as a first step.

The southern side and the United States are now expected to make an active respose to the proposal which they must take into careful consideration.

DPRK PLANS CONFERENCE FOR NUCLEAR-FREE KOREA

OW181050 Beijing XINHUA in English 1025 GMT 18 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 18 (XINHUA) -- The Democratic People's Republic of Korea will hold an international peace conference in September to promote the concept of a nuclear-free Korean peninsula, it was announced here today.

Korean Ambassador to China Sin In-ha told journalists here that the conference would be held in Pyongyang from September 6 to 8. He said it was being sponsored by several political parties and social organizations and his country's International Liaison Committee for Independent and Peaceful Reunifiction of Korea.

Delegations and representatives from political parties and governments from countries, international organizations and democratic groups concerned with the promotion of nuclear-free peace would be invited. Sin said the Korean peninsula was one of the world's most likely places for the outbreak of a nuclear war. The elimination of this danger was vital to the maintenance of peace in Asia and the rest of the world. He added: "This year is International Peace Year. The Korean people are willing to live peacefully with all peace-loving people throughout the world."

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON HU YAOBANG'S EUROPEAN VISIT

Hu's Remarks at Paris Dinner

[By reporter Wang Wei]

[Excerpts] Paris, 17 Jun (XINHUA) -- French Prime Minister Jacques Chirac gave a banquet in honor of Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the CPC Central Committee, in the Foreign Ministry tonight.

Prime Minister Chirac spoke first during the banquet.

Then General Secretary Hu Yaobang delivered a speech. Hu Yaobang first reviewed the Sino-French friendship which goes back to ancient times. He said: "Since the second half of the 19th century, Chinese people have been coming to France and have told other Chinese people about what they have seen and heard here. Many monumental works from France's magnificent cultural treasure-house have successively been translated into Chinese. In the early years of this century, a large number of Chinese youth came to your country to seek ways for national salvation and rejuvenation. Chinese leaders Zhou Enlai and Deng Xiaoping were outstanding representatives of them. These facts fully reflect the profound foundation of the exchanges and friendship between the peoples of our two countries."

Hu Yaobang pointed out: The far-sighted policy decision made by General de Gaulle and Chairman Mao 22 years ago to establish diplomatic relations has produced rich fruits. China and France are carrying out effective cooperation in many fields. He said: "In recent years, the leaders of our two countries have held consultations on major international issues on a regular basis. Bilateral trade has increased yearly, economic and technological cooperation has expanded, the exchange of visits has grown, and the number of students studying in each other's country under exchange programs has been increasing constantly. Facts prove that the development of friendly and cooperative relations between China and France not only brings benefits to both Chinese and French people, but also is in the interest of the cause of the maintenance of world peace."

Hu Yaobang added: "The gratifying development of Sino-French relations is attributed to the joint efforts made over a long time by the governments and personalities of various circles of our two countries. Here, I must particularly mention Mr Chirac. Either as a prime minister or as a mayor, you always concern yourself about the friendship and cooperation between China and France. You have made great contributions to promoting our bilateral relations. Not long ago, Your Excellency said that you had a special feeling for Sino-French relations and wanted to promote their overall development. I appreciate very much your remarks. Indeed, there is still potential for the development of relations between our two countries. Both China and France have long histories and brilliant cultures, cherish their own national independence, pursue independent foreign policies of peace, are devoted to maintaining peace, seek development, and respect each other as equals. These common points provide our two countries with a solid political basis for sound cooperation in all fields.

"China has its economic strength and weaknesses, and so does France. Our two countries can make up each other's weaknesses. This fact provides an extremely good objective condition for further developing economic and technological cooperation between our two countries. I am convinced that with our common attention and cultivation, Sino-French friendly and cooperative relations in all fields are bound to reach a new high and will continue to develop in a stable manner on a long-term basis. We are willing to join our French friends in making unremitting efforts for this objective."

On 17 June General Secretary Hu Yaobang laid a wreath at the tomb of the Unknown Soldiers near the Arc de Triomphe in Paris. In the afternoon he visited Musee du Louvre and Chateau de Versailles.

Additional Remarks by Li Peng

[Report by correspondent Tang Hongjun: "Li Peng Says China's Door Opening Up to the Outside World Will Never Shut"]

[Text] Paris, 17 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Chinese Vice Premier Li Peng said to over 300 friends from French industrial and commercial circles this afternoon: China is now implementing a policy of opening up to the outside world to learn about advanced technology and management experience from abroad. This open door will never be shut again. Li Peng said this at a meeting with people from French industrial and commercial circles that the French-Chinese Committee held for him.

Li Peng said: In history, China was a developed country, developed not only in culture but also in science, technology, and economy. However, as some of the feudal dynasties in the past implemented a policy of closing our country to international intercourse, China did not learn from advanced foreign experience and became backward. This historic mistake will not be repeated by us.

In regard to the question of what are the major spheres in which China wants to learn from foreign countries at present, Li Peng said: In light of the current needs of China's construction, we hope to carry out cooperation with foreign friends in the areas of energy, communications, electronics, telecommunications metallurgy, nonferrous metallurgy, and other spheres. In the above-mentioned spheres, not only large projects, but also medium-sized and small projects of cooperation are welcome. He gave the example that as the Chinese people's living standard rises, so does their demand for cosmetics. There is very great potential in China's cosmetic market. France is well-known for its production of perfume, but so far China and France have not yet carried out any cooperation in this sphere. Therefore, China and France can carry out cooperation in any medium-sized and small projects that France is good at and that China needs.

As for the ways to carry out cooperation between China and other countries, Li Peng put forward the following three proposals: the first is normal trade and contacts. In order to achieve continuous development in this area, both sides must overcome some difficulties, concerning which, the most important is to solve the problem of trade deficits of the Chinese side. Otherwise, it will be impossible to maintain the development of trade for a long time. As far as China is concerned, in addition to providing a full supply of handicraft products, textiles, garments and other traditional products, China can also export large amounts of coal, nonferrous metal, cotton and so on. China is willing to export these products in exchange for foreign equipment and thus attain a goal of mutual benefit.

The second proposal is to provide China with preferential loans to facilitate export of French products. He stressed that this could not be said to benefit China alone because it was also an effective method to increase export of French products.

The third proposal is that China welcomes people from foreign industrial and commercial circles to set up factories in China, which can both be Chinese-foreign joint ventures and foreign-owned enterprises and which can also be invested in jointly by several countries. He said that the new investment law approved by the NPC session closed in last April provides legal guarantee for foreign industrialists and businessmen and they ought to have confidence in it.

Li Answers Questions

[Report by Tang Hongjun]

[Text] Paris, 17 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- At a reception held by the Sino-French committee this afternoon, Vice Premier Li Peng, who is accompanying General Secretary Hu Yaobang on a tour of France, answered the impromptu questions put to him by French businessmen.

Question: What measures will China adopt in the development of urban transportation and communications?

Answer: At present, transportation and communications in China's major cities are very strained. It is said that the subway in Paris carries 3 million passengers per day, while the subway in Moscow carries 5 million passengers per day. This shows that subways are a good system of transportation. However, their disadvantage is their high cost. In light of the present economic conditions in China, we can only build subways in a limited way. At present, we should primarily develop public buses to ease the strained transportation and communications. As for transportation in the suburban areas, we will build some light railroads and expressways to ease the strain.

Question: Please explain whether it is a good method to carry out cooperations on compensatory trade with China in the field of the coal industry.

Answer: It is a good method. China has very rich coal resources. At present, on the one hand, we are mining coal with modern methods; and on the other hand, we allow the peasants to mine in a limited way in the deep coal mines. Over the last few years, the latter has developed very fast and shown great vitality. It would surely achieve greater development if the pattern of compensatory trade could effect some technical transformations in it.

Question: What are the prospects for China's using petroleum, gas, and petrogas?

Answer: At present, China's energy resources are mainly coal, petroleum, hydropower, and natural gas. Annual petroleum output has now reached 120 million tons, and hopefully will reach 150 million tons in a few years. Nevertheless, as far as such as a large country, with 1 billion population, is concerned, this is not quite sufficient. Therefore, we will primarily use petroleum for extracting petrochemical products, rather than merely using it as fuel.

Gas is the most widely used fuel in urban areas. In places adjacent to the natural gas-producing areas, civil gas and industrial gas will be developed simultaneously. China has very good prospects in the gasification and liquefaction of coal. We are willing to carry out cooperation with foreign friends in this area.

Question: What are China's prospects in the improvement of packaging methods?

Answer: Generally speaking, China is very backward in this area. As a result, the market competitiveness of Chinese commodities is affected. In order to enter the international market, the packaging of Chinese products must be improved. Foreign friends ares welcome to carry out cooperation with us in this aspect.

Question: How will China protect the interests of foreign investors in taxation?

Answer: I am sorry! As I am not an expert in this field, I might possibly give you an incorrect answer. However, I firmly believe that as long as the policy of opening up to the outside world is adopted and foreign friends are welcome to make investments, China will surely protect the legitimate interests of investors. It is a fact that the present taxation system in China isnot perfect. Nevertheless, I deeply believe that with the passage of time, the taxation system will gradually become perfect.

Then, a motorcade took Hu and his party to Vienne, a city 27 kilometers south of Lyon, where they visited the Orlac company, France's biggest dairy-food processor, which also has commercial links with China. At a luncheon hosted by Noir and the Government of Rhone Province Gilbert Carrere, General Secretary Hu praised, among other things, the contributions made by Rhone and Lyon to Sino-French contacts which date back to the ancient "silk road."

In the afternoon, Hu and his party left Lyon for Paris on a special airbus-310 aircraft, a number of which have been sold to China's national airline CAAC. This evening in the capital the general secretary will host a dinner in honor of Presient Francois Mitterrand at the Chinese Embassy.

Roundup of Hu' Visit to France

["Round-Up: China Envisages Closer Sino-French Cooperation" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Paris, June 17 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese Communist Party Leader Hu Yaobang today praised the traditional friendship between China and France and said he envisages closer bilateral relations during a series of meetings with French political leaders.

Speaking at a dinner held in his honor by French Prime Minister Jacques Chirac, he said China and France both have long histories and brilliant cultures, cherish their national independence, pursue independent foreign policies of peace, respect each other as equals and are devoted to maintaining peace. He said the similarities in their approaches, coupled by their complementary economies, provide the two countries with a solid political base for "sound cooperation in all fields," which is bound to reach a new high and grow steadily on a long-term basis.

General Secretary Hu, invited by French President Francois Mitterrand, is the second top Chinese leader to visit France in two years after Premier Zhao Zhiyang's trip here in June 1984. In recent years, French and Chinese leaders have held consultations on major international issues on a regular basis and bilateral trade volume has increased annually, reaching 830 million U.S. dollars last year. "The development of the friendly and cooperative relations between China and France not only brings benefits to both Chinese and French people, but also is in the interests of the cause of the maintenance of world peace," Hu said.

Chirac said France and China share identical views on world peace and stand for solving conflicts through dialogue. He also expressed his appreciation for China's consistent support for European unity. The French prime minister said because China's economic reform and modernization program have proven decisive to the destiny of the world, France attaches great importance to its cooperation with China.

Earlier today, Hu said at a luncheon hosted by President of the National Assembly Jacques Chaban-Delmas that it is the common desire of both countries to educate their children to dedicate themselves to the long-term bilateral friendship and to the cause of the world. Noting that he and Chaban-Delmas were both born in 1915, Hu said they were young men in their 20s during World War II and had dedicated themselves to the liberation of their own countries. "We saw with our own eyes some of our relatives and compatriots die during the war," he said. "We don't want to see our children experience the tragedy of a third world war."

Hu, who arrived here yesterday on a four-day official visit, held wide-ranging discussions over breakfast today with former French President Valery Giscard d'Estaing on East-West relations, disarmament and Sino-French economic cooperation. Hu briefed Giscard d'Estaing on the latest developments in China. The former French president said he is convinced that the economic structural reform underway in China is bound to succeed.

After their meeting, Giscard d'Estaing told reporters that he and Hu shared identical views on many issues, such as the need for balanced disarmament and the necessity for closer French-Chinese economic cooperation, particularly in the transfer of technology.

This morning, Chirac, who is also mayor of Paris, gave a grand reception to the Chinese leader at the Town Hall in the name of the municipal government and praised Chinese leaders for their farsightedness in implementing the policy of opening to the outside world.

Hu today also laid a wreath at the Tomb of the Unknown Soldiers and visited Musee du Louvre and Chateau de Versailles. The two ancient palaces are now national museums, noted for their large collections of precious paintings and sculptures and elegant saloons.

Also today, Vice-Premier Li Peng, who accompanied General Secretary Hu on his current visit, met with Edouard Balladur, French minister of state for economy, finance and privatization, and attended a reception held by the France-China committee, an organization formed of French businessmen.

The vice premier told the businessmen that China will expand cooperation with France in energy, transport, telecommunications, metallurgy and power generation. He proposed that the two countries adopt three methods for economic cooperation: by expanding normal bilateral cooperation, by offering preferential loans to promote French exports to China and by establishing Sino-French joint ventures or French enterprises in China.

Italian Statement Welcomes Visit

[Text] Rome, Jun 18 (XINHUA) -- The Italian Prime Minister's office issued a statement here today saying that the Chinese Communist Party leader Hu Yaobang's current four-nation Western Europe tour proves China's strong desire to expand its political and economic relations with Europe. This statement was issued on the eve of Hu's five-day visit to Italy beginning Thursday. Hu is now in France, the third leg of his European trip, which has taken him to Britain and Federal Germany.

Beijing believes the European Communities have a particularly important role in maintaining world peace and stability, the statement said. Equally, the statement continued, Europe holds that China is a fundamental element of a stable world situation and can make valuable contributions to promoting international dialogue and cooperation.

Since the establishment of diplomatic relations in 1970, it said, Italy and China have proved they have identical views on a wide-range of major international issues, particularly on peace, stability and security, through a series of exchanges of view including the talks held between Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang and Prime Minister Bettino Craxi in 1984.

As a European country, Italy is trying to meet the increasing demands of China in economic cooperation, the statement said. Last year Italy became China's second largest trading partner in Europe, next only to Federal Germany. Italy's trade volume with China was 1.1 billion U.S. dollars in 1985, scoring a 47.2 percent increase over 1984, and reached 0.3 billion U.S. dollars in the first quarter of this year. Meanwhile, Italy and China have signed a series of agreements on scientific and cultural cooperation since 1978.

CPC DELEGATION TO ATTEND SFRY PARTY CONGRESS

[Text] Beijing, June 13 (XINHUA) -- The Communist Party of China (CPC) will send a delegation led by Xi Zhongxun, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee to the 13th Congress of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia (LCY), to be held June 25-28.

A spokesman for the International Liaison Department of the CPC Central Committee made this announcement at a news briefing here today. The delegation will include Zhu Houze, member of the CPC Central Committee and head of the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, and Zhu Shanqing, deputy head of the International Liaison Department of the CPC Central Committee.

The spokesman recalled that a CPC delegation led by Peng Zhen, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, attended the Yugoslav party's 12th Congress in June 1982.

The two parties established relations in 1956 and an ICY delegation attended the CPC Eighth National Congress the same year, he said. Relations between the two parties were suspended in 1958. In 1977, Yugoslavia's President Josif Tito visited China. Party-to-party relations were resumed the following year. Since then, contacts between the two parties have become more frequent, with exchanges of high-level delegations almost every year, which include visits by CPC leaders Hu Yaobang and Hu Qili.

In recent years, the spokesman added, the CPC has sent delegations or representatives to attend the congresses of the Romanian Communist Party, the ICY, and the Italian and French Communist Parties as well as those of the Third World in Africa.

Asked about relations between the CPC had contacted the Japanese Communist Party on bilateral relations last year. "Through the contact, the two sides know each other's position and viewpoint better. We hope the two parties will look beyond the existing differences," he noted. The two parties haven't resumed relations yet, he added.

GDR URGES U.S., USSR TO DISMANTLE NUCLEAR WEAPONS

[Text] Berlin, June 17 (XINHUA) -- Willi Stoph, chairman of the Democratic German Council of Ministers, today offered to make Democratic Germany a non-nuclear corridor if Washington and Moscow work toward dismantling medium-range nuclear weapons in Europe. Speaking at a People's Chamber session, Stoph also called on Federal Germany to take a "realistic" view over its participation in the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative, or "star wars," project.

Stoph, 71, who retained his post yesterday at the first session of the ninth People's Chamber, said he regrets what he called Bonn's failure to respond positively to Democratic Germany's appeal for negotiations to set up a non-nuclear corridor. Relations between the two Germanys cannot develop unless it is based on the international law, Stoph said.

Stoph said that in forming foreign policy, Democratic Germany wants to ensure favorable external conditions for building an advanced socialist society while working to remove the danger of war and confrontation through international cooperation.

Stoph said his government will give priorities to the country's economic development as envisaged by the Communist Party's 11th National Congress. He urged all economic sectors to research and adopt sophisticated technologies to ensure continued development.

GDR'S HONECKER PRAISES NEW WARSAW PACT PROPOSAL

[Text] Berlin, June 13 (XINHUA) -- Democratic German leader Erich Honecker today praised the Warsaw Pact's new disarmament proposal and urged Washington and Moscow to continue their political dialogue. At a meeting of the Central Committee of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany, Honecker said the proposal to reduce conventional arms and forces by both the Warsaw Pact and NATO was of "great importance" and its implementation would contribute to turning Europe "from an explosive powder keg into a continent of peace, security and cooperation."

The Warsaw Pact's summit, held last Tuesday and Wednesday in Budapest, tabled a major East-West troop reduction plan that calls for cuts of 100,000 to 150,000 men on each side over the next one or two years and a 25 percent cut in troop strength for both sides by the early 1990s.

Honecker was quoted by the Democratic German news agency ADN as saying that Western claims that the implementation of the proposal would bring about the Warsaw Pact's superiority in the conventional troops were "nothing but a lot of noise."

Honecker criticized the United States for wanting to abandon SALT-2 and denounced its Strategic Defense Initiative space armament program, its adventurous actions against Libya and its policy of threats and blackmail in Latin America, ADN said.

Honecker said that political dialogue was "an essential instrument" for clearing the way for concrete agreements. "We are for continuing the political dialogue begun in Geneva," he said.

ROMANIA'S CEAUSESCU FOR WARSAW DISARMAMENT PLOY

OW150213 Beijing XINHUA in English 0153 GMT 15 Jun 86

[Text] Bucharest, June 14 (XINHUA) -- The proposal adopted by the Warsaw Pact summit to reduce conventional forces by 25 percent before 1990 is extremely important, Romanian leader Nicolae Ceausescu said today at a mass rally in the central city of Brasov.

He said if the program is carried out, further measures to reduce conventional weapons and military expenditure by 50 percent by the year 2000 can be implemented.

Ceausescu said these reductions will result in greater trust and peaceful cooperation between nations, thus saving large amounts of financial resources and manpower for each country's economic and social development.

Even before Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev put forth his proposal on conventional forces at Democratic German's Socialist Unity Party Congress, Ceausescu has stressed a comprehensive program which centres on nuclear disarmament and includes the reduction of all conventional weapons.

He said that armaments should be decreased by at least 50 percent and a ceiling set on the weapons and armed forces of all countries, especially the super powers.

DENG XIAOPING MEETS WITH RONG FAMILY

[By reporter Zou Aiguo]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 18 Jun (XINHUA) -- "Contratulations on your family reunion," said Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the Advisory Commission of the CPC Central Committee, when he extended his welcome and greetings to some 200 members of the Rong family this morning. The Rongs, from both at home and abroad, are visiting Beijing on invitation. Deng Xiaopong happily said: "The Rong family has made tremendous contributions to the development of China's national industry."

Deng Xiaoping said to Rong Erren, the second elder brother of NPC Standing Committee Vice Chairman Rong Yiren: "Your Rong family's development of national industry is a contribution to the nation."

Ron Erren told Deng Xiaoping: "You are a great man, well-known throughout the world."

"I did a little work while most of it was done by others, including Comrade Rong Yiren," said Deng Xiaoping pointing to Rong Yiren. "They have done a great deal of work."

Deng Xiaoping, now 82, told Ron Erren and other visitors: Since the downfall of the "gang of four," we have created a good condition which enabled you to return for a family reunion. Such a condition was nonexistent in the past. Your family reunion is a happy event. We should strive for a great unity of the whole Chinese nation.

Deng Xiaoping said: Now that you are here visiting, you should try to see more places in order to know the present situation of our country. You may visit again in 2 or 3 years. Then, you will see the changes in our country and know how we are making progress.

During the conversation, Deng Xiaoping briefed the visitors on the blueprints for China's construction at the end of the century and at the centennial of the People's Republic. He also told them about China's foreign policy. He said: We pursue an independent foreign policy and oppose whoever practices hegemonism. We also oppose whoever infringes upon others' interests. We talk and act reasonably. We will persist in such a policy.

Deng Xiaoping was full of confidence in a bright future. He said: Our country is full of promise. I hope that our compatriots, Overseas Chinese, and people of Chinese descent living abroad will take part in our cause of development. Pointing to Rong Yiren, Deng Xiaoping told Rong Erren: "In this regard, your brother can be your guide." All the Rongs burst into laughter.

Also present at the meeting were Wang Zhen, Yan Mingfu, Tang ke, Wang Hanbin, and Zhou Shaozheng.

Peng Zhen Lauds Rong Family

OW181308 Beijing XINHUA in English 1150 GMT 18 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 18 (XINHUA) -- The contributions of the Rong family to the development of China's industry deserve to be fully recounted in Chinese history.

This comment was made by Peng Zhen, chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, here today when he met the relatives of Rong Yiren, vice-chairman of the NPC Standing Committee and chairman of the Board of Directors of the China International Trust and Investment Corporation (CITIC).

Peng praised the Rong family for its efforts to save the country by way of developing national industry before liberation in 1949.

Some of the Rongs built flour mills, textile factories and machinery plants in old China and some have contributed to China's development and international contacts.

Peng told the 200-odd relatives, who had travelled to China from their homes abroad, that China has made great progress over the past three decades. He added that some errors and mistakes did occur during the period but were corrected by China itself.

Peng asked Rong's relatives to give their suggestions and opinions on China's construction, adding that people of Chinese origin both at home and abroad can take part in China's modernization program.

Peng said that China had shifted its work focus onto economic development while great efforts are being made to bolster the legal system.

DISCIPLINE INSPECTION COMMISSION HOLDS MEETING

[Excerpts] Beijing, 17 Jun (XINHUA) — At a national meeting on the work of hearing cases held from 9 to 15 June, the Central Discipline Inspection Commission discussed the questions of how to investigate and handle cases of violations of party discipline in such a way as to embody the party's line, principles, and policies in a better way, and of how to enhance quality in handling cases; and bring about a fundamental turn for the better in party work style at an early date.

The meeting held that in handling cases involving violation of party discipline, it is essential to adhere to the principle of seeking truth from facts, of combining strictness with merits and to implement the party principle of "learning from past mistakes to avoid future ones and curing the sickness to save the patient" in dealing with erring party members. It is necessary to correctly understand the relationship between strictly enforcing party discipline and improving party work style on the one hand and carrying out reforms and economic development on the other hand and to use good party work style and strict party discipline to ensure the smooth progress of reforms and economic development. Education should be emphasized in handling errors committed in work due to lack of experience. Lessons in this regard should be summed up in order to improve work. In dealing with criminal and disciplinary offenses such as placing personal interests high above those of the party and the people, abusing authority to seek personal interests, seeking interests for small groups in one's units or departments at the expense of damaging the interests of the party and the people, and causing grave economic and political losses by dereliction of duty resulting from bureaucracy, and in dealing with other serious problems of damaging party style and violating party discipline, it is essential to remove all obstacles and mete out disciplinary punishment. Those who commit crimes should be punished by judicial departments according to the law.

The meeting was presided over by Qiang Xiaochu and Chen Zuolin, secretaries of the Central Discipline Inspectin Commission. Qiang Xiaochu delivered a summing-up speech at the meeting. After circulating a notice on the fundamental situation in improving the party style after the 8,000-strong meeting convened by the CPC Central Committee and on future work, he emphasized in his speech the need to give full play to the important role played by the work of hearing cases.

Qiang Xiaochu stressed: It is essential to improve the organs in charge of hearing cases, especially those at the country level, and to adopt varied methods of training cadres in charge of trying cases. It is necessary to constantly raise the political and vocational level of such cadres. He urged the cadres in charge of trying cases to demonstrate uprightness, tenacity, and impartiality in their work so as to make it fit the new situation.

At the opening ceremony of the meeting, Sun Tonghui, member of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission and director of its department in charge of hearing cases, delivered a report "Conscientiously Do a Good Job in Hearing Cases in Order to Bring About a Fundamental Turn for the Better in Party Style." Attending the meeting were more than 100 people, including members of the Discipline Inspection Commissions of the provincial, regional, and municipal party committees; members of the PLA Party Discipline Inspection Commission and of the party discipline inspection commissions of various central organs; and comrades in charge of trying cases.

RENMIN RIBAO ON CHANGING LEADERS' WORK STYLE

[Commentator's article: "Leaders Must Personally Solve Problems"]

[Text] What is the biggest problem in our work? What must first we change first? Perhaps, many cadres and ordinary people have deeply felt that many problems in their work and lives cannot be effectively solved. It is not difficult to find such unpleasant phenomena: Some problems which should have been solved long ago remain unsolved, and many things which ought to be settled have not been settled. Why? Because no one is responsible for such things. Some of our leading organs and responsible cadres merely indulge themselves in idle talk and merely give general instructions. They are willing to personally tackle some concrete problems. This major defect has adversely affected our work and our socialist modernization cause, and must be corrected.

Idle talk may harm the nation's interests. This is a lesson we have drawn form China's historical experience. However, some of our comrades have been tainted with this bad habit. They indulge themselves in empty talk without dealing with any actual problems, and they merely give some general instructions and do not care about the handling of concrete affairs. Now everyone is talking about overcoming bureaucratism. In fact, the specter of bureaucratism is still haunting us. The prevailing habit of idle talk is a clear demonstration of bureaucratism.

In order to correct this unhealthy work style, we must do our work and handle concrete issues in a down-to-earth manner. Discussions are always too general, and only the process of solving actual problems is concrete. We should frequently inspect our concrete work in all fields so as to promptly discover and solve problems.

There are not only many questions requiring thought and discussion facing cadres, but there are also many "algebraical equations" which they have to solve concretely step by step. In a word, an important and urgent duty for leading cadres is to personally settle concrete problems.

Some comrades may say: Our leading organs have to ensure the implementation of the major principles and policies and to control the overall situation, so how can they directly take care of the trivial things? This argument sounds rather reasonable, but it is in fact untenable. What is a trivial thing? The redress of the wrong done to a comrade in the past seems a trivial thing, but if this mishandled case is not thoroughly redressed, it may affect the credibility of the party's policy. So it should not be regarded as a trivial thing. Some specific difficulties in people's daily lives seem to be trivial things, but if they are not settled, they may affect people's enthusiasm for the modernization cause. So they should not be considered trivial things either. Even though they are trivial things, so long as they are matters within the scope of the functions of a department or a unit, the department or unit concerned must not disregard such things. Our overall work is composed of many minor and concrete matters. Without properly handdling these concrete matters, we will not be able to really and efficiently handle our overall work.

Lenin was correct in saying: "We should not be visionaries who merely want to accomplish big things. Instead, we should be realistic statesmen who are good at meeting various minor requirements, because these minor things will help us accomplish a great cause."

Some comrades may say: Because we are so busy, how can we take time to look after the concrete matters? It is true that we are all very busy. But if we think that leading cadres should only handle the endless meetings and paperwork, we will never be able to successfully and effectively exercise leadership. Leaders must go deeply to grass-roots units and go deeply among the masses to solve concrete problems there. Our leading cadres must have this work style and work method. This is also an indispensable part of their leadership work and is their unshirkable duty which they must fulfill no matter how busy they are. In this regard, the central leaders have set a very good example for all of us, and leading cadres at various levels should learn from the practice of the central leaders.

Now we are pursuing a great and arduous cause. In the process of fulfilling this cause, we must settle many concrete problems one by one, no matter whether the problems are big or small. We take a step forward after solving each problem. High-sounding remarks cannot advance the process of history. If we persist in dealing with every problem and can settle every problem we encounter thoroughly, then our situation will become better and better, and our cause will become more propserous. So it is hoped that all comrades in leading posts will often ask themselves: What solid work have I done recently? What concrete affairs have I handled?

XINHUA COMMENTATOR VIEWS FALSIFYING REPORTS

[XINHUA commentator: "Do Not Seek an Undeserved Reputation; Oppose the Practice of Exaggeration"]

To reflect actual situation and submit statistical data to the state according to the facts is the responsibility and required of every cadre. "The statistical law of the People's Republic of China" clearly stipulates that, in submiting statistical data, it is not permitted to falsify reports, hold back from reporting facts, refuse to report or delay reporting, nor it is permitted to forge or tamper with any reports. Those committing serious offense by falsifying statistical data or holding back from reporting will be subject to administrative disciplinary actions.

Lately, the malpractice of falsifying and making exaggerated reports has again begun to prevail in some localities. In discussing cadres' work style, the CPC Central Committee's Document No 1 of this year specifically points out: "We should advocate the down-to-earth manner of doing things and pay attention to practical results, and should not seek an undeserved reputation by exaggerating things; in particular, we should oppose the malpractice of falsifying and making exaggerated reports in order to deal with higher-level authorities." Therefore, this issue must not be treated casually.

Judging from what has taken place in some localities, the practice of making exaggerated reports is closely related to inappropriate comparison with others. Some people tried to compare themselves with what had been achieved by those around them, some with what had been accomplished by preceding cadres, some with the targets set at the beginning of the year or by the personal responsibility system. Some comrades, when their performance is not as good as that of others, tend to resort to falsifying reports instead of working harder to catch up. Of course, comparing with others is just something that can be seen from the outside. Behind this, it is usually an attempt to curry favor with one's superiors and win undeserved honors.

There is the argument that, since the implementation of the household responsibility system, statistical work has become much more difficult, and therefore exaggerated reports are unavoidable. This argument is incorrect. It is true that, since the institution of household responsibility, statistical work has become more difficult because all data is obtained from thousands of households, and therefore inacuracy is sometimes unavoidable.

But, how can one link the inacuracy resulting from objective factors to exaggerative reports fabricated willfully? To say that statistical work has become more difficult is acceptable, but not that exaggeration is unavoidable.

Still another argument is also incorrect. This argument says that the situation in rural areas has been very good, and therefore some exaggerations will not do any great harm. Comrades supporting this argument do not understand that exaggerated reports will mislead the higher authorities when analyzing the actual situation, which will lead to wrong decision-making. They will also corrupt cadres and undermine the relations between the party and peasants. How can one say this will not do any great harm? People probably still well remember how seriously the malpractice of making exaggerated reports in 1958 damaged our development efforts. Seeking an undeserved reputation unvariably brings about calamity. We should bear in mind this profound lesson.

How then, do we prevent making exaggerated reports? To promote seeking truth from facts among cadres is one way, and to discipline those engaging in serious malpractices is another. However, the more important thing is for leaders at a higher levels, like responsible persons of the Laian County CPC Committee, not to crave greatness and success and just listen to what they like to hear. They should devote greater efforts to analyzing reports submitted by their subordinates. Whenever in doubt, they should go deep to grass-roots units and remote areas to conduct serious investigations in order to find the facts. If leaders at a higher levels could make several such fact-findng trips, those who used to make exaggerated reports would not dare continue to do so because they would then realize that such acts cannot fool those at higher levels and that nothing can be gained from such acts.

BEIJING TV COMMENTS ON WAYS TO PROTECT REFORMERS

HK181418 [Editorial report] Beijing Domestic Television Service in Mandarin at 1000 GMT on 16 June carries a 2-minute film clip on five specific measures taken by Xian to protect progressive figures in reform efforts.

The announcer identifies the five specific measures as follows: "1) With regard to controversial matters occurring in reform, leaders of the departments in charge should not arbitrarily suspend or stop these things as long as they are useful to the development of production; 2) inappropriate methods for dealing with faults in reform should be corrected. Generally speaking, it is unnecessary to investigate and affix responsibility to individuals; 3) a clear line of demarcation should be drawn between erroneous decisions and the pratice of abusing power for private gain; 4) departments in charge should take the initiative to provide service for enterprises engaged in reform; 5) those who spread rumors and malign reformists viciously are accountable for their actions."

The film clip shows several cadres holding a discussion with technical workers in a laboratory. Several technicians are then shown working in a workshop.

The film cuts to medium and close-up shots of (Zhao Jianmin), director of the Xian chemical engineering research institute, working with his colleages in a laboratory. The announcer says that he was bold in carrying out reform, however he was blamed by other people not long ago. The announcer adds that the department in charge has now affirmed his achievements, and has encouraged him to continue to carry out the reform. Zhao is shown drafting a report on developing lateral links for production and scientific research. The announcer notes that he is happy when he learns about measures taken by Xian to protect reformists, and that he expresses his determination to carry on his reform through to the end.

Following the film clip, the announcer reads the following commentary: "Reform is the trend of the times and also an imperative matter. However, on the road of reform, twists and turns will inevitably occur. We arealso bound to find certain shortcomings and mistakes made by the reformists. How should we treat them then? Instead of paying lip service alone, or doing things in a manner like a gust of wind, Xian City has done solid work. There is no doubt that the five specific measures taken by Xian City will play a positive role in truly supporting and helping reformists, striking blows at those who frame and harm the reformists, and ensuring the smooth accomplishment of economic reform in our country."

WANG MENG VIEWS LITERATURE, ART SITUATION

HK180631 Hong Kong ZHONQGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1324 GMT 17 Jun 86

[Report by Wang Jiabin: "Wang Meng Says and Art Circles But There Are Also Some Inharmonious Factors" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Harbin, 17 Jun (ZHONGQUO XINWHEN SHE) -- Wang Meng said that the ideology in the present Chinese literature and art circles is more lively than ever before. However, there are still many inharmonious factors and there is still a long way to go before truly free discussions can be carried out on equal footing.

Invited by the Heilongjiang Provincial Federation of literature and art circles to attend the "Art Festival of the Dream of Red Chamber" from Beijing, Wang Meng, the vice chairman of the Chinese Writers' Association, commented on the situation in literature and art.

He said that, at present, as there are many varied and divided opinions in literature and art circles, it is very difficult to find a case where people unanimously approve or disapprove of a work. This situation is normal and gratifying. However, due to the tradition of leveling mass criticism in China over the last few decades, some people are very unaccustomed to exchanging views calmly. Whenever offering criticism, some people tend to assume a very important pose, solemnly proclaiming that "we hold that" or "we Marxists maintain that," which makes others very nervous.

Wang Meng said that there is a very abnormal atmosphere in the literature and art circles in which faultfinders are more important than workers and fualtfinders outnumbered workers.

He said that at present the masses are not very satisfied with the works created by the literature and art workers. He hopes that after relaxed and better conditions have been created, the literature and art workers will be able to create works truly loved by the masses.

NATIONAL MEETING EXAMINES PARTY DISCIPLINE

[Text] Beijing, June 18 (XINHUA) -- All cadres in charge of examining cases involving violations of the Communist Party discipline must be "upright, outspoken, and impartial", a senior party offical said at a conference which closed here last Sunday.

Qiang Xiaochu, secretary of the party's Central Discipline Inspection Commission, said that handling of these cases must be quick and accurate.

He was speaking at a national conference on the examination of cases involving violations of party discipline. More than 100 party officials from local discipline commissions all over the country attended the closed-door meeting between June 9 and 15.

According to remarks released today, the meeting discussed principles to guide the handling of such cases and policies toward violators of party discipline.

The meeting agreed that the cases must be handled with great care. Conclusisions must be based on facts and disciplinary actions must be appropriate.

The campaign against the violations is aimed at strengthening party discipline and ensuring the smooth progress of economic reforms. Efforts should be made to help those who made mistakes in their work because of lack of experience.

But punishments must be given to those who abused their power for selfish gains, those who neglected their duties and brought great economic and political losses to the state, and those who made profits for individual departments at the expense of the state interests. Violators of the law must be punished according to law.

The meeting also agreed that great care must be made in handling cases involving the interests of the masses. Punishment of the violators must not implicate their innocent families.

RENMIN RIBAO ON TRADE, PRODUCTION COOPERATION

[Commentator's article: "When the Production and Foreign Trade Departments Are of One Mind, Clay Can Be Changed Into Gold"]

[Text] Zhuzheng County's foreign trade and production sectors have worked in full cooperation and with unity of purpose in developing production of commodities for export and thus quickly created a new situation for the export of its goods. Its experience proves that when the production and foreign trade departments are of one mind, clay can be changed into gold.

In our work to export goods and earn foreign exchange, our production and foreign trade sectors both play an important role. The former has the advantages of being able to organize production and develop products; while the later has the advantage of being able to open up international markets and sell goods there. Only when they closely coordinate with each other, and carry out a division of labor and cooperation between them can they score magnificent achievements in exporting goods and earning foreign exchange. Now, the production sectors in some areas have bypassed their foreign trade departments and carried out foreign trade on their own; or the foreign trade departments have stopped their long-standing cooperative relations with production enterprises and had other production units carry out production for export. This has separated the production sector from foreign trade departments and often caused losses to both. We should conscientiously draw lessons from it.

Adhering to the principle of mutual benefit is an indispensable condition for consolidating and developing the cooperation between production and trade. In the reform in our foreign trade system in the past 2 years, some production-foreign trade joint ventures have been established in some departments and areas, but our failure to properly distribute interests between the two parties often hinders the fulfillment of the tasks of export and foreign exchange earning. The inernational market is always changing, there is alwyas some risk in the production of commodities for export. A foreign trade department should not act in accordance with the old rule that the "whip is applied when the market is favorable while the knife is applied to cut production when the market is unfavorable. By so doing, it often hurts the interests of our production units. A production unit should not bypass the foreign trade department and export goods on its own when it sees a favorable market. In carrying out joint ventures between production and foreign trade sectors, we should encourage the practice of making joint investment, carrying out joint management, and sharing risks and interests.

Our production and foreign trade seectors should really cooperate with one heart and one mind. They should break away from the old concepts of departmental and regional ownership, regard developing the socialist commodity economy as their task and foster the new idea of developing international trade. Only by so doing can our production and foreign trade sectors units with each other and reinvigorate our export and foreign exchange earnings undertaking with one heart and one mind.

GUOJI SHANGBAO NOTES REDUCED FOREIGN INVESTMENTS

[Dispatch by reporter Wu Xinhui: "China's Absorption of Overseas Investment Has Slowed Down in First 4 Months of This Year]

[Text] Ningbo -- From last January to April, our country gave new approval to a total of 327 Chinese-foreign joint and cooperative ventures and foreign-owned enterprises. The contracts involved over $500 million in foreign investment, or 600 million if on cooperation in prospecting offshore oil, international renting, and compensation trade are included. This was what this reporter learned from the symposium on the utilization of foreign investment that was held by the China International Economic Cooperation Society in Ningbo City in late May.

Among the porjects approved this year, there are 172 Chinese-foreign joint ventures involving contracted foreign investment of abut $230 million, 148 Chinese-foreign cooperative ventures involving contracted foreign investment of more than $280 million, and 7 foreign-owned enterprises with about $1.2 million investment.

According to our statistics, from 1979 to the end of 1985, our country's contracted absorption of direct overseas investment totaled $18.1 million in more than 6,300 items, among which, 2,341 were Chinese-foreign joint ventures, 3,823 were Chinese-foreign cooperative ventures, 120 were foreign-owned enterprises, and 35 were items of cooperation in prospecting offshore oil.

In 1984 and 1985, our country's absorption of direct investment from abroad clearly quickened. As a large number of coastal cities and areas were further opened up to the outside world, as interior provinces and regions also conscientiously developed external economic and technological cooperation, and as the state's laws and regulations on foreign economy were gradually perfected, over the past 2 years, foreign businessmen's investment in China has risen drastically. Not only the amount of investment and the number of projects rose quickly, but the sources of funds also expanded. The investment by American, West European, and Japanese businessmen increased. This changed the situation in the early stage of Hong Kong and Macao businessmen playing a dominant role. Of the investment items, the proportion of productive projects has increased year by year and the construction of some large productive projects in particular brought about a radical change in the setup of Sino-foreign joint ventures.

Participants in the symposium from various areas reported that the projects absorbing foreign capital, for which construction was completed and which had been put into operation, were mostly producing satisfactory economic results and had benefited both the Chinese and foreign sides. Many projects have introduced from abroad advanced and applicable technology and played a positive role in improving our country's level of production technlogy, expanding its exports, and producing substitutes for its imports. The construction of a number of guesthouses and projects of a service nature are also urgently needed by us in improving our investment environment and developing tourism. The participants held that in the light of the needs of our country's economic development, the shortage of funds, and backward production technology in some sectors, in the future we should absorb direct investment from abroad on an even larger scale. This is also an important aspect of the policy of opening up to the outside world that our country is carrying out.

In the first 4 months of this year, the pace at which our country absorbed direct investment from abroad slowed down compared with the preceding 2 years. This was caused by diverse factors. The participants held that under current conditions at home and abroad, in order to accelerate the absorption of foreign investment, we had to focus on solving a few domestic problems satisfactorily. First, before we have completed a thorough reform in our domestic economic management system, we should intensify our administration over the work of utilizing foreign capital. With the extended scale of the use of foreign capital, more and more departments are involved in Sino-foreign joint ventures, disputes between the sides have increased, and the problem of "difficulties in handling affairs" has become prominent.

At present, there is not yet an administrative department specializing in administering enterprises that utilize foreign capital and there is an urgent need to set up an organ of coordination to resolve problems concerning foreign-owned enterprises. The laws and regulations on foreign economy should be based on the fundamental law. They should coordinate and correspond with each other so that there are laws to follow and places to make complaints, and so that better conditions are created for foreign investment. Second, it is necessary to implement the existing policies and regulations. For example, the question of using products of Sino-foreign joint ventures as import substitutes is not yet thorougly resolved in certain departments. Consequently, the state has suffered losses and it has also become difficult for certain joint ventures to maintain a balance in their foreign exchange.

Many people expressed the view at the symposium that enterprises utilizing foreign capital should serve our exports for foreign exchange earnings and the establishment of an export-oriented economy. Therefore, it is a good method that foreign trade and industrial enterprises cooperate with each other in absorbing foreign investment and jointly set up Chinese-foreignjoint ventures. Last year, Shanghai Municipality's foreign trade enterprises cooperated with industrial enterprises in setting up 19 joint ventures with foreign businessmen. In these enterprises, the Chinese and foreign sides organize the export jointly, and thus overcome certain conflicts between the exports of joint ventures and the exports of ordinary trade and achieved relatively good results. They all thought that this experience was worth popularizing.

STATEMEMT ISSUED ON FOREIGN JOINT VENTURES

[Text] Beijing, June 18 (XINHUA) -- Sino-foreign joint venture skyscrapers in China will be mainly designed, managed, and constructed with Chinese materials using Chinese labor, the State Planning Commission announced today. The statement was made based on a two-month study which showed that the country has the ability to complete engineering designs, manage engineering projects, and provide steel structure welding and hoisting.

China can construct skyscrapers by importing certain design techniques, materials and equipment from abroad. In this way, it will use more home-made materials and equipment and save foreign exchange and construction funds. If the project is designed by a foreign firm, the company should invite Chinese partners to participate, according to the State Planning Commission.

JINGJI RIBAO ON INCREASE IN PRC BANK SAVINGS

HK171023 Beijing JINGJI RIBAO in Chinese 29 May 86 p 2

[Report by the Survey and Statistics Department of the People's Bank of China: "China's per Capita Bank Savings Reaches 154.5 Yuan"]

[Text] During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, China's saving deposits, including both urban and rural areas, increased by 122.3 billion yuan, or more than four times over 1980. Compared to the total increase of the past 28 years before 1981, the amount increased by 3.1 times.

By the end of 1985, the savings deposit balance of urban and rural areas totalled 162.26 billion yuan. Taking the country as a whole, the per capita savings deposit was 154.5 yuan. Savings have become a stable and important source of capital for China's economic construction.

During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, China's development of savings deposits was marked by the following characteristics: First, it was a sharp increase. On average, the annual growth of savings deposits over the 5 years was 24.46 billion yuan. Second, the amount of fixed savings deposit grew most rapidly. The increase was about 92 billion yuan, accounting for 75 percent of the total increase. Third, the growth rate of savings deposits in the rural areas was greater than that in urban areas. During the 5 years, the savings deposits of rural areas increased by 44.78 billion yuan.

ATTENTION TO PSYCHOLOGICAL COUNSELLING STRESSED

[By staff reporter Chen Pingjun]

[Text] Psychological counselling, largely ignored in China until recently, is beginning to receive attention and gain recognition.

A clear sign of such a change is the present 10-day lecture course in Beijing. The series of lectures on "psychological counselling" is sponsored by the Chinese Mental health Association and attended by medical doctors, teachers, psychiatrists, social workers and local medical department officials from across the country.

"We expect the lectures to help develop China's psychological counselling, which has proved to be in great demand," said Chen Xueshi, head of the association's council.

Psychological counselling has been restoring its reputation over the past few years in China, where all subjects related to psychology and the name of Freud had been regarded as "bourgeois" and "pseudo-scientific" until recently.

The association was restored just last year and Chinese psychologists gathered last September for the first nationwide exchange of information since Liberation in 1949.

Counselling services are available only in a few large cities, including Guangzhou, Beijing, Shanghai, Nanjing and Fuzhou. The lack of professionals is the key factor blocking a rapid development of the science in China, according to Chen at the beginning of the 10-day lecture programme on Monday.

There are some 1,000 professional psychologists and researchers in China and nearly 100 psychology students graduate each year from universities. The lectures are aimed to exchange information and to step up the training programme of Chinese therapists. The lectures include Professor Leslie Cheng and Dr May Tung, two Chinese-Americans invited to attend by the association.

"We will hold a forum focusing on the psychological counselling of adolescents, especially schoolchildren, in August," Wen Guaren, Secretary General of the Chinese Mental Health Association, told CHINA DAILY.

Last year, two psychological counselling centres were established in Beijing and they turned out to be very helpful. One, at a women's federation, received patients who suffered from mental problems that derived from family disputes. Most patients were people who were not ill enough to go to mental hospital but needed treatment or counselling badly.

Chen Xueshi said in a previous interview that "as the subject of mental health has just been reinstated in China and is quite new to most people, one of our urgent jobs is to stress its importance to people."

"As China adopts the one-family-one-child policy, the issue of whether the generation of only children can grow up in good mental health weighs heavily on China's future."

CIRCULAR ON GRAIN, OIL PROCUREMENT ISSUED

[Text] Beijing, 13 Jun (XINHUA) -- The State Council recently issued a "circular on summer grain and oil procurement."

According to the State Council, while watching closely grain and edible-oil crop production, all localities increased their summer grain and rapeseed acreage this year. Most of the crops look promising. To ensure a good job in summer grain and oil procurement and in controlling their marketing, the State Council issued the following circular:

1. It is necessary to publicize vigorously the policy regarding grain and oil procurement so that the broad masses of peasants and cadres can understand that a contract on grain producement, which is an economic contract as well as a task assigned by the state, should be fulfilled under normal harvest conditions; and that grain procurement by local purchasing agents, which is arranged by the state to increase peasants' income and satisfy their indispensable needs in view of a reduction in grain procurement by contract, should also be fulfilled. Under the premise that contract procurement and state planned procurement are fulfilled, efforts should be made to actively regulate the market and promote multichannel management.

2. It is necessary to conscientiously enforce the pricing policy. Contract grain procurement should be purchased according to the proportional price; price of grain purchased by local agents on behalf of the state should not be higher than the original price for above-the-quota producement; and negotiated grain procurement should be purchased at a floating price slightly lower than market price. Rapeseeds should be purchased without restriction according to the proportional price. During the buying process, price should be determined by quality. No higher authorities are allowed to demand a higher or lower price.

3. It is necessary to ensure good organizational work and services. All departments concerned should take concerted action to ensure smooth progress in summer grain and oil procurement. Procurement funds should be promptly allocated to counties. Peasants should be paid the full amount for the grain, without deduction of fees by agents. In multichannel management, no state, collective units, or individuals are allowed to drive up prices or engage in speculation in purchasing and marketing grain and oil. Grain departments at all levels should improve the service and do everything possible to make selling grain easier for the peasants.

4. It is necessary to take a firm grip on grain and oil marketing. While paying close attention to grain and oil delivery to ensure market supply, all localities should adopt effective measures to control their marketing.

GEZHOUBA LOCKS INCREASE FREIGHT ON CHANG JIANG

[Text] Yichang, June 16 (XINHUA) -- The two ship locks built five years ago at Gezhouba have allowed the volume of freight along the upper and middle reaches of the Yangtze River to more than double, according to local officals.

The ship locks are part of the Gezhouba Dam project, a large hydraulic project with a designed power generating capacity of 2.71 million kw. Officials in charge of the project said that the dam has raised the water level along the lower section of the Yangtze Gorges, thereby submerging shoals and rocks dangerous to navigation. Passengers and freight have grown at an annual rate of 24 and 20 percent, respectively, since this section was opened to navigation on June 15, 1981. Over the past five years, the locks accomodated 8.4 million passengers and 22.7 million tons of freight. A third ship lock is now under construction. When completed in 1988, the annual freight capacity will jump to 50 million tons. The Navigation Department at Gezhouba is also improving navigation channels, telecommunications, and control facilities.

'TIANFU' COLA LOOKS TO WORLD SOFT DRINK MARKET

[Text] Chongqing, June 19, (XINHUA) -- China has broken into the international soft drinks market in a big way with a health beverage which looks and tasks like western colas.

The magic export formula created by the Chongqing Beverage Company in Sichuan Province is called, appropriately, "Tianfu" or "Heavenly Gift".

Since the beginning of this year, four million cans of Tianfu Cola have been sold to the Southeast Asian countries and regions, company manager Li Peichuan told XINHUA. And its ingredients have now been exported to Japan and Canada for trial production.

In ancient times, Sichuan was known as "Tianfu" because of its mild climate and fertile soil. Tianfu Cola contains no spirit or caffeine, and is said to help strengthen the spleen and liver. It has been awarded eight gold medals by three government ministries since it was first produced in 1981. It was also declared the best-selling consumer commodity in Chongqing and Sichuan's most popular product last year. Li said they were reaping the rewards of introducing advanced technology and issuing production licences to partners around the country.

The drink is now produced at 76 factories spread across most of China.

The main production center in Chongqing imported two production lines for bottling and canning the cola last year, which boosted its annual production capacity to 350 million half-liter containers.

The Chongqing factory has provided funds, equipment, technology and materials for its partners, and has set strict quality regulations. Quality-control officials make regular market inspection trips.

Two factories were expelled from the production network for violating regulations. Sixty percent of the company's partners used to suffer financial losses before they joined the network. Now they are all making profits, said Li.

BO YIBO, HAN PEIXIN INSPECT JIANGSU AREAS

OW140005 Nanjing Jiangsu Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 9 Jun 86

[Text] Bo Yibo, vice chairman of the Standing Committee of the Advisory Commission of the CPC Central Committee, inspected some urban and rural areas in Jiangsu from 29 May to 9 Jun in the company of Han Peixin, secretary of the Jiangsu Provincial CPC Committee. During the discussions with the leaders of provincial and municipal organizations and some enterprises, he urged the cadres and the masses to adhere to reform, have the courage to break conventions, and contribute their experiences to the establishment and improvement of a new order.

While visiting Quanzhou Township in Wuxi County, Bo Yibo inspected the township-run woolen textile plant and a plant producing printing and dyeing equipment. He also had cordial conversations with the peasants. A township cadre told him: Workers of rural factories now constitute 75 percent of the township's labor force, and only during busy farming seasons will these workers take a few days leave from the factories to take part in rush harvesting and planting; and the township's 37,000 people's average annual per capita income has reached 883 yuan.

Bo Yibo said: It is significant that, after the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, people in the township have displayed the spirit of reform and strived to achieve common prosperity by integrating agriculture and industry, subsidizing and promoting agricultural production with industrial production. Rural enterprises must surmount their difficulties by displaying the spirit of reform and adopting measures for reform.

During his visit in Wuxi City, Bo Yibo inspected the Wuxi Microelectronics Corporation, a company under the Ministry of Electronics Industry. Here he inspected the nation's largest production line producing integrated circuits for color television sets.

In Changzhou City, one of the cities designated for experimenting with comprehensive economic reform, Bo Yibo inspected a diesel engine plant, a corduroy plant, and a knitwear plant; and heard briefings by the Changzhou Municipal CPC Committee and the Changzhou municipal people's government. He expressed special interest in those plants whose directors are responsible for their plants' profits or losses. He said: To ensure successful implementation of this director-in-charge system, we should choose capable comrades who know economic work and management to be directors having the power to manage their plants' operation.

In Nanjing, which is one of China's electronics industrial bases, Bo Yibo inspected the Huadong Electronics Tubes Plant and the Nanjing Wireless Equipment Plant. He also heard a report about the new problems appearing in the process when the Ministry of Electronics Industry transferred seven mismanaged enterprises to Nanjing.

During his meeting with leaders of Jiangsu Province, Bo Yibo pointed out: Reform is a gigantic systematic engineering project involving the operation in many areas. Now that we have set the general course for reform, we should rely on ourselves to accumulate the needed experiences and explore the useful methods. As long as we do this, our reform certainly will be a success.

JINGJI RIBAO ON NEW WAY TO GOVERN ENTERPRISES

[Commentator's article: "Make Efforts To Explore New Ways For Urban Governments To Administer Enterprises"]

[Text] Since the enterprises that were directly under the jurisdiction of the industrial and communications departments of the State Council and provincial governments were transferred to our major cities, the question of how our urban governments are to administer enterprises has become a question that every urban government must answer. The news about Dalian City giving different guidance to different kinds of enterprises published by this paper today shows that the key to this question is to change the government's functions in accordance with the requirements of separating government functions from the functions of enterprises. If our urban governments do not take the initiative to change their functions and if they continue to administer enterprises with their old ways and methods of administration, it will be impossible to fully bring about the positive effect of the policy on transferring the enterprises to cities or to actually expand the enterprises' decisionmaking power. Then it will be very difficult for the entire reform to deepen.

In changing the functions of urban government, we have to solve the following three problems related to our understanding: 1) There is the idea that urban government departments differ from provincial ones in that they have no responsibility to transfer their enterprises downward; therefore, they have to continue to manage the production and operation activities of their enterprises because it is difficult to "separate government functions from the functions of enterprises." 2) There is the idea that an administrative department of an urban government can only be a department with "dual functions." It is both a responsible department for the enterprises and a functional department that manages the whole line of trade. 3) There is the idea that at present an enterprise needs a "mother-in-law" while a comprehensive administrative department needs "funnels;" therefore, there is no way to change their functions. All these ideas have to some extent been generally accepted. This proves that if we do not change people's ideas about government functions, it is impossible to correctly exercise these functions.

Dalian City's experience shows that although a city has not responsibility to transfer enterprises downward, it has the responsibility to "emancipate" enterprises. In other words, it should emancipate enterprises by freeing them from their status as appendages to government departments. If this problem is not solved, it will be impossible to invigorate our enterprises and it will also be difficult to improve our government's economic administrative work. There is indeed something special in the relations between our urban governments and their enterprises. But this does not mean that there is no need to separate their functions from the functions of enterprises. It means that the changes in the governments' functions have something special in that they are much more difficult than separating government functions from the functions of enterprises.

Learning the skill to administer entire lines of trade is a new task for our urban governments in administering their enterprises. Many years of practice has proved that it is difficult for urban governments to satisfactorily carry out its administration if they are assigned with both the task of directly administering and managing some of their enterprises as well as managing in a centralized manner whole lines of trade.

The "dual functions" make it hard for a government department to be free from the bad practice of treating its enterprises differently. Consciously and unconsciously, it shows favoritism to the enterprises directly under its management. As a result, for a long time, it has not been able to establish its management over the whole line of trade. Even if it has established such management, it is difficult for the management to be carried out satisfactorily.

As our various reform measures are not coordinated, we are indeed still unable to entirely separate government functions from the functions of enterprises. Our urban governments and their functional departments sometimes have to directly participate in the administration and management of their enterprises. This is a special process in the process of the change of systems, but this is not the major function of these governments and nor should our governments continue to do so for a long time. They should conscientiously create conditions in order to realize the changes in functions as soon as possible. The changes in urban governments' functions consist of changes in the contents, methods and scope of administration, which make the management considerably different from the previous administration: the urban governments no longer directly manage the production and operational activities of enterprises, but carry out a line-of-trade management over all the enterprises in various lines of trade. They no longer mainly apply administrative means in interfering with the microeconomic activities of the enterprises, but mainly apply policies, plans, and legislation and economic means in exercising macroeconomic control and readjustment over the activities of the whole economy. In order to realize these changes, all cities should strive to explore new paths for governments to administer enterprises. They should gradually reduce their old functions through streamlining their administration and transfering power downward and they should gradually augment their new functions through their work of line-of-trade management. They should adopt transitional forms of organization to satisfactorily carry out the transition from old to new functions. They should give different guidance to different kinds of enterprises and thus provide them with good service. The task of first priority now is to continue to implement the state's various regulations on streamlining adminstration, transferring power downward, and expanding the decision-making power of enterprises. Implementing these regulations in a down-to-the-earth manner and transferring to enterprises all the power that should be granted to them means taking a key step forward in separating government functions from the functions of enterprises. Second, we should start from the formulation of development plans, policies, legislation and regulations, from coordination and cooperation between enterprises, and from data and information to gradually carry out unified administration over whole lines of trade. Third, government departments should conscientiously administer the matters that are to be administered by governments, "consider what enterprises are worrying about," and try every possible means to help enterprises solve problems and develop production.

JINGJI RIBAO ON SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY EXCHANGES

[Article by the International Scientific and Technological Cooperation Bureau of the State Science and Technology Commission: "China Continues to Strengthen Scientific and Technological Exchanges and Cooperation With Other Countries"]

[Text] Under the guidance of the party's policy of opening up to the outside world, China achieved gratifying results in foreign scientific and technological exchanges and cooperation during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period.

First, the scale of the foreign scientific and technological exchanges and cooperation was large, with the participation of many people. China conducted more than 22,000 items of scientific exchange with other countries from 1981 to 1985, an increase of 260 percent over the period from 1976 to 1980. More than 70,000 people participated in the scientific exchanges, an increase of 200 percent over the period from 1976 to 1980. New development has been made in the methods of exchange, from conducting general technological inspection and holding technological meetings to jointly conducting research and inspection, carrying out cooperative experiments, providing technological consultation, running training classes, and holding academic symposiums.

Second, the bilateral scientific and technological cooperation between governments has developed greatly. Since the founding of the PRC, China has signed agreements on bilateral scientific and technological cooperation with the governments of more than 30 countries, including East European countries; Asian, African, and Latin American countries, such as the DPRK, Pakistan, Mexico, Argentina, and Zambia; and developed Western capitalist countries, such as France, Britain, the FRG, the United States, and Japan. During the period from 1981 to 1985, in addition to continuously developing scientific and technological exchanges and cooperation with these countries, China signed government-to-government agreements with 16 countries on scientific and technological exchanges. By the end of 1985, China still had relations of agreement with 48 countries. China engaged in more than 3,000 cooperation items with other countries over the past 5 years, involving technology of industrial and agricultural production, new technology, and basic theoretical science. Both sides believe that they have benefited greatly from the exchanges and cooperation.

Third, multilateral scientific and technological exchanges and cooperation have been developed and strengthened. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, China also greatly developed multilateral scientific and technological exchanges and cooperation with international scientific and technological organizations, mainly UN organizations. In addition to attending such important international conferences as the conference of the UN Scientific and Technological Development Committee, the UN conference on new energy and renewable energy, and the UN conference on the exploration and peaceful use of outer space, China sent representatives to the relevant scientific and technological meetings held by UN special organizations. Moreover, all departments and localities in China sent a great number of scientific and technological personnel to attend other international scientific and technological symposiums held by government and nongovernment international scientific and technological organizations. During the period from 1981 to 1985, more than 13,000 scientific and technological personnel from China attended international scientific and technological symposiums on 5,400 items, both figures showing an increase over those of 5 years ago.

Fourth, through the exchanges and cooperation, China has learned and understood many advanced scientific and technological achievements and much suitable management experience, which has played an active role in training talented people for China, in upgrading China's scientific and technological level, and in promoting scientific and technological development and economic construction in China. For example, in 1985, the China science and technology exchange center invited more than 50 retired foreign specialists of various professions to give technological guidance and exchange technology in China. These retired foreign specialists played their role in promoting technological transformation in China's old enterprises, in conducting trial production of new products, and in improving business management.

They were commended by the departments concerned. Of course, our exchanges were based on equality and mutual benefit. China also introduced its own traditional technology, scientific and technological achievements, and production experience to the relevant countries. For example, China's advanced agricultural science and technology in breeding grain and cash crops, its advanced technology in dusting coal powder in blast furnaces and in apex-combusting style hot-blast stoves, and its traditional technology, such as traditional Chinese medical science, traditional Chinese medicine, and acupuncture anaesthesia have all been well received by other countries.

The period from 1986 to 1990 is the period of China's Seventh 5-Year Plan, during which time China's reform and open policy will develop further. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, in developing foreign scientific and technological exchanges and cooperation, China will continue to implement the policy of reform and opening up to the outside world and strive to make new progress and achievements in the spirit of seeking truth from facts and in accordance with needs and possibilities. Therefore, we must further strengthen management in foreign scientific exchanges and cooperation; formulate and revise necessary regulations and rules beneficial to further opening up to the outside world; set up and perfect statistical systems and methods; grasp the implementation and application of the achievements made in foreign scientific and technological exchanges and cooperation; overcome bureaucratism; and pay more attention to practical results.

We will continue to strengthen bilateral scientific and technological exchanges and cooperation with other countries, and encourage all departments and areas to establish relations of exchange and cooperation with corresponding departments and units in foreign countries.

For a relatively long period in the future, technological transformation and advancement of traditional industries will play an important role in China's economic development. In addition to technological transformation in large and key enterprises, a great number of medium-sized and small enterprises and township enterprises will gradually take the road of professionalism and modernization. To reflect this characteristic and foreign scientific and technological cooperation, we must treat absorbing and exploiting advanced and applicable technology suited to China's characteristics as an important part of scientific and technological cooperation. Meanwhile, in order to gradually change the backward status of China's industrial and technological structure and to keep pace with the new technological revolution, we must strengthen foreign scientific and technological cooperation in the field of new technology.

We will continue to strengthen multilateral scientific and technological exchanges and cooperation and strive to hold as many international scientific and technological conferences as possible in China so that more scientific and technological personnel in China can take part in international scientific and technological activities. Continued efforts should be made to improve conditions for carrying out international scientific and technological exchanges in China. We must make more efforts to build the China science and technology exchange center building, the Beijing science and technology center building, and science and technology exchange centers in all localities, so as to create necessary material conditions and provide places for China to further expand scientific and technological exchanges with all countries throughout the world.

CHEN PIXIAN INSPECTS SHANGHAI STEEL COMPLEX

OW040751 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 0000 GMT 4 Jun 86

[Text] Chen Pixian, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee and vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, inspected the Shanghai Boashan Steel Complex on 2 June. He said: Workers at the Baoshan Steel Complex must master modern technologies and refrain from solely learning how to operate machinery. They must also study how to fix production equipment.

Accompanied by Zeng Qinghong, Standing Committee member of the municipal CPC Committee, Comrade Chen Pixian inspected the Shanghai Baoshan Steel Complex. (Gu Erpei), deputy head of the Boashan Steel Complex command headquarters and Secretary of the steel complex party committee, and (Wang Jingfa), deputy head of the Baoshan Steel Complex command headquarters accompanied Chen Pixian to inspect the ironworks, the steel mill, and the steel rolling mill of the Baoshan Steel Complex.

During the inspection tour, Comrade Chen Pixian noted the lack of trees in certain parts of the steel complex. He said: It is necessary to spend more money in planting trees and beautifying the environment.

Comrade Chen Pixian also held a forum in the steel complex to understand the iron and steel industries in Shanghai and the work in the Baoshan and Wusong Districts.

Tours Factories. Rural Areas

OW091352 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 0000 GMT 9 Jun 86

[Text] During his recent inspection tour of Shanghai's factories and rural areas, Chen Pixian, member of the CPC Central Committee Secretariat and vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, encouraged cadres at the grass-roots level to work unremittingly, achieve new results, and apply themselves to remaking Shanghai.

On 2 June Comrade Chen Pixian visited the Baoshan Iron and Steel Complex, and inspected the ironworks, the steelworks, and the blooming mill. He expressed satisfaction over the achievements made in the first-stage project of the Baoshan Iron and Steel Complex.

On 5 June Chen Pixian went to Songjiang County to learn how the rural areas have implemented various policies since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. Chen Pixian said: Changes in rural areas have been brought about by overcoming the leftist ideology. We still should not lower our guard against its influence. This is the case with rural areas and is more so with the cities. Do not forget the goal proposed by the party Central Committee of becoming well-to-do with a percapita income of $800; the basic approaches to attaining this goal are paying close attention to grain production and seeking simultaneous developments in agriculture, sideline production, and industry. Comrade Chen Pixian also called at peasants' livelihood.

COMMENTARY STRESSES DEVELOPMENT OF SHENZHEN ECONOMY

["Special Commentary" by Liang Wensen: "Consolidate and Develop the Economy of the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone"]

[Text] After almost 6 years of hard work, the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone has begun to create an environment for investment. Over the past 6 years, foreign capital totaling $923 million has been introduced, accounting for one-fifth of the country's total; over one-third of the imported technology and equipment is advanced; investments in fixed assets total 6.47 billion yuan; and 9 million square meters of floor space has been completed. In 1985, the workers' percapita production in industry was 29,000 yuan, an increase of 13.6 percent over the previous year. Following the rapid development of its eeconomy, great changes have taken place in the industrial structure of the special economic zone. In 1985, the net output values of building industry, industry, and commerce accounted for 30 percent, 28.8 percent, and 25.6 percent of the city's national revenue, respectively, thus becoming the three mainstays of its social assets. With an upswing in industrial production, industry is beginning to carry forward other undertakings. This development trend will become more prominent in the future.

The special economic zone is now developing an outward-oriented economy. In this new period, the special economic zone will gradually realize its limited, outward-oriented target, aiming to make foreign capital the main source of its funds and to export most of its products, to increase foreign exchange earnings for the state. It will also make industry the main component of its production structure while developing some high technology industry and traditional industry which has been transformed or equipped with advanced technology. The tasks in this new period are more difficult than those in the period of pioneering and laying foundations. For this reason, it is necessary to do a good job in giving macroeconomic guidance and carrying out microeconomic invigoration.

1. The purpose of providing macroeconomic guidance is to enable the special economic zone to attain better economic results in its economic development.

Previously, the special economic zone developed its economy by expanding production by extension. From now on, it should gradually shift to expanding production by intension, with emphasis on economic results. For this reason, the special economic zone should conscientiously control the scale of investment and readjust the structure of investment.

First, it should appropriately control the scale and growth rate of investment in fixed assets in order to achieve the best economic results.

Apart from being restricted by the domestic economy, the scale and growth rate of investment are also affected by some factors in the international economy. In handling the scale and growth rate of investment in fixed assets, overall consideration should be given to the relationships between an entity and its components, between long-term and immediate interests, and between domestic and foreign factors, for the purpose of attaining the best macroeconomic results.

To put the scale and growth rate of investment within a rational limit, it is imperative to take account of the factors both inside and outside investment plans.

State investments, which include investments by departments of the central authorities and various provinces, should be listed in plans for investment in fixed assets and regarded as factors in investment plans. Investments by enterprises of the central authorities, provinces, the special economic zone, as well as foreign businessmen should not be listed in investment plans, since they cannot be controlled. However, these uncontrollable factors should be handled in such a manner so that they are in harmony with the funds for investment in the fixed assets of the special economic zone. All investment, whether inside or outside the plan, should be carried out on a scale and at a growth rate beneficial to the transition toward an outward-oriented economy, with the aim of speeding up production and attaining good economic results.

The special economic zone has close economic relations with foreign countries. It can import some building materials from the international market and has opened a market for the building industry, in which some 100 construction and engineering companies (with over 100,000 construction workers) have put in tenders for construction projects. All this has provided favorable conditions for investments in the special economic zone. These special factors should be taken into account while making investments in the special economic zone.

Second, in investing in fixed assets, stress should be put on the construction of industry, energy, transportation, and telecommunications.

The rationalization of the investment structure can produce a great impact on the development of production and the improvement of economic results. Since construction started, the special economic zone has paid attention to developing production and improving people's livelihood. To promote the transition to an outward-oriented economy, it is necessary to rationalize the industrial structure of the special economic zone through the rationalization of its investment structure. Therefore, the special economic zone should continue to pay attention to encouraging investors to concentrate on industrial production.

The proportion of the special economic zone's industrial investment to the total foreign investment in the zone rose rapidly from 23.3 percent in 1979 to 57.9 percent in 1985. From now on, in industrial investment, the stress should be laid on industries which can help increase foreign exchange earnings and on industrial projects urgently needed by the country. For its immediate interests, the special economic zone should take the electronics industry, light industry (which includes mainly food, textiles, clothing, and packing material industries), and the building material industry (which includes new-type building material industry and decoration material industry) as the mainstays of its industrial development. As for the electronics industry, which has excessively expanded and accounts for over 37 percent of the total net industrial output value, consideration should be given to developing advanced technology for the purpose of manufacturing advanced electronics parts and components as well as electronics products which can help increase foreign exchange earnings. With technologically advanced industry, including traditional industry which has been transformed with advanced technology, and with total development in energy, transportation, and telecommunications, the industrial and technological structures of the entire special economic zone will be placed on a rational foundation, thereby creating a favorable condition for an overall upswing in industry and even in its entire economy.

2. In terms of the microeconomy, enterprises in the special economic zone should strive to produce more with less investment and constantly improve their management.

As the special economic zone is in the economic process of regulation by market mechanisms, it still lacks experience in how to apply regulation by market mechanisms without departing from macroeconomic guidance in its enterprise management and in how to produce more with less investment. In this respect, the special economic zone is required to explore.

Although in its economic structural reform the special economic zone started expanding enterprises' powers a long time ago and this has greatly improved enterprise management, other reforms still lag behind. For example, since the delegation of powers to the lower levels, no effective comprehensive measures have been worked out with regard to shifting from direct to indirect intervention. Various economic laws and regulations, including laws on companies, laws on bankruptcy, and mortage laws, have not been formulated or promulgated or are imperfect. As a result, law breakers can avail themselves of these loopholes, and it is difficult to carry out indirect intervention. In addition, the quality of enterprise managerial cadres is not good but the special economic zone is busy expanding contruction and setting up factories. Therefore, management work is lagging behind and economic results are not ideal. To produce better economic results with less investment, it is essential to strengthen the management of enterprises, to improve their operation, and to enhance their labor productivity. With the expansion of enterprises' powers, we shoulden courage enterprises to carry out profound reforms, including reforms in the management of personnel, property, materials, production, supply, and marketing, apart from providing external conditions for their invigoration.

Meanwhile, we should have a good understanding of the management and operation of enterprises so that we can give guidance according the particular situation, such as: 1) enterprises with advanced management should be encouraged to learn from their experiences; 2) enterprises with an ordinary managerial level, which make up the majority, are required to improve their management or readjust their leadership groups; and 3) loss-incurring enterprises with no prospects for further development should be ordered to shift to other undertakings or to closedown.

Apart from state-run and collective enterprises, there are also enterprises involving foreign investments in the special economic zone (including joint ventures, cooperatively-run enterprises, and wholly-owned enterprises). As their situations are complex, it requires profound investigation and study to sort them out. The special economic zone should publicize advanced managerial and operational experiences on the one hand and, on the other, get rid of anything harmful to state interests or which causes long-term losses. Only in this way can its economy grow healthily.

GUANGZHOU TO COMBINE MILITARY, CIVILIAN TRAINING

HK190500 Guangzhou NANFANG RIBAO in Chinese 18 Jun 86 p 1

[Report by He Jinsheng: "The Guangzhou Military Region Will Carry Out Training Which Combines Military and Civilian Skills in One Scheme"]

[Text] Training which combines military and civilian skills -- a major decision of strategic importance -- will be carried out in the Guangzhou Military Region beginning the fourth quarter of this year. At a cadres meeting yesterday morning, commander You Taizhong announced this decision, which had been made by the CPC Committee of the Guangzhou Military Region.

The CPC Committee of the Guangzhou Military Region made the decision in line with the instructions of the Military Commission and the General Staff Headquarters. At the meeting yesterday, Zhang Mingyuan, director of the political department of the military region, briefed some 1,300 cadres of the staff, political, and logistics departments of the military region on how the Nanjing Military Region conducted training which combines military and civilian skills. Commander You Taizhong spoke on this issue and set detailed requirements for the Army units under the command of the Guangzhou Military Region.

In recent years, at least 50,000 soldiers of the Guangzhou Military Region have taken part in such training every year, and two-thirds of the participants have acquired certificates of specialized skills and technical grading. To carry out such training more profoundly, the CPC Committee of the Guangzhou Military Region decided to popularize the experience ofa division of the Nanjing Military Region and to put the training on civilian skills on the right track.

Also present at the meeting were leaders of the military region and its organs, including Zhang Zhongxian, Zhang Wannian, Liu Anyuan, Li Xilin, and Chi Yunxiu.

OVERSEAS INVESTORS MAKING PROFITS IN GUANGZHOU

OW171152 Beijing XINHUA in English 1129 GMT 17 Jun 86

[Text] Guangzhou, June 17 (XINHUA) -- Overseas investors have good prospects of making profits in Guangzhou, capital of Guangdong Province, Mayor Zhu Senlin said today. A recent survey of 139 joint ventures between the province and foreign businesses shows that 89 percent of them are profitable.

The China Hotel, which opened in June, 1984, has earned a profit of 96 million yuan. The output value of the Jingying Light Decoration Company was nearly four million yuan, with a profit of more than one million yuan last year; and the Hong Kong investor of the Renren Restaurant has recovered his one-million-yuan investment, with interest, two years ahead of schedule.

"It is understandable that some enterprises run a deficit for the first few months or even for one or two years. But they can change the situation to make surpluses after improving their management," the mayor said.

By the end of February this year, 471 Guangzhou-foreign joint ventures had been given the go-ahead. They cover the fields of industry, agriculture, construction, transport, commerce and tourism. Guangzhou signed contracts for 42 ventures with overseas investors in the first three months of this year, involving 160 million U.S. dollars of foreign investment. The investors were from Asia, Europe and America. In 1985, 289 joint-venture contracts, involving 470 million U.S. dollars of foreign investment, were signed.

HUBEI: WUHAN SEEKS FOREIGN BRAINPOWER FOR MODERNIZATION

[By staff reporter Zhu Ling]

[Text] Wuhan, the largest industrial city in central China, is at the forefront of a nationwide campaign to recruit overseas brainpower to accelerate industrial modernization. A plan is being drafted by the city to increase "intelligence imports" over the five years to an average of about 80 foreign technical specialists a year. Beginning in 1983, the city began tapping the ranks of outside experts. Liu Zeqing, the city's vice-mayor, said at least a third of factories utilizing foreign specialists have shown "remarkable economic and social results."

Wuhan, capital of Hubei Province, now boasts China's only foreign director of a state-owned factory. Werner Gerich, an engineer from Federal Germany, was appointed directed of the city's diesel engine factory in late 1984. Liu told CHINA DAILY that the city this year will appoint the country's second foreign director, also from Federal Germany, to head one of Wuhan's grinding machine plants.

The city's overseas recruiting is in response to the recent call by Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang, who described "brainpower imports" as a policy of national strategic importance. A special recruitment committee, personally led by the city's mayor, says the practice is becoming an indispensable part of the city's modernization drive.

The move to import foreign specialists started gaining momentum last year when the city invited 55 foreign experts, from a number of countries, to work in Wuhan. Wuhan has thus far invited about 90 specialists from such countries as Federal Germany, the United States, Canada, Japan, Britain and France. Most of them have served as technical advisors for city industries, staying between one and 18 months.

"We are ready to hire more foreign specialists or retired engineers, with an eye towards updating our management methods and improving product quality," said Liu. He said imported brainpower had proven valuable in improving factory management, developiung new products and training local technical personnel.

A fiberglass plant, for example, was salvaged from bankruptcy in 1985 when a retired engineer from Canada was brought over as a technical advisor. His enthusiasm and technical guidance helped the plant upgrade and expand production of fibreglass bathtubs, which today are considered among China's finest. The Canadian advisor also helped the plant expand its product line to complete sets of bathroom fixtures.

The vice-mayor said foreign advisors hammer home the themes of quality, competiton and efficiency, "exerting a perceptible influence on workers' thinking." Foreign specialists have also helped train Chinese technicians. In Wuhan, they have given lectures for at least 300 local technical personnel.

Liu said this autumn Wuhan will invite a group of retired businessmen from Japan and Federal Germany to lecture on the use of financial, tax and auditing mechanisms as economic levers.

BEIJING REPORTS PEASANTS' RISING CONSUMPTION LEVELS

SK131100 Beijing BEIJING RIBAO in Chinese 3 Jun 86 p 1

[Text] People's impressions are that peasants are big eaters. This is caused by long-standing poverty in the rural areas. How can they reduce grain consumption under a situation in which they have to eat much coarse grain and few greasy dishes and undertake strenuous manual labor? Today such a situation has been changed. According to an investigation among 1,100 peasant families in the suburban areas of Beijing conducted by he municipal Statistical Bureau, last year the average per capita grain consumption (unprocessed food grains) of peasants reached 427.4 jin, a decline of 31.4 jin over the previous year.

The municipal Statistical Bureau's investigation report shows that last year's average per capita living expenses of peasants in the suburban areas of Beijing was 510 yuan, an increase of 75 yuan over the previous year. New changes took place in the living expenses:

In the living expenses of peasants, spending on material goods showed an increase of 16.5 percent over the previous year and that on nonmaterial goods (such as for books, tapes, and musical instruments) increased by 62.2 percent, greatly exceeding the growth rate of spending on material goods.

The structure of living expenses has changed. The proportion of food spending dropped from 51.1 percent in the previous year to 41.1 percent, and that of spending on clothing dropped from 11 percent to 10.6 percent. The proportion of spending on daily necessities rose from 17.5 percent to 19.2 percent, and that on buying building materials for building houses rose from 15.6 percent to 17.3 percent.

The number of middle- and high-grade household appliances in use increased remarkably. The average per capita expenditure of peasants families to buy household appliances reached 61 yuan, up 26.8 percent over the previous year. As of the end of last year year, every 100 peasant households had 60 television sets (including seven color television sets), 21 cassette recorders, 23 washing machines, 2 refrigerators, and 2 cameras.

Thanks to the development of the rural commodity economy, the cash income of peasants has increased and their purchasing power has expanded. In living expenses, the proportion of products for self-consumption dropped gradually and that of products sold as commodities increased. Last year the proportion of average per capita cash spending on consumer goods of the peasants reached 86 percent, up 14 percent over the previous year. The proportion ot goods for self-consumption dropped from 18 percent to 14 percent.

SHANXI RADIO COMMENTARY URGES UNIFYING PARTY THINKING

HK190249 Taiyuan Shanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 18 Jun 86

[Station comentary: "Different Ideas in the Party Should Be Brought Into Line With the Objective Truth"]

[Excerpts] One of the current contradictions frequently seen in the party consists of contradictions between different opinions in work and understanding. If these contradictions are solved well, our opinions will be unified and our action unanimous, and our party organizations and leadership collectives will have prestige and fighting strength. Otherwise, we cannot form collectives united for combat.

These contradictions between different opinions in work and in understanding in the party may be caused by disputes between correct and erroneous views and also by disputes between two different erroneous views. Contradictions between different ideas regularly occur in revolution and contruction, and are quite normal. The problem is, how should we take a correct view of these contradictions and resolve them? According to our party's historical experiences, and in particular our party's experiences in handling such contradictions sice the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, there is only one way to resolve these contradictions, and that is to uphold the ideological line of seeking truth from facts constantly advocated by our part,and bring out ideological understanding into line with the objective truth.

We must base everything on reality and make a specific analysis of specific contradictions. For instance, there is a saying that every new leadership group negates the achievements of the former group. How should we deal with this problem? Generally speaking, every leadership group has both achievements and shortcomings, and the achievements are often the main aspect. Both the newly appointed comrades and the retiring old comrades must proceed from objective reality and make a truth-seeking and specific analysis of the work of the former leadership group by dividing one into two. In this way the new and old can cooperate and be united, and our work can be done still better.

We should sincerely listen to the views of others, pool the wisdom of the masses, and form correct understanding and unified thinking. However, certain comrades do not understand this truth. They often stick to their own view, ignore the views of others, and stress their own strong points and others' shortcomings. In this way it is not easy to solve contradictions in work and understanding, and sometimes results in unprinccipled argument within a leadership groups which is thus uanble to unify its thinking or make a resolution.

We are Marxists. In viewing problems, we should lay more stress on materialism and dialectics and less on idealism and metaphysics. In this way we may be able to avoid subjectivism, one-sidedness, superficiality, and absolutism. We should still less make a fuss about our own righteousness. Only practice can test whether a person's views are correct or not.

CHIANG WEGO APPOINTED NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL HEAD

[By Terry Cheng]

[Text] The younger brother of Taiwanese President Chiang Ching-kuo, General Chiang Wego, was yesterday named head of Taiwan's National Security Council (NSC) in a surprise reshuffle of top government and military personnel. In one stroke, the appointment is likely to change the whole succession scenario in Taiwan.

General Chiang replaces Mr Wang Tao-yuan, who was appointed defence minister in a series of moves recommended by President Chiang at a weekly meeting of the Kuomintang's policy-making Central Standing Committee.

The career of General Chiang, 69, has centered on military affairs and he was previously director of the Defence Ministry's United Warfare Training Department. His pormotion to secretary-general of the NSC, which is the president's top advisory body, is the first time he has taken up non-military duties. There was earlier speculation that he was to retire and was not destined to play a significant role in the regime. He had been considered a possible successor to his brother until President Chiang scotched rumours late last year by saying that no one from the Chiang family would become head of state after him.

Given the fact that President Chiang is less energetic than before because of old age and poor health, General Chiang is likely to play a greater role in the NSC than his predecessor, Mr Wang. Some observers, noting his close ties with the Army, believe he may function as a stabilizing force if his brother cannot perform his presidential duties because of serious illness.

General Chiang was in disgrace in 1964 after one of his subordinates staged an abortive mutiny against his father, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. Since then he has held only minor Army appointments, even after his brother came to power in 1978.

The appointments also effectively block General Hau Pei-tsun, chief of the Armed Forces General Staff, from taking up the defence portfolio. Although he has been considered a potential president, this now seems much less likely. General Hau was once believed to be second only to President Chiang in real power.

COMMUNICATIONS MINISTRY WARNED ON MISMANGEMENT OF CAL

[Text] Taipei, June 17 (CNA) -- The nation's highest inspectorate general has decided in principle to issue a warning to the Ministry of Communications and the Civil Aeronautics Administration, accusing them of insufficient supervision of China Airlines which resulted in a series of accidents involving the aircraft of the national flag carrier.

Two Control Yuan members, Yu Ching and Hsu Wen-cheng, who were assigned to look into CAL's management, said in an investigative report that CAL's financial structure is obviously too weak to support its huge operations.

At present, CAL has outstanding debts totaling NT dollar 49.1 billion (about U.S. dollar 1.28 billion), about 5.81 percent of its total debts, they said.

The report was brought up at a meeting of the Control Yuan's committee on communications. Participants in the meeting decided in principle to issue a correction order, or warning, to the two government organizations. They will meet again soon to determine the wording of the connection.

The Ministry of Communications of the Civil Aeronautics Administration, as direct suprevisors of CAL, should be held responsible for the poor management of CAL, which has been running huge debts with various flaws in operations since 1980, Yu and Hsu said in their report.

A series of flight accidents involving CAL's aircraft over the past one year have exposed CAL's poor management, low morale and many other problems in the company's personnel system, they said. CAL has only 19 aircraft, but the number of its staffers exceeds 5,800, they said, indicating that the large expenditures on superfluous personnel have not only worsened the company's financial condition but also resulted in factionalism and endless internal disputes, they said.

Yu and Hsu also accused the two government agencies of purchasing too many kinds of aircraft for China Airlines without considering their economic efficiency. They suggested that the government simplify the models of aircraft in CAL's fleet and buy more fuel-efficient aircraft to help reduce CAS's deficits.

EXPERT PESSIMISTIC ON 16-BIT PC EXPORTS TO U.S.

[Text] Taipei, June 17 (CNA) -- A computer expert in Taipei has predicted dark days lie ahead for exports of the domestically-produced 16-bit personal computers to the United States judging from the U.S. Government's tightened inspection of such products from other countries.

A marketing expert at the Institute of Information Industry said Tuesday that the U.S. Government has recently upgraded its standards in testing the radiation levels of electronics products imported from other countries. As a result, a lot of foreign products have been blocked from the U.S. market, he said. So far, only a few foreign personal computers have passed such tests, he said.

The official, who asked not to be identified, said the upgrading of the inspection standards should be attributed to the pressure from American computer manufacturers who have been suffering from fierce foreign competition in recent years.

He urged the domestic computer makers to begin diversifying their exports to Europe, Southeast Asia and other areas in the world to cope with the impact of a shrinking market in the U.S.

EDITORIAL PRAISES CHEN YUN'S CAUTIONS ON REFORMS

[Editorial: "Fighting 4,000 Years of Ingrained Bad Habits"]

[Text] In the absence of a true opposition party, China needs voices like that of Mr Chen Yun, the widely respected economist and confidante of Mr Deng Xiaoping whose criticisms of China's reform programmes are becoming increasingly forceful.

Much has already been done to restrain sometimes ill-advised and profligate reforms since Mr Chen lashed out at a party conference last year. But the many-headed moster of economic adventurism is proving difficult to bring under control.

It is typical of the way China runs its affairs that the need for a greater sense of urgency in bringing the beast to heel should be emphasised by the publication of a new set of Mr Chen's works, containing at least 44 articles not previously made public.

The serious side-effects of economic reforms have been apparent for some time. Recent efforts to check the excesses committed by privileged cadres who regard the reforms as a heaven-sent opportunity to pillage and profiteer have hardly made a dent in corruption and mismanagement.

Mr Chen has attributed the present malady to a lack of discipline and to attempts to move too far too quickly, but perhaps the real root lies elsewhere. Chinese culture is more than 4,000 years old, which is plenty of time for bad habits to take a most tenacious hold. Bureaucracy is ingrained as a way of life, and although the communists have tried to break the mould, the obstacles in their way are awesome.

For more than two decades, ever since the Great Leap Forward, the people led a frugal existence, denied the material consolations enjoyed as a matter of right in other nations. The open door policy suddenly changed all that; it was like offering a starving person a sumptuous banquet. Gluttony -- and its consequential sickness -- was only to be expected.

A slowing of the pace of reform is a plausible solution, but only a partial one. The increased discipline that Mr Chen Yun sees as a remedy may not be quite so effective, although periodic rectification campaigns may have a similarly salutory effect as occasional fasts would have on a glutton. A massive education effort, however, offers the only real, long term solution, especially to the perennial sickness of entrenched bureaucracy.

The publication of Mr Chen's warnings is timely, although any suggestion that it signals a rift in the party old guard, or a conservative counter-attack aimed at Mr Deng and his colleagues, would be far from the truth. The two elderly leaders share closely similar visions and goals.

Mr Chen's views should be seen as the cautious advice of an older brother to a too-eager sibling. Mr Chen's is the voice of restraint, without which China's ambitious reforms, which Mr Deng himself has described as a bold experiment, could veer completely off course.

SITUATION OF DEFECTING CHINESE 'FISHERMEN' EXAMINED

[By David Chen]

[Text] Nineteen Chinese men trekked 2,500 kilometres across China, bought a dilapidated junk and motored for 30 hours across the Yellow Sea to reach South Korea on Tuesday morning, asking to be sent to Taipei. Their journey across China from Guangdong in the south to Shandong in the north took 15 days.

Their great escape to freedom came to an end when the Korean marine police intercepted the boat off the coast of Sosan, 100 kilometres south of Seoul, and impounded the vessel. Three of the 19 defectors were reported to be government officials. Full details of the defection were made available only yesterday.

Immediately after the Korean marine police released a statement about the incident, the Taiwan Embassy in Seoul notified the South Korean Foreign Ministry that Taipei was very concerned about the "boat people." Some Taiwan newspapers, however, expressed the fear that the 19 might be sent back to Beijing if the Korean authorities treated the matter as if the men had been rescued in distress on the high seas. There has so far been no reaction from Beijing.

First news of the saga came on Tuesday afternoon when the Korean police issued a brief statement: "At 3 am on June 17, marine police found an unidentified boat, about four to five tons, adrift in front of Sosan (a little village north of Kunsan). The police impounded the ship. The vessel was of Chinese origin and 19 persons were on board and were found to be in good shape. They are now in the custody of the authorities. The cause of the vessel drifting into the territorial waters of the Republic of Korea is under investigation. This matter will be handled in accordance with domestic and international law as soon as the investigations are completed."

A police spokesman refused to comment further, but sources said the men were now in custody. This could mean they may be detained for some time before being sent to Taiwan.

While the Korean media reported the incident at length, it was Taiwan's Central News Agency (CNA) which gave a graphic description of the trek. There were two versions as to how they got to South Korea, CNA said. One claimed that they left from Fujian, the other from Shandong. The second version was more reliable, judging from the state of the junk in which they arrived. According to CNA, the 19 people included three government officials, one cook, four farmers, two welders, two sheet metal workers, three merchants, one printer and three drivers. They all spoke with a southern accent and came from one county in Guangdong. Several of them were militiamen or sappers in the People's Liberation Army.

Two weeks ago they began the trek north. Their most likely route would have been through the central provinces of Hunan, Hubei and Henan (rather than the coastal route), where food and lodgings are not difficult to secure. The group travelled part of the way by train but walked a considerable distance to save money to buy the boat.

The report said that in Shandong they bought a decrepit motorised junk for 6,000 yuan (about HK$15,000) and on Sunday night east into the Yellow Sea.

For most of Monday they sailed in the general direction of South Korea and by early Tuesday morning the coast was in sight. But then the motor failed, although the junk drifted further into South Korean waters. CNA said that most of them swam ashore and asked to be sent to Taiwan.

Korean newspapers, however, said the boat developed engine trouble and sent out a distress signal. A Korean patrol boat responded and towed the craft to shore.

This is the second time a Chinese vessel has mysteriously arrived in Korean waters. In March last year a torpedo boat was towed into a Korean port after an apparent mutiny in which six of the 19 men on board were killed. The Korean authorities ruled out any political motives and after several days of negotiations the boat and crew were handed back to China.

There have also been six cases of Chinese Air Force aircraft flown to South Korea since 1961. Their crews were all subsequently sent to Taiwan where they recieved a hero's welcome and monetary rewards.

EDITORIAL VIEWS PROBLEM OF PRC DEFECTORS VIA SEOUL

[Editorial: "Unwelcome Guests in Seoul"]

[Text] South Korean is once agiain faced with the troublesome question of defectors from China who want to go to Taiwan. There is no likelihood that the 19 people who landed near Kunsan on Tuesday will be sent back to Beijing, they are defectors and international practice demands their request for asylum in a third country should be respected.

South Korea has done just that in previous defections. Even in the CAAC [Civil Aviation Administration of China] hijacking three years ago, the six hijackers were allowed to go to Taipei after serving prison sentences.

In the past 18 months, though, there have been so many mainland defectors using South Korea as a stepping stone to Taiwan that it has become an embarrassment. Most of them have been from northern China, but the latest incident indicates southerners are now getting in on the act.

If this trend continues, Seoul must fear South Korea will end up in a similar situation to Hong Kong's at the height of the exodus from Vietnam. The prospect of endless boatloads of people fleeing the mainland, using Korea as a stopping off point, is distinctly unappealing.

An additional problem is the possible deterioration of contacts between South Korea and China, which over the past five years have been steadily improving in spite of the fact that they do not maintain diplomatic relations.

With summer setting in and the seas relatively calm, South Korea may be facing a problem with which we in Hong Kong will have a great deal of sympathy.

TA KUNG PAO COLUMN ASSESSES DOUBLE HUNDRED PRINCIPLE

HK190345 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in English 19 Jun 86 p 2

["The Past Week" column]

[Text] "Double-Hundred Principle" Again

In these columns last week, we discussed the new wave of discussions in favour of D-HP -- "the double hundred principle," or the principle of letting a hundred flowers bloom and a hundred schools contend. And then we predicted that, it seems, the wave of discussion, which had been going on for about a month, had not reached its end. That now looks like an understatment. For even when that was being written, the PEOPLE'S DAILY published details for a forum arranged with the joint effort of Marxism-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought Study Society, China Writers' Association, Political Study Society, The Federation of China Economic Societies, the Natural Dialectics Study Society, the Marxism-Leninism of the China Academy of Social Sciences, etc.

The names of the organizations seem to indicate a certain degree of orthodoxy. But the reports read at the forum, which was held to mark the 30th anniversary of the enunciation of D-HP, sounded hardly all that orthodox.

Among those who read their reports at the forum were leading members of various academic societies. But there was also the 29-year-old economist, Ma Ding, whose work "The Ten Shifts in Contemporaty Chinese Economic Studies," published last year, stirred up an instant controversy. Now this young economist said at the forum:

Academic questions should not be subject to administrative or organizational measures, for these can only do harm to the luxuriant growth and development of sciences. In fact, these measures will be even more harmful to the growth of the young (scholars) themselves.

Stressing that D-HP is a lasting as well as fundamental principle, Ma calls for full legal safeguard for the freedom of creation, study and speech and the equality among those who take part in such studies and discussions, with no special privileges accorded to anyone.

Citing what Einstein said about the objective and subjective fears, Yan Jiaqi expressed hopes for an environment in which those who look for truth and stick to what they have found will not come under attacks or persecutions. And he then goes on:

This is to put the desire to look for truth and for what is beautiful high above any other desires. It is only on this basis that sciences and arts can develop and the civilization of humanity can maintain its incessant progress. If today, in these 80's of the 20th century, we did not opt for the search for truth and the beautiful; if, in trying to defend ourselves from certain possible attacks and to avoid possible harms, we should carefully pick our ways through the words which bring us political safety; and if merely for the purpose of giving authority to our views and fending off verbal attacks, we should opt for meticulously selected words from Marx and Lenin -- then, such options will not bring us any creation and would certainly have nothing to do with "the freedom of academic study and creation."

Literary Works and Socialism

Throughout these reports, talks and writings, there has been no mention of the four fundamental principles or how they should apply to the question on hand. Only the legal aspects of the works which come close to malicious libel and sedition, and works of bad tastes (a euphemism for sex and violence) were discussed. To deal with these aspects, the new criminal code has, of course, made ample provision.

When Peng Zhen brought forth the draft version of China's Fifth Constitution, he stressed its legal force and the fact that the four fundamental principles provided the guiding spirit in drafting the Constitution. In fact none of the four are repeated word by word in the Constitution. Obviously if legal actions were to be taken against the violation of these principles, even the related clauses in the Constitution would be inoperative in the absence of precisively worded criminal codes.

But one of the participants at the 26 May forum, Wu Mingyu, did come very close to this question. He said that the call on "artists and scientists to serve the socialist cause" should not "put a limit to every work or research subject". This is especially true with subjects as sciences (both natural and social) and history.

This has been said before, but there are still lingering worries at the back of many people's minds. In China's Regulations on Graduate Studies adopted in February 1980, for example, one of the qualifications laid down for the applicants to pursue such studies specifies that they should support the leadership of the Chinese Communist Party and the social system.

Ironically, only a year or so after the promulgation of this regulation, Wang Guowei and his pioneer work on China's ancient oracle texts were rehabilitated academically and he was publicly recognized as a great scholar. For decades Wang's works were shunned because he was not only not a socialist, or even a republican, but a diehard royalist who continued to sport his pigtail and owe allegiance to the Manchu Dynasty (though he was a Han), and finally drowned himself when a royalist resurrection coup failed.

Probably, the inhibiting clause was there just as a necessary decoration and nobody is taking it seriously. But unfortunately, somebody did. A young historian had written a brilliant thesis on the question why China's feudal society lasted so long. When armed with this, he applied to do graduate work at a university, he was unceremoniously turned down by a Marxist professor, who said, "I don't have to read this trash. A look at the title and I know that this is out-and-out non-Marxist." This may be just a single case, and I certainly hope it is.

But looking from another angle, at this time of open-door policy and international exchange, are we to set up different political conditions for domestic candidates and candidates from abroad? If so, that would be most awkward.

Wu also says, "We insist that personal likes and dislikes, including those of ranking officials, should not be allowed to decide whether a literary work or certain results of scientific research are correct or wrong (meaning whether they conform to socialism or not)."

The message is that the final decision should be left to the people of today or even of future generations.

CHENG MING VIEWS DEBATE OVER THREE GORGES PROJECT

HK131125 Hong Kong CHENG MING in Chinese No 104, 1 Jun 86 pp 18-22

[Article by Mu Fu: "The Earthshaking Three Gorges Project" -- capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Excerpts] "Walls of stone will stand upstreatm to the west to hold back Wushan's cloud and rain till a smooth lake rises in the narrow gorges. The mountain goddess, if she is still there, will marvel at a world so changed." This poem, to the tune of Shui Tiao Keh Tou," by Mao Zedong in 1958, has almost been forgotten by the people. However, once again it is now being quoted in Mainland China's newspapers and periodicals.

A year ago, while introducing the Gezhou Dam project, RENMIN RIBAO expressed that: "The day is not far off when the Three Gorges Dam will begin to be built; and the magnificent idea of 'a smooth lake rising in the narrow gorges' will surely be realized by this generation of ours!" At a press conference held on 4 April, Vice Premier Li Peng said that "the Three Gorges project is a great project with comprehensive benefits of power generation, flood prevention, and shipping. This project not only has a bearing on the current four modernizations drive but also will be very important to our coming generations." Deng Xiaoping expressed his opinion, almost at the same time, that the Three Gorges project "has more advantages than disadvantages," (according to an American journalist).

Nevertheless, this great project has evoked public criticism. Through the CPPCC conference, the opposition faction against the Three Gorges project in Mainland China has delivered a high-sounding report on the postponement of the project, and overseas personages belonging to the left, the middle, and the right have almost invariably raised doubts, different opinion, or objections to the Three Gorges project. It is rare that overseas personages have shown such great solicitude for a construction project on the mainland. This also demonstrates the extraordinary significance of this unique project in the world.

In the face of the opinions of various sides, the Fourth Plenary Session of the Sixth NPC, which closed in mid-April, did not include the Three Gorges project in the Seventh 5-Year Plan." Nevertheless, the importance of the project has still been affirmed, the positive attitude toward the construction of the project remains as before, and only the date for the commencement of the construction of the project is undetermined.

The Reasons for the Affirmation of the Three Gorges Project

The reasons for the Chinese Government's making up its mind to build the Three Gorges Dam can be analyzed in light of two aspects.

The necessity for the exploration of natural resources is an objective aspect.

1. FLOOD PREVENTION

A bigger reservoir possesses bigger flood storage capacity. According to calculations by the Chang Jiang planning office (which is a large institution responsible for harnessing the Chang Jiang and led by Lin Yishan over a long period of time), if the Three Gorges project is built according to the low-dam plan, with the water storage line being 150 meters above sea level and the antiflood storage capacity being 22 billion cubic meters, the great floods which occur only once in a century can be prevented; and in the event of the floods which occur only once in 10 centuries, safety can still be ensured if only flood diversion is effected in the Jing Jiang. (A flood-diversion area was built there in 1952, which can receive 6 billion cubic meters of floodwater when necessary.)

2. POWER GENERATION -- Following the completion of the project, the Three Gorges Dam will have a great potential for generating hydropower. According to the feasibility study report made in 1984, the total installed capacity of the Three Gorges power station will be 13 million kilowatts and the annual generated energy will be 67.7 billion kilowatt-hours, which is equal to one-sixth of the total generated energy in the country at present and exceeds the capacity of the Itaipu hydroelectric station in Brazil, the largest in the world. Moreover, occupying an ideal geographical position and having Beijing, Shanghai, and Tianjin within its radius of economic power transmission, the Three Gorges project can make up the serious electricity shortage in east and central China.

3. NAVIGATION -- With its freight volume lagging far behind those of the smaller rivers in Europe and America, it is estimated that 90 percent of the Chang Jiang's potential has not yet been brought into play. Moreover, noted for its dangerous navigation, the Chuan Jiang (the section between Yibin in Sichuan and Yichang in Hubei) has too many shoals and rapids and can hardly be used. However, after the completion of the Three Gorges Dam, the backwater area would reach areas above Fuling and submerge all the shoals and rapids in the three gorges. In addition, the 500-km-long deep-water channel formed as a result of the construction of the dam would enable 10,000-ton vessels to sail directly to Chongqing through its locks.

The above-mentioned three points demonstrate the important hydraulic characteristics of the Three Gorges Project, which have long attracted the attention of the Chinese and foreign personages who are interested in China's natural resources, notwithstanding that these characteristics are still rather controversial in terms of technology.

Judged from the angle of humanism, we can see the other aspect of reasons for the construction of the Three Gorges project in China.

1. BEING RELATED TO CHINA'S ENERGY STRATEGY -- Hydraulic power generation occupies a very important position in the guiding ideology for China's energy development. In October 1980, Zhao Ziyang pointed out that "being quite different from coal and petroleum, which are all linear energy, hydropower is renewable energy and does not have a problem of pollution." Therefore, it should be grasped as a strategic measure. A study report called "China's Energy by the Year 2000," released in November 1985, says that "as our country is rich in hydropower resources, the most practical way of improving the energy structure is to expedite hydropower construction."

After the Cultural Revolution, the principle of "giving priority to hydropower in power construction" was established, but the electricity shortage still ran as much as [illegible]0 billion kilowatt-hours per year for a long period of time. It was against such a background that the planning of the construction of the Three Gorges project was expedited.

Early this year, Li Rui, who is "quite a dab hand" leader in charge of China's hydropower construction for 11 years, submitted a report to the highest levels of the CPC demanding an increase in investment and the increase of hydropower construction.

He even quoted the words of a U.S. expert, that "it is strange to first of all develop the nuclear plant in Guangdong Province rather than exploring the Hungshui He." He maintained that the Longtan power station of the Hungshui He in Guangxi, which will have installed a capacity of 5 million kilowatts, should be incorporated into the "Seventh 5-Year Plan," as it entails less investment than the Shenzhen nuclear power station and will be able to provide Hong Kong with electricity. (See SHUILI FADIAN [HYDRAULIC POWER GENERATION], Issue No 4, 86)

2. A LONG-PREMEDITATED STRATEGIC DEPLOYMENT -- As early as in the fifties, China already had a plan to make the Three Gorges water control project "a strategic center for harnessing the Chang Jiang." In this plan, the Three Gorges project was the last link of a series of construction projects. Zhou Enlai once worked out a 3-level deployment for the Three Gorges project: Danjiangkou -- Gezhou Dam -- Three Gorges. Situated in the upper reaches of the Han Shui, the Danjiangkou power station (with an installed capacity of 0.9 million kilowatts) was completed in 1973 after a construction period of 15 years. Located in the suburbs of Yichang City and started in 1970, the Gezhou Dam already stood across the Chang Jiang in 1981, and its second-phase construction project is coming to a close. China has repeatedly proclaimed that the Fezhou Dam (with an installed capacity of 2.72 million kilowatts) is part of the Three Gorges project and was built for this project. Meanwhile, the plan for Three Gorges province, which was especially drawn up for the Three Gorges project, also seems ready to come out at any time.

Furthermore, a large number of preliminary construction projects paving the way for the commencement of the construction of the Three Gorges project have been undertaken for many years and wasted a lot of money. Therefore, we had better say that the "Three Gorges project" has already begun. Reportedly, as many as 50,000 technicians and a large number of technical personnel who tempered themselves in the construction of the Danjiangkou and Gezhou Dam projects are "now waiting to display their skills to the full in the construction of the Three Gorges project." Thus, we can see that as far as the Chinese Government is concerned, the commencement of the construction of the Three Gorges project is already "at the point of no return." Moreover, it is by no means easy to stop a machine which has already been running for over 20 years.

3. THERE IS NOT A FINANCIAL PROBLEM -- According to the budgetary estimate by the Chang Jiang planning office, the Three Gorges project would require 15.9 billion yuan (about $10.6 billion). Of this, 12.4 billion yuan is the cost of the project and 3.5 billion is the expenses for moving people living in the reservoir areas. The planning department for developing the Three Gorges project expressed that the output value of the electricity produced by the Gezhou Dam each year would be sufficient to support the construction of the Three Gorges project. Moreover, in the eighth year after the commencement of the construction, the project would be able to earn enough money by generating electricity to cover its own cost. In 1984, Li Peng once said that foreign countries are welcome to build the Three Gorges project jointly with China, which has already attracted the attention of many foreign consortia. Therefore, the issue of finance is no longer an obstruction to the construction of the dam.

4. HISTORICAL RESPONSIBILITY -- On more than one occasion, the Chinese news media has mentioned the history of construction of the Three Gorges: Sun Yat-sen once mentioned the idea of building sluices in the Three Gorges; in the thirties the national government even worked out a Three Gorges plan and even chose a dam site; in the forties, it even asked (Suffrank) [sa fan qi 5646 0416 1142], a noted U.S. dam expert, to make two on-the-spot investigations, proposed a "(Suffrank) plan", and even organized prospecting and planning works; and after 1949, Mao Zedong and Zhou Enlai all attached great importance to the Three Gorges project, organized scientific and technological works, made personal inspections, and let the construction of the Gezhou Dam start, even during the Cultural Revolution. All this shows the dynastic aspiration of the CPC leaders to accomplish the great cause not accomplished by their predecessors.

Undoubtedly, this mentality of carrying forward the undertaking of predecessors and opening up a new road for the future and vying to be historical heroes is a powerful inner impetus for increasing the construction of the Three Gorges project. Of course, people know that the heroism of the communists often leads to many foolish things.

Judging by the above-mentioned subjective and objective reasons, we can see that China's placing the construction of the Three Gorges on its agenda has a historical background. Differing from those things done in a hot headed manner, in a sense it is an inevitable outcome of history.

The Clash Between Pros and Cons

Theoretically, the examination and approval of construction projects on the mainland are always based on the principle of "technical possibility and economic rationality." In the case of complex projects, it is not unusual for different opinions and arguments to arise. So, the argument about the Three Gorges project is unavoidable. In the relatively lively academic atmosphere of today, the different opinions of the pros and cons have been made known to the public.

The pros favor the original plan to start the construction during the "Seventh 5-Year Plan" period and complete the project in 17 years. Believing that conditions are now adequate, they are full of confidence. These people include those scientific and technological personnel who have devoted themselves to the planning of the Three Gorges project for many years and the leading cadres at all levels in the water resources and electric power system. People generally believe that Vice Premier Li Peng, who is now in charge of energy resources, is the respresentative of the pros. In addition to having such a powerful and influential background as the adopted son of Zhou Enlai, this new political star, who has been on the rise in recent years, is truly a hydraulician. After his graduation from the Moscow Institute of Dynamics, he once worked as chief engineer of a hydropower station and electric power department in northeast China. Undoubtedly, the superiority of the Soviet Union in the development of hydropower influenced him to increase China's hydropower construction. In 1984, he personally proclaimed China's determination to build the Three Gorges hydropower station. It is believed that he is one of the decisionmakers at the highest level regarding the Three Gorges project.

Most of the known cons are personages of the cultural circles and scientific and technological circles outside the water resources and electric power system. It is said that the national CPPCC is a base for these cons and that most of the people there are against the construction of the Three Gorges project. In the spring of 1985, during the Third Session of the Sixth CPPCC, some people even wanted "to make tearful remonstrance" in an effort to stop the construction of the Three Gorges project. After the session, the CPPCC even organized an investigation group which made a 38-day-long investigation and wrote a report stating that the Three Gorges would have more disadvantages than advantages and opposed the commencement of the construction of the project during the "Seventh 5-Year Plan" period. Most of the CPPCC cons favor postponing the Three Gorges project, but, in fact, they are against the construction of the project.

The main viewpoints of the CPPCC report are as follows:

1. The Three Gorges project would not play a great antiflood role in the middle and lower reaches of the Chang Jiang but would, on the contrary, aggravate the damage caused by flooding in its upper reaches. The flooding of the Chuan Jiang is not the main source of the floods in the Chang Jiang.

2. The project would limit the freight volume of the Chang Jiang, as the designed freight-passage capability of its locks would be only 50 million tons and, as a result, 10,000-ton vessels could not reach Chongqing. Moreover, the silt deposits would reduce Chongqing to a dead port.

3. Its power generation would require more investment and a longer construction period but produce poorer results.

4. As at least 860,000 people would be displaced from the reservoir areas, over a dozen cities would have to be built, requiring expenditure of over 10 billion yuan.

5. As the geological structure is complex and weak in the region, earthquakes and great landslips might occur after water is stored.

Finally, the CPPCC report suggests building 20 large or medium-sized hydropower stations as a substitute for the Three Gorges project. This is the "substitution plan."

In October 1985, the consultant group of the planning department of the China general corporation for developing the Three Gorges project advanced their suggestions to refute the CPPCC investigation report. Here are the main points:

The issue of flood prevention: The suggestion report holds that the flooding of the Chuan Jiang is the main source of the flood waters in the middle and lower reaches of the Chang Jiang. Judging by the records of several major floods in this century, the flood waters from Yichang constitutes 60 to 80 percent of the total flood waters in the Chang Jiang. The antiflood role of the Three Gorges project is mainly to coordinate the flood-prevention and flood-diversion projects in the middle and lower reaches to reduce flood peaks and prevent the damage caused by floods of a speed of over 80,000 cubic meters per second, rather than storing all the flood waters. This is a role which cannot be taken on by several dozen reservoirs in the tributaries. Therefore, it is a misunderstanding of the design data to say that the project would aggravate the damage caused in the upper reaches.

The issue of the results of power generation. The suggestion report gives some figures showing that the cost of the Three Gorges project would not be higher than that of other power stations and that although its construction period would be a bit longer it could generate enormous amounts of electricity and some electricity even in advance of completion. Therefore, it is a construction project of great reserve potential.

The issue of navigation: The suggestion report holds that the designed freight-passage capability of the Three Gorges great dam is not just 50 million tons but 150 million tons. As the 139 shoals and rapids would all be submerged, obviously the carrying capacity of the Chang Jiang would be increased. Also, as long as various water levels are rationally selected in flood seasons, the matter of silt deposits in Chongqing could be avoided.

Regarding the issue of silt deposits, the Chang Jiang valley planning office even made a large number of experiments on silt deposits and found that the silt in the Three Gorges is only one-thirteenth of that in the Huang He's Sanmen Gorges and that the Three Gorges have favorable conditions for discharging silt. After 80 years, when the lowest layer of the reservoir is full of silt, silt entering the reservoir can hardly stop as rapids can carry it away. Therefore, a balance of silt can be maintained and the life of the reservoir will not be in danger even many years later. Moreover, the method of preventing flooding by "storing clear water to discharge muddy water" has been proved effective.

The issue of geology: The suggestion report holds that the geological conditions in the Three Gorges reservoir region has been basically established and that the possible landslips and landslides have also been taken into consideration. However, the storage capacity of the first layer of the reservoir is so large that even if they do occur, the structure of the dam and navigation will not be affected. It is estimated that the magnitude of possible earthquakes might be 5.5, which is within the designed shock-resistence strength of the dam. As for the issue of wartime safety, as the Three Gorges project is "a concrete gravity dam," it can with stand any conventional weapons but not nuclear attack.

The issue of the people who will be displaced as a result of the construction of the dam: According to the Three Gorges project, 500,000 people must be displaced; and if the extra flood water is also to be stored, over 90,000 people will have to be displaced in addition, and over 50,000 mu of farm land submerged. However, if the Three Gorges project is not to be built, the people displaced in the lower reaches will increase by 1.05 million, and farm land submerged by 1.6 million mu. The loss will be much greater.

The suggestion report points out that investment in the Three Gorges project is estimated to be 15.9 billion yuan. Nevertheless, in order to meet big floods of the kind that occurred in 1954, the cost of flood diversion would amount to 21 billion yuan, exceeding the cost of the Three Gorges project.

These openly differing opinions show that the pros do not have the slightest intention of making concessions. Although the opinions of the cons are representative, it is believed that they have not yet come out with "all they want to say" and still have reservations.

The Differing Opinions of People in Foreign Countries

People in foreign countries who are interested in the Three Gorges project also hold differing opinions. Some people share the viewpoint of the CPPCC report and some do not. People holding similar views agree with the CPPCC report on the issues of the displacement of people, silt deposits, and the substitution plan. These people deeply deplore the fact that many people will have to be displaced from their hometowns. In particular, they point out that the serious soil erosion in the upper reaches of the Chang Jiang would result in the silting and short life of the Three Gorges reservoir, and that the way to harness the Chang Jiang should be to building more dams along its tributaries to replace the Three Gorges project. Professor Zhen Juyuan calls this kind of substitution plan an "opportunity cost," that is, the results of making the same investment in other hydropower projects would be even better than those of the Three Gorges project.

He said that this is the opinion of some U.S. experts. He wrote that "as hydropower can be found anywhere in China, it is necessary to carefully consider whether the construction of the Three Gorges Dam is a must."

Some overseas personage also hold some more emphatic and original opinions than the cons in China:

1. Influence upon environment and ecological equilibrium.

2. Destruction of landscape.

3. The issue of cost undertaking.

4. Attention should be paid to the motivation of U.S. aid for the construction of the Three Gorges project. Professor Xiong Jie holds that the intention of the United States in selling technology to China in aid of the Three Gorges project is to make China an ally of the United States against the Soviet Union and to "attempt to reduce China to a technological vassal state of the United States." So far, China has paid the United States a tuition fee of $1 million only for its consultancy service to the Three Gorges project. In the future, China would become more and more dependent on the United States and loss its diplomatic independence and initiative, while the United States could make China break with the communist system and effortlessly reap the spoils of the fight between China and the Soviet Union. China "really has to think about it." (ZHONG BAO, March, 1986)

Almost echoing this viewpoint, in his speech made during the Third Session of the Sixth CPPCC, which was held in mid-March, Qian Jiaju, a noted Chinese economist, remarked that "a certain country" is particularly interested in the Three Gorges project. For one thing, it would like to make a profit, of course. But, primarily, it wants, in the name of safeguarding the great dam in the future, to "place our country under its nuclear umbrella. By then, we would not be able to uphold the diplomatic policy of maintaining independence and keeping the initiative in our own hands." (CHINA PAO, May 1986)

An Assessment of the Debate

I think that the differing opinions of the people at home and abroad on the Three Gorges project can be classified into three categories:

First, the purely technical issues, e.g. the issue of silt deposits. In view of the negative lesson drawn from the condition of silt deposits in the Sanmen-Gorge hydropower station, as well as the situation of water and soil conservation in China, it is very important to raise this point. However, in fact, China also attaches great importance to the issue of silt deposits. It has even carried out protracted nationwide research and gained successful experiences in discharging reservoir sand. After two reconstructions, the Sanmen Gorge project also began partially generating electricity. The China General Corporation for Developing the Three Gorges project believes that there is no tendency of an increase in soil erosion in the upper reaches of the Chang Jiang. As for the issue of earthquakes, there are already seven exceptionally big reservoirs, with a storage capacity of over 100 billion cubic meters of water, in the world, but no accidents have ever been heard of in connection with earthquakes.

Regarding such issues as the assessment of the antiflood capability of the Three Gorges, as well as the comparison between the results of building more small hydropower stations in the tributaries and building the Three Gorges hydropower station, naturally there might be varied understandings and plans. Nevertheless, as long as realistic data is obtained, it should not be difficult to make a decision and come to a conclusion.

Second, differing opinions resulting from differences in senses of value. People in foreign countries tend to pay more attention to the ecological equilibrium and changes in the landscape. However, as far as the people in China are concerned, these are obviously placed in less important positions. It is believed that they would feel the antiflood value of the Three Gorges project, which affects the life and property of millions of people in the middle and lower reaches, and the necessity of power generation and navigation, which have a direct bearing on the success or failure of the four modernizations drive, to be far more important than the sightseeing value of the scenic spots of the Three Gorges. Judging by the fact that neither the CPPCC investigation report nor the suggestion report of the China General Corporation for Developing the Three Gorges project mentions the issue of environment and ecological equilibrium, we can learn that they probably think that China has historic sites everywhere, and consider negating the project only because of several scenic spots in the Three Gorges as being penny wise and pound foolish.

Meanwhile, it cannot be proved that China attaches no importance to the environment at all. According to this year's second issue of SHUILI FADIAN [HYDROPOWER], the principle of the construction of the Three Gorges project is "to build the future Sanxia City into a modernized star city of tourism and convalescence, with the key water control project as its main body, and a center of the Three Gorges scenic area." In fact, notwithstanding the fact that some historic sites might be destroyed as a result of the construction of the project, "the mountain goddess should still be there" and the natural scenery of the Three Gorges will still be retained. Because all the precipitous and fantastic mountains along the banks of the Three Gorges are 1,500 to over 2,000 meters above sea level (including the 12 Wuxia peaks, one of which is the goddess peak), and the water line is only 100-odd meters above sea level, the historic site of Baidi City in Fengjie is also far above the water line. Of course, the scenes before and after the construction of the dam would be quite different.

1. The Pattern of Decision-making or the Pattern of Investment

The CPC has had very painful experiences in engineering construction of a result of "giving arbitrary and impracticable directions" and of "nonprofessionals commanding professionals." At present, there are already 86,000 reservoirs of various sizes in the whole country. This figure is very wonderful, as compared with the 23 reservoirs before 1949. However, many of these reservoirs have engineering problems, or have even brought floods and damage, or wasted a lot of money through protracted repairs and reconstruction. The root of these problems lies in the fact that the engineering decisions were hastily made and that the wisdom of scientific and technological personnel was not respected. In particular, many consequences have been left by the "Great Leap Forward" in which vast numbers of people were mobilized to build irrigation works and transform nature by the confused orders of cadres such as secretaries of country CPC committees. In the sixties, the "revolution in planning" called for "discarding the foreign walking stick" and practiced "the system of cadre participation in productive labor and worker participation in management, of reform of irrational and outdated rules and regulations and of close cooperation among cadres, workers, and technicians," which was also a reflection of the ultraleft line in scientific and technological circles.

In the past, the Three Gorges project was kept secret. It is now obviously progress to make the plans known to the public and to solicit public opinion. Nevertheless, people should also watch out for the factors like excessive interference and hasty decisions by leaders, because the "party's leadership must also be upheld" in the Three Gorges project. Since the policy of opening up to the outside world was adopted, the phenomenon of "what I say goes" is still rather common. Recently, I learned that Deng Xiaoping expressed his opinion on the Three Gorges project, and I think this must have something to do with Deng Yingchao's support for Li Pneg. As the chairman of the CPPCC and widow of Zhou Enlai, Deng Yinchao is rather influential. Therefore, we can see that the highest levels of the CPC tend to support the pros.

2. A Lack of Scientific Competition

Under China's long-standing centralized system, even in the field of technology, it is still the practice that "all the big powers are arrogated to a single person and all the small powers are scattered." As a result, the plans which suit the taste of a person in power will be readily supported by a particular group of people and become a trend. Therefore, people can hardly hear or express any different opinions. This time the debate over the Three Gorges project was started at the CPPCC, which more or less reflects this state of affairs. It is believed that it would be more significant if the debate was between the former Ministry of Water Resources and the former Ministry of Electric Power. So far, we have not yet heard any differing opinions within the water resources and electric power systems, and it seems that people there all side with the pros.

3. It Must Be Postponed

At the end of its suggestion report, the planning department of the China general corporation for developing the Three Gorges project raises the viewpoint that "great loss would be incurred as result of the postponement of the construction of the project," which gives people a feeling of "putting the cart before the horse." Its reason is that if the project is postponed for a year, the relief of the threat of flooding to the lower reaches and the improvement in the navigation in the upper reaches would also be postponed for a year and that it "would be the biggest waste" to disband the technical and construction contingents and let the equipment lie idle. As it claims that there are already "20,000 workers waiting for jobs," it seems that there is no choice but to immediately commence the construction of the project.

On the one hand, this reflects the feeling of the pros; but on the other hand, it also makes people feel the authorities' lack of sincerity in the debate over the Three Gorges project. The fact the project is not included in the "Seventh 5-Year Plan" is only a kind of temporary concession. If the necessity and feasibility of such an important project is faced with any major challenges, its postponement should be necessary and worthwhile. Since its premise is in doubt, how could the postponement of the project be counted as a loss?

PRC SPOKESMAN COMMENTS ON SOUTH AFRICA, KOREA

[XINHUA report: "Foreign Ministry Spokesman on Atrocities of South Africa, Korean Proposal for Talks by Tripartite Military Authorities:]

[Text] Beijing, 18 Jun (XINHUA) — At a news briefing today, a Foreign Ministry spokesman commented on the South African authorities' recent practice of intensifying their suppression of the black masses and reiterated that the Chinese Government and people strongly condemn the South African authorities' savage acts.

He said that recently, on the occasion of the 10th anniversary of the Soweto carnage commemorated by the South African people, the South African authorities further intensified their armed repression of the activities of the black people, persecution of black leaders and control over the press. At the same time, they made another armed attack against Botswana.

He said that the Chinese Government and people strongly condemn the South African authorities stubborn stand in clinging to the system of apartheid and their savage acts in repressing black people and attacking neighboring countries. The Chinese Government and people have always sympathized with and supported the South African people in their struggle against racism, and stood for the reasonable proposition and just demand by the international community to impose sanctions against the South African authorities. We are convinced that with the vigorous support and solidarity of all the justice-upholding countries and peoples, the South African people will surely be able to attain their goal of eradicating the system of apartheid through unremitting struggle.

A reporter asked what is China's comment on the proposal of holding tripartite talks by the military authorities of North and the South Korea, and the U.S. troops stationed in South Korea, a proposal put forward by the Supreme Command of the Korean People's Army.

The spokesman said that the proposal put forward by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea was of positive significance in reducing the military confrontation between the South and North and for relaxing tension in the Korean peninsula. "We believe that realization of such talks will help ease the current situation on the Korean peninsula and create a favorable atmosphere for the resumption of the dialogue between the South and the North.

UN'S PEREZ DE CUELLAR ON AID FOR AFRICAN REFUGEES

[Text] United Nations, June 19 (XINHUA) — United Nations Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar today appealed for more assistance to African refugees on the occasion of Africa refugee day, which falls tomorrow.

In his appeal, the U.N. chief spoke of the urgent need for increased international assistance to deal with the plight of the five million refugees on the African Continent. He noted that adequate funds are needed to increase the capacity of countries of asylum to receive, sustain and shelter refugees while lasting solutions for their future are being sought.

Perez de Cuellar said, "The drought-related emergency situation in Africa has abated, but the problems of recovery and development are no less urgent."

The United Nations program of action for African economic recovery and development 1986-1990, which was recently adopted at the 13th special session of the U.N. General Assembly, Perez de Cuellar said, called for "a new era of cooperation between Africa and the international community to ensure self-reliant, sustainable economic development."

U.S. SHOWS INTEREST IN SOVIET ARMS PROPOSAL

OW192356 Beijing XINHUA in English 2336 GMT 19 Jun 86

[Text] Washington, June 19 (XINHUA) -- The United States is showing more interest in the latest soviet arms control proposal which links U.S. adherence to the 1972 anti-ballistic missile treaty for reductions in strategic weapons.

Secretary of State George Shultz, in an interview Wednesday, told the ASSOCIATED PRESS that the proposal, tabled in Geneva last week and later outlined publicly by Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, is "substantial" and "is being taken very seriously" by the Reagan administration.

By presenting the proposal to U.S. negotiators in Geneva instead of in a public forum, the Soviets "delivered it in the right place, to the right address," he said.

Meanwhile, White House officials were quoted by "THE WASHINGTON POST" today as saying the newest Soviet proposal "has merit" and is "not being taken as a propagandistic endeavor."

Observers noted these statements appear to be a sign the United States has noticed some flexibility in the Soviet proposal from previous ones.

The United States began to send positive overtures to the Soviet Union after a mixed reaction by Reagan administration officials to the Soviet proposal in recent days.

Earlier this week, however, Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger rejected key points of the proposal, arguing it is "just another method to defining (U.S.) strategic defense out of existence."

President Ronald Reagan is scheduled to speak on arms control and U.S.-Soviet relations today in Glassboro, New Jersey, site of the 1967 meeting between U.S. Presient lyndon Johnson and Soviet Premier Aleksey Kosygin. The speech is to be "a signal of his positive approach to the superpower relationship and his readiness to engage in top-level dialogue," a White House official said.

SOVIET, U.S. EXPERTS STUDY FAR EAST SITUATION

[Text] Moscow, June 16 (XINHUA) -- Soviet and U.S. experts on the Far East and Southeastern Asia have held talks on the region in Washington, which was believed to have focused on a recent Soviet proposal concerning the areas, the Soviet news agency TASS said today. The talks, which were held from June 10 to 11 and without advance announcement, are the latest in a series of discussions on regional issue, in which the superpowers aim to clarify positions and prevent misunderstandings.

Details of the two-day meeting were not disclosed, but observers here believed experts of the two countries probably have discussed a Soviet proposal on long-term cooperation with states of the Asian and Pacific region, which was made public on April 23.

The Soviet proposal denounced "certain political circles" in the United States and Japan as viewing the Asian-Pacific region as one for confrontation between different states, and the proposals for a Pacific community" as aimed at future regional groupings and military blocs that would be in opposition to one another. It called for cooperation in trade, economic matters, science and culture among the Asian-Pacific countries. It said the Soviet Union, with vast natural resources in Siberian and the far eastern parts of the country, can be an important source of assistance for Asian-Pacific countries, which it said could cooperate with the Soviet Union in development.

The Soviet Union and the Unites Stated have held a series of talks on regional issues, including the Middle East and Africa.

EUROPEAN PARLIAMENT REJECTS NEW ARMS RACE STEPS

OW130800 Beijing XINHUA in English 0645 GMT 13 Jun 86

[Text] Paris, June 12 (XINHUA) -- The European Parliament Thursday urged the United States and the Soviet Union to respect the existing treaties on disarmament and stop the production and stockpiling of chemical weapons in Europe. By a resolution adopted by 137 votes to 105 with one abstention in Strasbourg, the European Parliament criticized the U.S. decision to redeploy B-52 strategic bombers and contruct a new type of nuclear submarine and the Soviet decision to develop two new strategic missiles.

It also denounced the American unilateral abandonment of the Salt II Treaty reached between the two superpowers in 1979 on the limitation of strategic arms. The parliament also rejected a U.S. plan to produce binary chemical weapons and deploy them in Europe and proposed the creation of a chemical weapons-free zone in central Europe. The resolution also appealed to the Soviet Union to stop its production of biological and chemical weapons and withdraw its stocks of the weapons in Democratic Germany, Czechoslovakia and Poland.

The parliament also proposed the following measures as a basis for an East-West disarmament discussion: reduction by 50 percent of the strategic nuclear arsenals, dismantling of intermediate-range nuclear weapons, prohibition of the production of chemical weapons in the world, and a balanced reduction of conventional forces.

U.S. WANTS EXISTING KOREAN FORUM USED FOR TALKS

["U.S. Not Interested in New Korean Proposal" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Washington, June 19 (XINHUA) -- The United States is not convinced it is constructive to have a new forum for talks after Korea proposed negotiations on ways to reduce tensions in that country, the state department spokesman Bernard Kalb said today.

The Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) sent letters June 17 to the command-in-chief of the United Nations Command in Panmunjom and to the South Korean minister of national defense, stating the DPRK wants to reduce tensions on the Korean peninsula. The DPRK proposes talks be held among the DPRK defense minister, the minister of national defense from South Korea and the commander-in-chief of the U.N. Command.

U.S. State Department spokesman Bernard Kalb said the United States "welcomes all efforts to reduce tensions on the Korean peninsula." He said the United States hope these letters are a sign that DPRK "shares this interest and will work toward that goal."

Noting the U.S. supports direct North-South dialogue, KALB stressed that the Military Armistice Commission is the forum charged with overseeing the armistice. The commission also represents all parties that were involved in hostilities during the Korean conflict.

Kalb said the U.S. is not convinced that it is constructive to propose a new forum "when a perfectly adequate mechanism to address reduction of tensions with all the necessary players has been in existence for more than 30 years." He said the U.S. urged the DPRK "to avail itself of these mechanisms and proposals for reducing tension."

The State Department spokesman said the U.S. would regard as a positive development any DPRK move to resume the dialogue it suspended with South Korea last January, and to address "seriously the important proposals on the table at Panmunjom."

COMMENTARY SUPPORTS DPRK TALKS PROPOSAL

SK200225 Beijing International Service in Korean 1100 GMT 19 Jun 86

[Commentary by station commentator "The Proposal Is Worthy of Welcome"]

[Text] On 17 June O Chin-u, minister of the People's Armed Forces of the DPRK, sent a letter to the commander of the UN Forces in South Korea and to the South Korean defense minister respectively. The letter proposed that talks of military authorities be held at Panmunjom or another place with participation of the North Korean side and the U.S. [miguk] and the South Korean side to realize conditions favorable to the peaceful reunification of Korea by taking measures for relaxing tension in the military field first.

The North Korean side's proposal for holding talks of military authorities from three sides [samchuk] is being put forward for the first time in the 41 years since Korea was divided. The proposal, aimed at eliminating the status of military confrontation on the Korean peninsula, is worthy of welcome and corresponds to the prevailing situation.

The main trend of the current generation in the 1980's is peace and development. Thus, voices calling for dialogue and prevention of confrontation have been raised higher with each passing day.

The dialogue between the North and the South sides of Korea began from the 1970's. The dialogue began with the Red Cross talks between the two sides and gradually developed into dialogue between strata from all walks of life. Some practical successes were attained in dialogue. All this has been supported by the people in North and South Korea and by international social circles.

With the beginning of the year, the developments on the Korean peninsula have aroused the uneasiness [pulan] of the people. This past February, the United States and the South Korean authorities suspended all manifold talks between North and South Korea, which had begun from 1984, by staging the large-scale joint military exercise in defiance of the repeated advise and warning of the North Korean side.

Moreover, the United States and the South Korean authorities raved that the next 2 or 3 years are the most dangerous time on the Korean peninsula. The United States and the South Korean authorities discussed a series of issues, including one concerning the strengthening of the joint operational system, at the U.S. - South Korean military committee meeting in early April and at the so-called Security Consultative Meeting.

After such events, the United States and the South Korean authorities staged joint military exercises many times. Under these circumstances, the talks of military authorities of the three sides are realized, such talks will undoubtedly play an active role in eliminating the strained situation created by the military confrontation on the Korean peninsula, in preventing military clashes, and in providing for the resumption of dialogue by relaxing tension.

The North Korean side shows that it wants to relax tension through practical acts many times. For example, in January of this year, the DPRK Foreign Ministry announced that the Korean Government decided to suspend large-scale military exercises in the areas of the northern half from 1 February and to suspend all military exercises during period when North-South dialogue is ongoing.

Moreover, the North Korean side stated many times that it had no intention of invading the South. In the proposal, the North Korean side noted that negotiations can be held concerning any measures that the United States and the South Korean authorities put forth if such measures are favorable to easing tension.

This again shows that the North Korean side is interested in relaxing tensions. We hope that the United States and the South Korean authorities will sincerely review the new proposal made by the North Korean side proceeding from a desire to pursue peace on the Korean peninsula and that they will actively respond to this proposal.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON HU YAOBANG'S EUROPEAN VISIT

Press Conference With Mitterrand

OW191525 Beijing XINHUA in English 1507 GMT 19 Jun 86

[Text] Paris, June 19 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese party leader Hu Yaobang today described his visit to France as a complete success.

At a press conference jointly held by him and French President Francois Mitterrand here today, Hu said, "I came here to enhance our mutual understanding, friendship and cooperation and to help maintain peace. I can tell everyone here that my visits to Britain, Federal Germany and France have reached the goals as expected."

During his stay in France, Hu said, "I held very sincere and friendly talks with the French president and prime minister. We have reached a broad concensus on major international issues and strengthened friendly cooperation between the two countries despite the existence of some differences between us because of historical and circumstantial reasons."

Hu expressed thanks to Mitterrand for his invitation and to Prime Minister Jacques Chirac and people from all circles for the warm welcome and hospitality accorded him.

He said, "The great French people are an industrious and intelligent nation. They have made admirable achievements through their long-term efforts." "I feel deeply that like the Chinese people, the French people love world peace, treasure their own national independence and are concerned about developments in other regions," he added. Hu expressed his deep conviction that the cooperation between the two countries will develop steadily for long.

More than one hundred journalists attended the press conference.

The Chinese leader is scheduled to leave Paris this afternoon for Rome for an official visit to Italy, the last leg of his 15-day West European tour which has already taken him to Britain and Federal Germany.

Comments on Sino-Soviet Relations

HK191604 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1521 GMT 19 Jun 86

[Text] Paris, 19 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- At a press conference held jointly with President Francois Mitterrand here this afternoon, CPC General Secretary Hu Yaobang said: Sino-Soviet relations are developing fairly well in the economic field, but I can see no substantial progress in China's political relations with the Soviet union.

This remark was made by Hu Yaobang in reply to a question regarding Sino-Soviet relations.

Hu said: Both China and the Soviet Union have concluded a trade agreement which specifies that the volume of bilateral trade will reach $14 billion from 1986 to 1990, and may even exceed the figure. We estimate that the figure may reach $20 billion, that is, a yearly average of $4 billion.

Hu Yaobang disclosed that the Soviet Union recently agreed to grant preferential loans to China and to run joint ventures with China. Hu said that the prospects of Sino-Soviet relations are good in economic matters. But there is no substantial progress in the political field. It is difficult to predict how the situation will evolve.

Hu Yaobang said that China is willing to normalize its relations with all countries. According to our experience over the decades, we are determined to pursue an independent foreign policy for a long time and not to form an alliance with any big power. We believe that this policy will benefit the Chinese people as well as world peace.

When a reporter asked under what circumstances will China normalize its relations with Vietnam, Hu emphatically pointed out: With Soviet backing, Vietnam has occupied Kampuchea. This is a big obstacle to the normalization of Sino-Soviet relations.

Hu said: We have informed the Vietnamese authorities recently that so long as they are willing to withdraw their troops from Kampuchea and let Kampuchea solve their own problems and become an independent and non-aligned country, it would be possible for China and Vietnam to resume their traditional, friendly relations. However, the Vietnamese authorities have not shown any sincerity on the issue. For this reason, it would waste time and trouble world opinion to engage in Sino-Vietnamese discussions at present.

Views Nuclear Safety, Technology

[Text] Paris, 19 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Answering a Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO reporter's question at noon today concerning Hong Kong people's anxiety over the safety of the Daya Bay nuclear power plant, CPC Central Committee General Secretary Hu Yaobang said: As a modern technology, nuclear power plants should not be blindly opposed; however, as this is also a dangerous technology, it is essential to be especially careful and cautious in specific work.

Hu Yaobang said: The technical accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant in the Soviet Union has greatly shaken the whole world. The Hong Kong people's anxieties over the planned Daya Bay nuclear power plant are therefore understandable. He said: I have not done any study of specific technical questions regarding nuclear power plants, but as I see it, there are two specific views: 1) This is a modern technology which should not be blindly opposed; 2) this is a dangerous technology, and it is therefore essential to be especially careful and cautious in specific work.

He said: China depends mainly on coal for its energy. As far as quantity is concerned, we are only regarding nuclear power as a very small supplement. This has definite advantages for us in developing and mastering modern science and technology. The central authorities and the State Council have made many studies of the nuclear power plant issue. Their unanimous view is that there must be measures for ensuring safety.

Urges Nuclear Disarmament

[Text] Paris, June 19 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese party leader Hu Yaobang today reiterated that China has consistently stood for a total ban and thorough destruction of nuclear weapons, and the two superpowers should take the lead in dismantling nuclear arms.

Speaking at a press conference jointly held by Hu and French President Francois Mitterrand today, the Chinese Party general secretary said that it is natural for the Chinese people to respect the appeal of other regions in the world wanting nuclear free zones.

Hu also stressed that since the two superpowers are carrying on a nuclear arms race, it is necessary for other nuclear nations to possess a limited nuclear force for self-defence.

French President Mitterrand said France could not reduce its own nuclear force unless the big powers make remarkable progress in disarmament.

On PRC Reformers, Conservatives

HK200224 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1503 GMT 19 Jun 86

[Text] Paris, 19 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- At this joint press conference with Mitterrand in the Elysee Palace at noon today, Hu Yaobang said that the Chinese leadership stratum has unanimous views on the current main policy principles, and there is no so-called question of the existence of reformers and conservatives in China, as is rumored outside the country.

Hu Yaobang was answering a French reporter's question on his view of the current "condominium" of president and premier in France.

Hu Yaobang said: I am visiting France at the invitation of President Mitterrand. We have mainly discussed major international issues of common concern to our two countries and the question of how to further strengthen the relations of friendship and cooperation between us. I have not required about France's internal affairs, nor have we discussed them, nor do I have any right to give my views on them.

On China's internal affairs, Hu Yaobang said, I want to tell all my friends that sometimes there are indeed differences of opinion when the formulation of major guidelines is being debated. This is normal. As a result of extensive study and discussion, everyone's views on the decision finally reached are unanimous. There is no question of the existence of reformers and conservatives in China, as is rumored outside the country.

Answering a question from a French TV-1 reporter on why the CPC has proposed that unity should be maintained with the central authorities, he said: The CPC has only told its party members that they should maintain political unity with the central authorities. I believe that this is a disciplinary regulation for all political parties in the world regarding inner-parts life. He said: Intellectuals outside the party, China's scientists and technicians, have the opportunity to fully display their talent; and China's writers and artists have a vast world for their creations.

Mitterrand on Relations With PRC

[Text] Paris, June 19 (XINHUA) -- President Francois Mitterrand spoke at length about French-Chinese relations and international problems during the press conference he and visiting Chinese Communist Party Secretary General Hu Yaobang gave today. On bilateral relations, Mitterrand said, "Relations between France and China have developed very clearly during the past few years. Commercial exchanges between the two countries have increased 40 percent.

Mitterrand said, "We tried to circumscribe one another's needs. We French need to enter in this vast market where we are not yet the best placed." "On the Chinese side," he said, "there is hope that France will increase its contribution in other areas such as means of credit, technology transfers. I believe that this visit will now mark the acceleration of our relations. I remain optimistic, and there is no reason not to be."

"Because of our different geographical situation, and that which characterizes our internal politics, our points of view on international problems were inevitably different, but our general conception, we have been able to establish, was most often the same, and in every case converging."

On disarmament, the French president said, "France and China both seek to avoid that all world problems are considered from only one angle, that of East-West relations. We would be very desirous of participating in an arms limitation, of course, it would not be possible to examine this problem until the two great military powers will have accomplished obvious progress in their disarmament. I think that all steps in favor of disarmament must be undertaken, if possible, begun in a positive way before going on to other areas. France believes that the ABM Treaty must be respected by both parties, if one truly adheres to the treaty, then one can begin to discuss a veritable disarmament accord."

On nuclear testing, he said, "France has always said that it would be forced to continue this type of armament and the indispensable tests as long as there's not a similar movement (ban on nuclear testing) in the world powers."

Addresses French Communists

[Text] Paris, June 19 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang said here today that only by combining the fundamental tenets of Marxism with the concrete conditions of its country and make new explorations can a Communist Party maintain vitality and grow in strength.

Delivering a brief speech to over 100 party functionaries at the headquarters of the French Communist Party, Hu said, "In the past seven or eight years, we have made comparatively big achievements in exploring the road to build socialism with Chinese characteristics and I am convinced that our cause is hopeful."

Hu noted that China has suffered setbacks and socialism is still in the process of making. "How to advance towards socialism? We do not have a set model to follow nor can we find a ready answer in some books," he said.

General Secretary Hu said he thanked the French Communist Party for its efforts in developing the friendship and cooperation between the two parties. He said the French Communist Party is a party with a glorious tradition. "We Chinese Communists have always followed with a feeling of respect the cause of the French Communists and we sincerely hope that the Communist Party of France will expand and grow in strength," he said.

In his brief speech, George Marchais, general secretary of the French Communist Party said that it was the first time for the French Communist Party to welcome, at its headquarters, the General Secretary of the Chinese Communist Party.

Marchais said the French Communist Party stands for solidarity among the communist parties and workers' parties in the world and stand for each party pursuing an independent policy. "We are confronted with common important tasks. We should join hands in doing many things such as maintaining world peace and supporting the under-developed countries and peoples," Marchais said. He noted that the relations between the two parties are excellent and that both sides have pledged to do their utmost to develop their relations.

Prior to their brief speeches, Hu and Marchais discussed issues of common interest in a friendly and cordial atmosphere, according to a spokesman of the International Liaison Department of the Chinese Communist Party Central Committee.

The spokesman said that they were satisfied with the growth of the relations between the two parties in the past few years and that they were pleased to see the constant development of the friendly relations between the two countries. He said both sides agreed that the strengthening of the relations between the two parties are conducive to the promotion of friendship between the two peoples and of cooperation between the two countries.

Recap of Visit to France

["Roundup" Hu Says His Visit to France Successful" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Paris, 19 (XINHUA) -- Visiting Chinese Communist leader Hu Yaobang said today that he and French laders have reached a broad consensus on major international issues and bilateral cooperation and his visit to France is a complete success.

At a press conference jointly held by him and French President Francois Mitterrand here today, General Secretary Hu, who is currently on a 16-day European tour, said his visits have reached their desired goals.

Hu, who came here at the invitation of Mitterrand after visiting Britain and Federal Germany, was leaving for Italy this afternoon. He has spelt out the objective of the tour as contributing to peace and promoting mutual friendship, understanding and cooperation.

Hu said, "I held very sincere and friendly talks with the French president and prime minister. We have reached a broad consensus on major international issues and friendly cooperation between the two countries despite the existence of some differences between us because of historical and circumstantial reasons."

During the four-day stay here, Hu called for a strong and united Europe in preventing war, for North-South cooperation and for future bilateral relations between China and France. A united and strong Europe can have an "immeasurably active part to play in restraining war and preserving peace, just as a revitalized China, which pursues its own independent foreign policy for peace, will do," Hu said.

At a dinner held by Mitterrand in his honor on Monday, Hu dismissed the pessimistic views about the role and future of Europe, saying that "there must be an even more brilliant future for Europe on top of its brilliant past."

Hu also urged North-South dialogue and warned that "without the economic growth of the developing countries, the developed nations would be in a difficult position in respect of their raw material availability and markets for both good and capital."

The tour of General Secretary Hu is part of the visit exchanges between the top leaders of China and France in recent years. Premier Zhao Zhiyang also visited France in June 1984, following the visit to China by President Mitterrand.

In the past few years, the economic relations between the two countries have developed rapidly, particularly in the fields of energy exploration, transportation and nuclear power plant construction. The bilateral trade volume reached 332 million U.S. dollars, 38 percent more than last year.

Hu told his hosts that he is satisfied with the increased high-level dialogues and political consultations as well as the growing economic cooperation between the two countries. But "there is still potential to tap to further the relations between our two countries," he said.

Hu said that China and France both have long histories and brilliant cultures, treasure their national independence, pursue independent foreign policies of peace, commit to maintaining peace, and respect each other as equals.

These common points, coupled by their mutually complementary economies, have provided the two countries with a solid base for "sound cooperation in all fields," he said.

Echoing Hu's remarks, Mitterrand told Hu during their talks that he was pleased to see the identical positions of France and China on world peace, disarmament and other matters. "The two countries find they have extensive similarities or convergent views on the order of the world. All this has led to the existing bilateral solid links and strengthen their desire to better understand each other, listen to each other and work toegther," he said.

Earlier today, Hu met with French Communist Party (FCP) General Secretary Georges Marchais at the FCP headquarters and they believed that the relations between the two parties are conducive to the friendship and cooperation between the two countries. Hu told Marchais that the Chinese Communists wishes sincerely for the growth of the French Communist Party and he thanked the FCP contributions to the maintenance of friendship between the two parties and two peoples.

Through the setbacks it suffered, the Chinese Communist Party has understood that socialism is still in practice, Hu said. There is no stereotyped model nor ready answer as to how to realize socialism. In recent seven or eight years, the Chinese Communist Party has made fairly great advance in search of a road of building China into a socialist country with its own characteristics and "I am sure that our cause will succeed," he said.

On Wednesday, Hu travelled on TGV, the French high-speed train, to the south-eastern city of Lyon where he visited an advanced subway system and Orlac company, France's biggest diary-food processor.

[Antoine Keomanivong dispatch "CPC Leader in Paris"]

[Text] Beijing — "As party general secretary, he is already the country's strongman." This is what official circles in Beijing say when questioned on the political future of Hu Yaobang, who is at present touring Western Europe to "make himself more well known on the one hand and to try to expand bilateral cooperation on the other."

In welcoming Hu Yaobang to the Elysee today, the president of the republic is therefore receiving the man who is virtually number one in the most heavily populated country in the world, although the man concerned recently announced in London his intention to withdraw from the front of the stage to leave room for younger people.

Meanwhile, now that 81-year-old Deng Xiaoping is playing a less and less direct role in party and state affairs because of his age, it is 71-year-old Hu Yaobang who is destined to become China's real master. He will probably be confirmed in office at the 13th party congress scheduled to take place in early 1987, unless somebody plays the same trick on him Deng played on Hua Guofeng in 1979.

"Problem-free Relations"

At all events there should be no change in the Chinese leadership between now and the congress, I was assured at the Foreign Ministry in Beijing where Ma Yuzhen, director of the Information Department, expressed satisfaction at the "problem-free relations between France and China." He referred to the visits exchanged by the two countries' leaders since President Pompidou's visit in 1973 and, inevitably, paid tribute to General de Gaulle for having been the first in the West to pave the way for normalizing relations with China.

"Our two countries have similar, if not identical viewpoints on the major problems in the world, especially on peace, disarmament, North-South dialogue, and regional conflicts in Afghanistan and Cambodia," Ma Yuzhen stressed and he regretted only one thing: the trade imbalance at his country's expense.

Indeed, since last year Franco-Chinese trade has increased greatly, and French exports have increased by 160 percent over 1984. The volume of major contracts which France signed with China in 1985 amounted to some Fr5 billion (150 Alsthom locomotives, 3 Airbus aircraft, and 100,000 Alcatel telephone lines).

The value of contracts signed by Paris and Beijing this year is expected to double. The one relating to the Daya Bay nuclear power station near Canton accounts for Fr6 billion, not to mention a new order for two Airbus aircraft by the Civil Aviation General Administration and projects for the construction of thermal power station and one for an aluminum plant...

"We are aware of the reliability of French technology, but do not forget that ours is a backward and poor country. What is needed is for the European countries to help us train our engineers and technicians and allow us to benefit from their advanced technology," all the Chinese economic officials I met in Beijing or in the provinces stated. They also want the Western countries to invest more in their country.

In the Shezhen Special Economic Zone, facing Hong Kong, a greater French presence is desired. "While American and Japanese capital is pouring in," a Chinese businessmen told me, "France is only just walking up and sending exploratory missions."

Marxism and Pekin Duck

"We need to renovate our factories, install modern equipment, and give the appropriate training to our employees and workers," the Chinese officials admit, hoping to find in Europe "good partners to avoid excessive dependence on the powerful United States and Japan."

Hu Yaobang is certain to discuss all these problems with the French leaders and also to reassure them about China's intention to pursue its open door and modernization policy. The CPC general secretary is a realist and should not overemphasize "the vastness of the Chinese market." He knows his country's limitations, which have been reflected by repeated adjustments in many spheres over the past few years.

When receiving representatives of the Communist Party of Great Britain in Beijing recently, he humbly admitted that his compatriots could not reach the current living standard of the industrialized countries' populations for several decades. This is a long march which requires internal stability and complete peace on its borders.

Beijing is making every effort to guarantee this peace and is toning down its conflicts with Vietnam and the USSR. "Our exchanges with that country have constantly increased since 1982," according to Foreign Ministry official Ma Yuzhen.

He confirmed that the two countries' foreign ministers did not rule out the possibility of exchanging visits. "The dates still have to be fixed," he said, recalling that Wu Xueqian and Mr Shevardnazde had exchanged invitations at the last UN General Assembly session in New York.

"Our line of conduct is now clear, with regard to the USSR or any other country: To seek above all what is profitable to the two sides," a Beijing journalist said, and he was not at all shocked when I remarked to him that for several years the Chinese have spoken constantly about "profit" and that they seem to sacrifice some of the ideology to that. "We do not feed exclusively on Marxism-Leninism or Maoism, but also on Pekin duck from time to time," he retorted. Deng Xiaoping's pragmatism is decidedly catching on in this country.

Italian Communist Welcomes Visit

[Text] Rome, June 18 (XINHUA) -- "The Italian people and the Italian Communist Party are looking forward to the visit here by Comrade Hu Yaobang," said Antonio Rubbi, a leading member of the Italian Communist Party, in an interview with XINHUA here today.

Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang's return visit, to be made at the invitation of General Secretary Alessandro Natta of the Italian Communist Party, "will make us, the Italian communists, exceedingly happy" and "fall in accord with the behest of Enrico Berlinguer, the last leader of the Italian Communist Party," Rubbi said.

"We believe that the visit will give an energetic impetus to the friendly, cooperative relationship between Italy and the People's Republic of China and between the communist parties of the two countries," Rubbi said.

He added that although "there had been a difficult period in relations between our two parties, today we may say that the relations are good, very good, since the two parties share similar aspirations, that is, maintenance of peace, detente, disarmament, peaceful coexistence and development for all countries." Above all, Rubbi said, this was because "we have from the very start based these relations on the principles of independence for each party, mutual respect and friendly cooperation."

Hu is scheduled to arrive here tomorrow to begin a four-day visit, the last lap of his current four-nation West Europe tour.

Welcomed by Italy's Craxi

[Text] Rome, June 19 (XINHUA) — Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang today received a warm welcome by Prime Minister Bettino Craxi as he flew in Rome's Ciampino airdrome from Paris by a special plane to start a four-day official visit to Italy at Craxi's invitation. Italy is on the last leg of Hu's 16-day West European tour which has already taken him to Britain, Federal Germany and France.

A full red-carpet welcoming ceremony was rendered, with a military band playing the national anthems of China and Italy. Hu reviewed a guard of honour in Prime Minister Craxi's company.

Vice Premier Li Peng, vice chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference Fei Xiaotong and other Chinese officials accompanying Hu on his tour also arrived here by the same plane.

In a written statement released at the airdrome, Hu said he was very pleased to come here to pay a visit to Italy at Prime Minister Craxi's kind invitation. He would also pay a return visit to the Italian Communist Party at General Secretary Alessandro Natta's invitation, he added.

The Chinese leader praised Italy for its significant contributions to the cultural treasury of mankind and its increasingly important role in pushing forward the world's progress of science and technology and in preserving peace and stability in Europe and the Mediterranean.

He expressed his satisfaction with the steady and smooth development of friendly cooperation between China and Italy since their diplomatic relations were established in 1970. He told Prime Minister Craxi that his visit was intended to "deepen our mutual understanding and friendship, to further our cooperation and to work together with you for peace."

Among those greeting Hu at Ciampino airdrome were Chinese Ambassador to Italy Du Gong and representatives of the Chinese communities and Chinese students in this country.

The Chinese party leader will hold talks with Prime Minister Craxi this evening before attending a dinner given in his honor by Craxi at Madama Palace.

[Text] Rome, June 19 (XINHUA) — Italian Prime Minister Bettino Craxi and Chinese Communist Party general Secretary Hu Yaobang agreed that bilateral relations have developed steadily and have broad prospects for growth.

Hu, attending a banquet in his honor, said there are broad prospects for Sino-Italian relations based on the principles of mutual respect, equality and mutual benefit. Hu recalled the long history of Sino-Italian contacts, which dates to the ancient "silk road," and the all-round development of cooperation in recent years.

The Chinese leader praised Italy for its open-minded approach on technology transfers, its positive attitude in providing loans and grants, and in setting up joint ventures. "All this is farsighted and conducive to promoting common development," Hu said. He stressed that there is no conflict of fundamental interests between China and Italy. Hu said that the existing amicable Sino-Italian relationship is bound to be developed further on a lasting and stable basis.

Craxi said Italy and China have constantly increased their contacts. "Leaders of the two countries have exchanged visits and people from the economic, cultural, and scientific and technical circles of the two countries have also met frequently," Craxi said. He pointed out that the 1985 volume of bilateral trade increased by 100 percent, as compared with that of 1984. The Italian prime minister said the two countries have the same views on major international issues, particularly concerning peace, stability and security.

Hu arrived in Rome today from Paris for a five-day visit to Italy. Italy is the last leg of his West European tour, which has taken him to Britain, Federal Germany and France. Chinese Vice Premier Li Peng and Vice Chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference Fei Xiaotong also attended the banquet.

Says World Peace 'Indivisible'

OW200124 Beijing XINHUA in English 0114 GMT 20 Jun 86

[Text] Rome, June 19 (XINHUA) -- World Peace is indivisible while security of all nations is closely inter-related, Hu Yaobang, Chinese Communist Party general secretary, said tonight at a dinner hosted by Prime Minister Bettino Craxi.

Hu said China is concerned with peace and security in Asia and the Pacific region, but at the same time it is concerned with peace and security in Europe and the Mediterranean because they are vital to world peace.

China, Hu noted, appreciates all the positive efforts Italy has made in defending its sovereignty and preserving peace and stability in Europe and the Mediterranean, in helping with the peace process in the Middle East and the improvement of East-West and South-North relations.

In the final analysis, Hu stressed, a lasting world peace can be secured only with all nations working together. When it comes to those vital issues such as peace and development, all countries should have a say on the basis of equality no matter whether they are big or small, rich or poor, strong or weak.

World affairs, said the Chinese leader, should not be left at the mercy of the superpowers. Now that more and more nations are determined to grasp their destiny in their own hands and engaged in active moves to curb aggression and prevent war, the cause of working for a lasting peace in the world is full of hope, he concluded.

Craxi Speaks at Dinner

[Text] Rome, June 19 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang's visit to major European countries shows the importance of consultation between the European community and China, said Italian Prime minister Bettino Craxi at a dinner he hosted tonight at Villa de Madma in honour of the visiting Chinese leader.

Craxi said Italy is pleased to see the steady and smooth growth in Italian-Chinese contacts which shows that both sides are interested in a qualitative leap in their relations. There is no dispute between Italy and China on major international issues, especially those which concern peace, stability and security, but an encouraging convergence of their commitments, attention and points of view, stressed the prime minister.

He described China as "an important factor of great wisdom and moderation" which plays an active role in reinforcing cooperation and an international scene fraught with tension and crises.

Just as China, Italy is seeking every favourable elements to create an atmosphere for more confidence among countries and broader international economic cooperation, said the prime minister. This is because, he added, that world peace is closely linked with the balanced development and a fairer distribution of wealth. The broad convergence beween Italy and China is therefore gratifying in this complex and troublesome international circumstances, said Craxi.

"We," he said, "have made very significant steps forward since the diplomatic relations between our two countries were established 15 years ago." He called for moves aimed at improving the institutions in all fields between the two countries, including management of investment, personnel movement, trade and technological exchange, to take full advantage of the great potentials and resources.

[By staff reporter Zhen Fan]

[Text] Shanghai — France's Societe Generale, one of the three leading national banks in France and the 11th biggest bank in the world, is seeking closer economic ties with China.

China is playing an ever increasing role in world affairs while heading rapidly towards its goal of modernization, Marcel Cassou, director in charge of the Asian and Pacific region, told CHINA DAILY at a seminar here yesterday afternoon.

"I foresee greater prospects for building further economic relations with the People's Republic of China," Cassou said.

The three-day seminar, which began yesterday and is the first ever held by Societe Generale in China, is being held to discuss project financing, export credit, finance credit, European bonds and leasing.

Local bankers, business executives and department officials are attending the seminar.

The bank's Shanghai representative office announced that Jacques Mayoux, chairman of the bank, would be visiting China in the coming week at the invitation of Chen Muhua, president of the People's Bank of China.

After opening a Guangzhou office in 1980, Societ Generale set up its Beijing office in 1981 and Shanghai office in 1983. Its Shenzhen branch was opened in March this year.

ASSOCIATION DENOUNCES SOUTH AFRICAN ACTS

OW181344 Beijing XINHUA in English 1332 GMT 18 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 18 (XINHUA) -- The Association for International Understanding of China issued a statement here today strongly denouncing the fascist acts of the South African racist regime. The statement said that the horrifying Soweto massacre created by the apartheid regime ten years ago has not intimidated the South African people, but instead, has further educated them. In the past ten years, and the last two years in particular, the South African people's just struggle against racial discrimination and inequality has been extensively increasing and deepening. The South African regime has been thrown into an unprecedented tight corner.

In the face of the mammoth people's struggle at home and strong condemnation from the world community, the statement noted, the South African regime has conducted repeated barbarous raids against its neighbouring nations, imposed a state of emergency at home and arrested many innocent people. All these moves have further exposed the cruelty and weakness of the South African regime. The statement added that the Chinese people will continue as they have done in the past to support the just struggle of the South African people. "It is our belief that so long as the South African people close their ranks and persist in their struggle, they are bound to win final victory," the statement said.

STATE OF EMERGENCY IN SOUTH AFRICA CRITICIZED

["Jottings" by Chen Feng: "A Mantis Trying to Stop a Chariot"]

[Text] The rule over the broad masses of black people by the South African authorities headed by Botha is no less cruel than the despotic rule of the old fascist leader Hitler. Not long ago, black people in South Africa planned to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the "Soweto Massacre." The Botha regime felt perplexed and uneasy because of this and hurriedly declared a "state of emergency." By doing so, it has conferred on itself special power to kill and arrest people arbitrarily, and it can ban the press from publishing any factual reports, on its bloody crimes.

Some 1,000 people were arrested on the first day the state of emergency was declared. It was so overwhelmingly arrogant, as if the tens of thousands of black people and other colored people who are resisting the apartheid policy could be intimidated. However, the facts over these past few days have proved that the escalation of the armed suppression can only evoke stronger resistance. A lot of white people in South Africa stand by the side of the black people because they know that there is no way out for the apartheid policy. The perverse actions of the South African authorities have made them unprecedentedly isolated in the world. The UN Security Council unanimously condemned the latest atrocity of the Botha regime. This has rarely happened in the United Nations. There is a more powerful worldwide demand for all-round sanctions against South Africa.

In history, all regimes which resort to power to suppress the people are weak. Therefore, they will not last long. The Botha regime is no exception. The brutal racism has long been thrown into the rubbish heap by the people of the world.

However, Botha and his like are obstinately clinging to this rubbish heap, trying to block the turning of the wheel of the times. Is this no different from a mantis trying to stop a chariot? The struggle of cornered beasts is their last desperate struggle.

PRC JOURNAL ON U.S. SUPPORT FOR UNITA

HK130940 Beijing SHIJIE ZHISHI in Chinese No 9, 1 May 86 p 12

[Article by Yu Da: "New U.S. Moves in Angola"]

[Text] The recent new U.S. moves in Angola have reflected the changes in U.S. policy toward southern Africa and the aggravation of the U.S.-Soviet competition over this region, which has roused the restlessness of world opinion.

First, the United States repealed in last July, the 1976 Clark amendment on banning any American assistance for the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola (UNITA,) which has been fighting Angola's government. According to THE WASHINGTON POST, the U.S. Government has already notified the Congress of providing UNITA with aid consisting of $15 millon worth of weaponry. On 29 January, Jonas Savimbi, head of UNITA, visited the United States at the invitation of the White House. President Reagan met him, and Savimbi was given a "red carpet" reception. The United States has broken the usual practice of providing aid in outmoded weaponry, and sent Savimbi in secret, the advanced U.S. Chaparral surface-to-air weapon system and the TOW antitank missiles, as disclosed by THE WASHINGTON POST not long ago. According to Shultz, Soviet military advisors and 30,000 Cuban troops are stationed in Angola, and the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (M.P.L.A.) in power possesses interceptor planes and other weaponry provided by the USSR. U.S. aid provided Savimbi aim to ensure his "subsistence capability" under the strong Soviet and Cuban pressure.

What is worrying is that the current U.S. practice will lead to an escalation of armed conflict in Angola, and that new complicated factors are added to the turbulent situation in southern Africa. It can only be speculated whether the United States is getting tough in its southern Africa policy, and what the reaction of the Soviet Union and Cuba will be, which support M.P.L.A., the party in power in Angola.

For years, Angola has been closely related with the independence of Namibia, it has thus become a hot spot in the conflicts in Southern Africa as well as in the U.S.-Soviet competition. The United States has all along stood on the side of South Africa, in order to repel Soviet and Cuban influence in this region, and advocated that the independence of Namibia must be linked with the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola. During Carter's administration, the United States believed that the UNITA was not strong enough, and it was doubtful whether it would become an overwhelming force in Angola; therefore, U.S. aid provided for UNITA was secret and limited, mainly carried out through the indirect maneuvering of South Africa. Since Reagan came into office, he has adopted a so-called "constructive engagement" policy in southern Africa, in the hope of persuading South Africa, through "quiet diplomacy," to adopt some positions both at home and abroad for the relaxation of the tense situation in southern Africa, so as to make things easier for U.S. activities. At the same time, the United States has demanded the withdrawal of Cuban troops in Angola, and a reconciliation between the M.P.L.A. and UNITA.

For this, Chester A. Crocker, assistant secretary for African affairs in the Department of State shuttled between southern African countries. In such an atmosphere, south Africa and Angola reached an accord on mutually moving away from military engagements, and a wave of peace talks appeared in southern Africa. Hence, a rather favorable position for the United States. But soon, South Africa suppressed the black people's movement at home in a big way, and supported the puppet regime in Namibia. Then it repeatedly violated the accord and intruded into the southern areas of Angola, and sabotaged the security of its neighboring countries.

Inside Angola, war between the MPLA government army and UNITA escalated, and reconciliation came to naught. U.S. diplomatic efforts suffered repeated setbacks. Thus, the U.S. hardliners in the U.S. ruling group have repeatedly appealed for a restudy of the "constructive engagement" policy for southern Africa, and advocated an offensive in support of UNITA. UNITA has gradually grown more powerful in its strength over the past few years; it now has control over one-sixth of the total territory of the country, and is engaged in seasaw battles with the government army on two-thirds of the territory. Some people in the U.S. Congress believe that UNITA has already become a force to bargain, and to contend with the MPLA; and they advocated changing the practice of the Carter administration by aiding UNITA in a big way, beefing up its actual strength, and using UNITA to resist the influence of the Soviet Union and Cuba in Angola.

Now the dry season offensive is close at hand, and U.S. assistance will help UNITA to oppose the offensive of the government army. Besides, the United States is bringing economic pressure to bear on the Angola government, making vigorous efforts to press the MPLA to reconciliate with UNITA. The United States threatens to withdraw U.S. oil companies in Angola if the MPLA insists on solving the question of UNITA by military means. Oil is Angola's economic lifeline. It would be very difficult for Angola's economy to suffer the blow of U.S. withdrawal of its oil companies.

While adopting the above-mentioned hardline measures, the United States has not given up talks with Angola. Although the United States and Angola have not established diplomatic relations, the two countries have made contacts on the independence of Namibia and the bilateral relations between the two countries. Last November, the United States and Angola resumed their once interrupted talks. Early this year, U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Crocker visited Angola, and he expressed the U.S. wish "for continuing to push forward its influence on Southern Africa and the diplomatic process of the Namibia issue based on a constructive spirit." Angola's President Jose Eduardo dos Santos also said that the Angolan government was ready to discuss with the United States the problems of southern Africa.

The new U.S. practice in Angola has brought strong repercussions from many sides. President dos Santos condemned the direct U.S. military aid to UNITA calling it a violent intervention in Angola's internal affairs, and he said that Angola would not submit to U.S. "blackmailing" and "threats." Kaunda, Zambia's president and chairman of the African Front-line States, pointed out that the U.S. practice has directly endangered peace in southern Africa. And he warned that if the United States doesn't stop its assistance to Savimbi, "Angola would split into two like Korea, with its southern part controlled by the United States, and its northern part fallen into Soviet hands." On the same day when Reagan met Savimbi, the Soviet foreign minister and defense minister were meeting the Angola and Cuban government reepresentatives, reaffirming Soviet support of Angola.

World opinion believes that the current U.S. practice will inevitably intensify the domestic contradictions in Angola, making the MPLA rely all the more on the Soviet Union and Cuba for their support, and making the withdrawal of Cuban troops an impossibility. If the Cuban troops should stay, South Africa would have a pretext to block Namibia's independence. Therefore, peace in southern Africa has met with new trouble.

FURTHER ON BOLIVIAN SENATE DELEGATION'S VISIT

Talks With Huang Hua

OW132015 Beijing XINHUA in English 1456 GMT 13 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 13 (XINHUA) -- Huang Hua, vice-chairman of China's National People's Congress (NPC) Standing Committee, held talks here today with Oscar Zamora Medinacelli, president of the Bolivian Senate. They exchanged views on the world situation and bilateral cooperation and briefed each other on their countries' political and economic situation.

Huang said that China has been following closely the situation in Central America, which has become a hot spot in the world. "We stand for a settlement of the Central-American issue by the Central American countries themselves through peaceful negotiations without outside interference," he stated. "We support the efforts of the Contadora Group and other Latin-American countries for a peaceful resolution of the Central-American issue."

Zamora expressed the hope to strengthen cooperation between the two countries. He said that China, which suffered the same lot as other Third-World countries, is Bolivia's most ideal partner in cooperation.

Huang said that it is a basic policy of China to promote South-South cooperation. The country is willing to develop friendly cooperation with Bolivia under the principles of independence, equality and mutual benefit, diversified forms and common development.

The NCP Standing Committee gave a banquet this evening to welcome the Bolivian Senate delegation led by Zamora. Speaking at the function, both Huang and Zamora paid tribute to the friendship between the two countries and peoples, and expressed the wish to further relations between the two parliaments.

The Bolivian delegation arrived here today after visiting Shanghai and Hangzhou in southern China.

[Text] Beijing, June 14 (XINHUA) -- Hu Qili, member of the Political Bureau and Secretariat of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China (CPC), met a delegation from the Bolivian Senate led by its President Oscar Zamora Medinacelli here today.

Hu said the delegation's visit coincides with the first anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic ties between the two countries. This shows how the Bolivian Government and the public cherish their friendly relations with China. He spoke highly of Bolivia's foreign policy of peace, independence and non-alignment and its positions for the establishment of a new international economic order, peaceful settlement of international conflicts and opposition to the power politics pursued by the big powers.

Both China and Bolivia desire world peace, Hu noted. The two countries can learn from each other's strong points in developing their national economies and carry out barter trade on the basis of equality and mutual benefit.

After giving an account of Bolivia's political and economic situation, Zamora said the Bolivian and Chinese Governments have signed a number of agreements, but various forms of cooperation between their provinces and cities are in order so as to promote bilateral trade and economic relations. This is politically important and beneficial to both sides, he added. He told Hu that all political parties in Bolivia share identical views on developing friendly relations with China, and both Bolivia and China are of the same opinion as to the prospects of their bilateral relations. After the meeting, Hu gave a luncheon for the visitors.

[Text] Beijing, June 15 (XINHUA) -- Peng Zhen, chairman of the National People's Congress Standing Committee, said here today that the Third World countries should strengthen their unity and cooperation and develop their national economy.

At a meeting with a delegation from Bolivian Senate led by its President Oscar Zamora Medinacelli in the Great Hall of the People, Peng said, along with the cultural, economic and technological development of the mankind, no country could exist without association with other countries and they should live in peace. Peng said Third World countries should unite more closely, respect and help each other and learn from each other's strong points as well as expand their cooperation politically, economically and culturally.

On China's foreign policies, the chairman said China pursues an independent foreign policy of peace and handles relations with other countries in line with the five principles of peaceful co-existence. Countries, big or small, strong or weak, rich or poor, should be equal, he noted, and China opposes hegemonic act of any kind.

Agreed with Peng's view, Zamora said the development of Third World countries depend on unity and cooperation among themselves. Bolivia firmly safeguards its national independence and strives for new international economic order, he added.

Peng said China and Bolivia are developing countries and are good friends. He held that Sino-Bolivian cooperation has broad prospects.

Zamora said Bolivia will spare no effort to expand the friendly cooperation with China.

Huang Hua and Wang Hanbin, vice-chairman and secretary-general of the NPC Standing Committee, attended the meeting.

NPC SESSION DEBATES PUBLIC ORDER DRAFT

OW191206 Beijing XINHUA in English 1155 GMT 19 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 19 (XINHUA) — Members of the National People's Congress (NPC) Standing Committee, China's highest legislative body, today called for the passage of a revised draft of regulations governing offenses against public order.

In a panel discussion, most of the members agreed that the draft has been well revised, stressing clear distinctions between offenses against public order and more serious crimes, and suggests that such offenses be handled with a combination of education and punishment.

The revised draft, submitted to the ongoing 16th meeting of the NPC Standing Committee, stressed that "those who need not be detained must not be detained, and those who need not be fined must not be fined" in a bid to educate offenders.

Huang Zhigang pointed out that there was a deficiency in dealing with actions harmful to society yet not too serious to be subjected to criminal punishment. The draft, he said, would surely help the public security authorities have guidelines to follow and help offenders mend their ways.

Liu Zengkun, vice-chairman of the Tianjin Municipal People's Congress Standing Committee, who is now visiting the NPC Standing Committee session, said he was satisfied with the article added this time which stipulates "if a public security agency has punished someone unfairly, it should admit its mistake to the person involved, return the fine or confiscated property, and compensate the person for any losses or violations of rights under the law."

"It is realistic," he added.

Some members called for more serious punishment for offenses involving prostitution. Instead of fines, detention and labor-reform should be resorted to, they stressed.

Some members also suggested the addition of articles governing minor offenses of maltreatment of aged people, women and children, and the disabled.

Vice-Chairman of the NPC Standing Committee Seypidin Aze held that since punishment was not the aim but a means for constructing a better social order, it is esential to mobilize the whole of society, including families and schools, to make the draft regulation widely known, so as to help people develop good habits and a high standard of morality.

5 ARRESTED IN BEATING OF FOREIGN STUDENT

[Text] Beijing, 18 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- Judicial organs of China have been hearing the case that a foreign student was beaten up in Beijing.

According to BEIJING RIBAO, on the evening of 31 May, Liu Qiuqi, a vagrant youth, caused trouble after drinking near the eastern gate of the China People's University in Beijing. He provoked a passing female Japanese student, Yukori Sonoda by name. At that moment, a Moroccan boy student Ben Bushita [2609 1580 0087 1044], who was with Sonoda, stepped forward and called Liu to account.

Suddenly Liu Qiuqi struck the first blow at Ben Bushita. When Ben struck back, four other Chinese youths surrounded him and one of them even knocked Ben out.

After the incident occurred, Chinese public security organs conducted an investigation immediately and finally the five troublemakers, including Liu Qiuqi, were all arrested by the Chinese public security organs.

A few days ago, when Ben Bushita and Sonoka were informed of the real state of affairs, they were very happy and heartily gave thanks for the efforts made by the Chinese Government and public security organs. They said: We believe that the Chinese Government protects the legitimate rights of foreigners in China and the overwhelming majority of the Chinese are friendly to foreigners. We have never been discriminated against racially and the behavior of only one or two people does not reflect at all the Chinese people as a whole.

RENMIN RIBAO DESCRIBES REFORMER'S DISMISSAL

["Feature" by staff reporter Ai Geng: "An Unfinished Controversy -- Before and After Xia Renfan Was Dismissed"]

[Excerpts] Roaring Waves Along the Course

Xia Renfan, male, 37, graduated from the economic management department of Liaoning University in 1982. He once worked in the rural areas, joined the PLA, and worked as a driver and as deputy chief of a motor transport corps. He also has professional knowledge. After a certain period of assessment, the Shenyang City public utility bureau appointed him deputy manager of the city's tram company in August 1983. He was promoted to manager in May 1984.

The young manager displayed his boldness in reform. He handled a series of problems in line with the principle of being "strict, meticulous, realistic, and new." He presided over meetings to adopt strict measures for curbing corruption involving coupons and money, he partially solved for the first time morning shift workers' problems concerning breakfast; he proposed setting up a radio command and control system; he worked hard from dawn till dust along the tram line....

In October 1984, Xia Renfan was invited to Beijing to attend a forum of 14 young activists in reforms, where he was received and encouraged by Wan Li, Hu Qili, Hao Jianxiu, and other central leading comrades.

However, when he returned to Shenyang in early November, he was crestfallen because the higher authorities sent a fact-finding team to look into his problems.

The fact-finding team concluded: The company's reform orientation is correct and it has attained notable results. Xia Renfan has done some work in the reform and has achieved some success. Some of his shortcomings are also "conspicuous" but this does not present an obstacle to his becoming an advanced element in the reform.

In April 1985, the party committee of the city's transportation bureau sent a party rectification liaison team to the tram company. The team again investigated Xia Renfan and encouraged the cadres and the masses to "appraise" him.

At the end of August 1985, Xia was relieved of his post as company manager.

Like a small boat, Xia Renfan was pushed up and down by the waves and was finally stranded on the beach.

A Bold and Prudent Reformer

Xia Renfan had shortcomings and made mistakes. Like an unskilled boatman going downstream, he forgot about the "dangerous shoals" when everything was plain sailing. According to the material supplied by the relevant department, the main problems leading to Xia's dismissal were: raising his pay scale by one step without authorization, buying a set of Western-style clothes at the expense of the state, violating the financial discipline and the central policy, taking pleasure trips to scenic spots with his wife, and so on.

Xia Renfan admitted his shortcomings and mistakes. He told this reporter: "As a reformer, I lack both immunity and defence capability." He also repeatedly said: "I will sum up experiences and lessons and pitch into the work again."

Yes, it is impossible for people to first become "perfect men" and then carry out reforms. They always gradually "perfect" reform measures for themselves.

The Controversy Sets People Thinking

If we measure Xia's achievements and shortcomings in the course of the reform and make a concrete analysis of his mistakes in the specific environment in the initial period of the reform, it will not be difficult for us to draw an objective and just conclusion.

In July 1984, the tram company tried out a "one-man" system, under which Xia Renfan served both as party secretary and company manager. As time was pressing, he sometimes worked in a slapdash manner. The other principal leading members of the company, who were not ideologically prepared for withdrawing to the second line, became skeptical and dissatisfied. Some others, who had left their leading posts during the reform, also cherished somewhat similar feelings. Feelings are contagious. They can spread vertically and horizontally.

A young manager plunged into the economic reform with one heart and one mind and achieved some successes. Later, however, he was investigated, examined, "appraised," dismissed, and left waiting around, being given the "cold treatment" for 18 months. If a reformer can meet with such misfortune, what kind of shadow will it cast of the reform?

Commentator's Article

[Commentator's article: "Warmly Love and Help Reformers"]

[Text] Some time ago, a number of activists who were bold in conducting reforms emerged in various parts of the country.

They have developed into a shock force pushing forward the reforms. However, information from some units shows that due to various reasons, some of them, particularly the comrades who have shortcomings and have made mistakes, are in a fairly difficult situation and some have even been dismissed. How to deal with the "prominent figures" in reforms who have both achievements and defects has become a matter of great concern to society. The report on Xia Renfan carried in this newspaper today touches upon this problem.

At the beginning of the reform, a central leading comrade said: Making mistakes is permissible in the execution of the reform, but not conducting reforms is impermissible. This is not only a slogan for encouraging reforms but also a principle for dealing with reforms. Now, some leading comrades of the departments responsible for the work are excessively accomodating toward those cadres who have limited ability, who have no intention of carrying out reforms, and who have failed to open up a new situation for a long time, without uttering a word of criticism to them. However, they cannot tolerate the comrades who are bold in carrying out reform, who have achieved notable successes, but who also have some shortcomings or have made mistakes.

Some comrades said: "Making mistakes in work is excusable but seeking personal benefit in the name of reform is impermissible." We should also make a concrete analysis of this. If this "benefit," which may not be entirely appropriate, is stipulated in the reform plan, it should be left until the plan is revised at a later stage. We should not go too far in holding certain individuals responsible for their mistakes. Even if some of these mistakes are caused by the defects in the personal competence of the reformers, they are not in the nature of violations of law and discipline. For this reason, we should objectively examine them in light of the environment and conditions at that time and adopt the approach of helping people with good intentions and "curing the sickness to help the patient." We should not indiscriminately make a big fuss over trifles, "settle final accounts," and rashly label people as "availing themselves of the loopholes in the reform." The practice of attacking reforms for a single fault without considering their other aspects should by no means be adopted by those who really care for comrades and uphold reforms. Far from helping comrades to make progress and pushing forward the reforms, it will only sharpen contradictions and complicate simple matters.

"Now that the masses have brought up the problems, we cannot but investigate and deal with them." True, in order to clear up problems, it is necessary to send fact-finding teams occasionally, to conduct investigation in a down-to-earth way, to affirm the achievements, to help correct the shortcomings or mistakes, and to sternly deal with illegal activities. This is necessary for upholding and pushing forward the reforms. However, it is different in some localities. After sending the first fact-finding team to basically clarify the problems, they disregard the conclusions the team has drawn in favor of the reforms; after sending the second fact-finding team, they again disregard the conclusions the team has drawn in favor of the reforms; and they send another fact-finding team to reinvestigate the old problems that have been investigated and to expose the mistakes that the reformers have corrected, setting a very high "tone" for them. Whoever puts in a good word for the reformers is investigated. They never stop until those investigated are submissive and obedient.

With the fact-finding teams constantly coming in and going out, the reformers are depressed because they have long been placed in the position of being the "accused" and "being investigated." Although the reformers are finally declared good comrades or competent persons, they have lost their dashing spirit and the masses participating in the reform are also disheartened. What can we gain from this? Can this be called "love"? In contrast to this, few fact-finding teams come to the enterprises where reforms are not carried out and where the work stagnates, and the leaders also lead a peaceful life. This state of affairs cannot but have a negative effect on people's minds so that they are afraid to undertake reforms.

Just as the reformers lack experience, how to deal with the reformers is also a new subject. We should uphold the principle of seeking truth from facts, promote socialist democracy, promptly sum up the experiences and lessons in this field, and conscientiously improve our work. This is what people are concerned about. This is also necessary to constantly push forward the reform.

GUANGMING RIBAO URGES TRUSTING INTELLECTUALS

HK191241 Beijing GUANGMING RIBAO in Chinese 11 Jun 86 p 1

Article by Yun Wen: "The Prerequisite for Creating a Harmonious Atmosphere Lies in Trusting Intellectuals"]

[Text] The creation of a fine environment for airing opinions and a harmonious atmosphere has been the hope of the intellectuals over the years. It is natural for them to yearn, and to show great concern for this.

The intellectuals are the main body engaged in spiritual development. A fine environment for airing opinions and a harmonious academic atmosphere have a direct bearing on whether the intellectuals are able to carry on the most fruitful creative labor. Some intellectuals engaged in academic research and literature and art believe that the creation and long-term maintenance of a harmonious atmosphere will make possible the further flourishing of China's research in academic theory and literature and art work.

Then, how is such an environment and atmosphere created and maintained? The key lies in having a correct estimation of the present condition of China's intellectuals.

In the considerably long period since the anti-rightist struggle in 1957, China's intellectuals had always been in a strained environment and atmosphere of being criticized, attacked and reformed. The reason was the party's adoption of an ultra-leftist policy towards the intellectuals. The erroneous policy was derived from an erroneous estimation of the intellectuals. And the most fundamental error was the reversal of the correct conclusion which the Central Committee had explicitly proclaimed that "the overwhelming majority of the intellectuals have become part of the working class," when the intellectuals were regarded as an alien force, and intellectuals of the bourgeoisie. Thus, whatever political campaign unfolded, or certain erroneous policy was pursued, the intellectuals were always the first target of attack.

The 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee has restored the ideological line of seeking truth from facts. The Central Committee reaffirms that the overwhelming majority of the intellectuals are "an integral part of the working class," which is the most basic condition and prerequisite for creating a harmonious atmosphere.

However, because of the prejudice against the intellectuals formed over many years, some comrades have not genuinely regarded the intellectuals as "one of themselves," in some localities and on some issues. When there is something new in the writings or speeches of some intellectuals, they are often censured. Thus, it would be very difficult for the intellectuals to be thoroughly rid of their "strained mental state" of the past.

The practice of China's socialist revolution and construction has already proved that China's intellectuals have displayed not only outstanding wisdom and intelligence in all undertakings, but also a relatively high level of political consciousness. Their loyalty to the party, pursuit of communist ideals, devotion to the motherland, and a steadfastness to their careers are witnessed by all. Many of them have never moved their faith in the party and socialism even when they landed in a most difficult situation. Then, on what grounds should we adopt an attitude of distrust and feel ill at ease towards them? We must see that some intellectuals have made bold explorations in the research of academic theories in recent years; inspired by the reforms and opening up, the overwhelming majority of them have exerted their efforts and offered their advice concerning the party's undertakings in reforms, in order to render service to the motherland. Even if certain suggestions proposed by some comrades are not so correct, or even erroneous in their bold exploration, that is chiefly because man's subjective understanding sometimes fails to conform to objective realities, or because of the result of looking at things from a different angle. Therefore, we should mainly find the cause from the theory of cognition, and should not rashly raise the issue to a higher plane of political principle.

We should also affirm that the overwhelming majority of the intellectuals are willing to take Marxism as the guiding idea in their theoretical research. In old China, many advanced intellectuals pursued the Marxist truth with their lives and blood. Since the founding of the PRC, many intellectuals have worked hard at studying Marxism, and have a firm belief in Marxism. In recent years, some intellectuals have made all kinds of exploration into Marxism based on the new historical condition and the development of science; and their purpose is to adhere to, to enrich, and to develop Marxism, so that Marxist theory may maintain its vitality with the change of the times. Therefore, we should not rashly regard such exploration as "negating the Marxist tenets."

The majority of Chinese intellectuals have a strong enterprising spirit, and they are bold at making progress. Especially since the implementation of the opening up policy, some intellectuals engaged in academic research and literature and art work have emancipated their minds, studied and referred to some foreign approaches in research, academic views and theoretical systems. Generally speaking, such study and reference aim to develop theory, to make creation flourish, and to make China's socialist spiritual construction arrive at the world's advanced level. By no means should we suppress or injure such precious enthusiasm of theirs.

Of course, it is hardly avoidable for the intellectuals to commit some kinds of mistakes in the course of exploration and research. The fraudulent and floss may all be brought in when introducing western approaches and concepts. If such a condition should emerge, we should also believe that under the correct leadership of the Central Committee, the Chinese intellectuals have the ability to differentiate and correct them, and they are able to correctly absorb and digest foreign ideologies and cultures.

Such a measure of self-correction will be more favorable to the development and flourishing of academic theories, and the upgrading of the qualities of the intellectuals themselves.

In short, there are two different estimations and attitudes regarding the question of treating the intellectuals in the course of creating a harmonious environment for airing opinions. One is based on the firm belief that the overwhelming majority of the intellectuals are good; thus they should be trusted fully and be given a free hand to engage themselves in bold exploration, and blaze new trials. And the other is adopting the old estimation of the intellectuals; hence, remaining distrustful, ill at ease, and disrespectful of the intellectuals, always on guard against their writings and speeches. Obviously, the former estimation and attitude are correct; and only by adopting such an estimation and attitude, will it be possible to make the intellectuals fully use their wisdom and intelligence at ease, and to make contributions to the development of academic theories and the flourishing of literature and art creation.

BEIJING SYMPOSIUM MARKS 100 FLOWERS ANNIVERSARY

OW160343 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 2215 GMT 13 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Nearly 300 people from the capital's academic and literary circles attended a symposium in Beijing on the afternoon of 29 May to mark the 30th anniversary of the double hundred policy — the policy of letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend — introduced by the CPC Central Committee. The symposium was sponsored by the Chinese Society of Marxist Study, the Chinese Writers' Association, the Chinese Society of Political Science, the Chinese Federation of Economic Groups, the Society for Research of Natural Dialectics, and the Department of Marxism and Leninism of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences.

Present at the meeting were Zhu Houze and Wang Daming, respectively head and deputy head of the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, as well as comrades Yu Guangyuan, Wang Huide, Huan Xiang, (Jiang Siyi) and others.

Speaking on promoting scientific study of social sciences, Comrade Yu Guangyuan said: The objective of the double hundred policy is to bring about a more active scientific study, which calls for more research work. Contention for contention's sake should not be the aim of our research. That should be producing scientific results useful for our country's socialist construction and reform. To promote the study of sciences, the nation must take effective measures to institute scientific study of social sciences. In this regard, Yu Guangyuan put forward certain tentative ideas and specific measures.

Some scholars pointed out that the proposition that class struggle should be regarded as the guiding principle, and some people's wariness of bourgeois liberalization were two main reasons why the double hundred policy was not implemented over a rather long period. In fact, they said, this was a continuation of the leftists' infantile disorder in the history of the world communist movement.

Some comrades pointed out that an important reason why the double hundred policy could not be successfully implemented lay in China's backward economic and cultural development. Over a long period, often only one school of thought was allowed to exist.

After the Warring States period [475-221 B.C.] all schools of thought but Confucianism were rejected. Since there was basically only one school of thought after liberation, dogmatism was rampant.

What should be done to prevent the recurrence of such a situation? Some comrades pointed out that the implementation of the double hundred policy must be guaranteed by political democracy. This means that all citizens are guaranteed the ability to exercise their democratic rights prescribed in the Constitution, that hostilities against intellectuals must be halted, and that people in society should think intellectuals trustworthy. They added that, to uphold the policy of letting a hundred of schools of thought contend, everyone should be considered equal before truth, and the 100 schoools of thought should not be reduced to only two. The relationship between Marxism and non-Marxism should not be one between the ruler and the ruled. Likewise, the polemics between them should only be settled throgh free dicussion. To ensure that all schools of thought can contend with each other, there should not be any administrative intervention with academic polemics.

Some scholars said: To uphold the double hundred policy, scientific workers' academic freedom must be ensured, and academic freedom must be based on the principle that the pursuit of truth should have greater priority than all other pursuits. Only in this sense can there be genuine academic freedom. However, because there was not an environment in which academic freedom is safeguarded, more often than not our scholars had to place other considerations above the pursuit of truth. Thus, before publicizing their academic viewpoints, people must consider whether or not the outcome may threaten their safety. As such, inherent academic freedom must be ensured before the double hundred policy can be implemented.

Some young theoretical workers expressed the hope that the double hundred policy should be a fundamental and long-term one, and not a short-term, temporary, intermittent and expedient measure. To this end, they said, it is necessary to perfect socialist democracy and law, so that socialist freedom of creation, academic research, and speech can be genuinely institutionalized and fully protected by law. To achieve genuine academic equality, no one is entitled to any special privilege in the area of academic criticism and discussion. As everyone is equal before truth, everyone should also be equal before academic issues. On the basis of academic equality, everyone must have academic freedom. Specifically speaking, theoretical workers must have the freedom of independent thought, be able to take part in debate, write creatively and make criticisms, as well as have the freedom to voice, uphold, and reserve their opinions.

Excerpts of Speeches

["Excerpts of Speeches at Forum on the Double Hundred Policy"]

[Text] Editors note: On 29 May, the Society for Research in Marxism-Leninism Mao Zedong Thought, the Chinese Writers' Association, the Chinese Society of Political Science, the Chinese Federation of Economic Groups, the Society for Research of Natural Dialectics, the research institute of Marxixm-Leninism-Mao Zedong Thought of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, and other units, jointly held a forum in Beijing, marking the 30th anniversary of the putting forward of the double hundred principle. The following articles are excerpts of some speeches made at the forum.

"It Is Necessary To Resolve Several Questions In Implementing the Double Hundred Policy" — By Wu Mingyu

Over the last 2 or 3 decades, never did we enjoy such a democratic political life in our party and country as since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, nor a spiritual life as varied and colorful as it is today, or have such an understanding of the modern civilization in the world as we do now. This is an excellent situation. Nevertheless, in such a situation, we still come across many obstacles in implementing the double hundred principle.

Since it is a correct principle conforming with the objective law governing human mental activities, why is the double hundred principle constantly obstructed and disturbed? In the past, there were surely some important historical reasons, such as taking the class struggle as a key link, the personality cult, and so on. At present, it is often the case that the following three issues are not very well handled.

First, the evaluation of the intellectual circles. The party's evaluation of intellectuals should be already very clear. At the national science congress in 1978, Comrade Deng Xiaoping delivered a special speech. At the conference marking the 100th anniversary of the death of Marx in 1983, Comrade Hu Yaobang also especially stressed this issue. He pointed out that our party's policy on intellectuals has once again moved into the orbit of Marxism. However, we have not yet carried it out in every aspect. At present, various kinds of hesitation and obstruction in connection with the double hundred principle are related to the evaluation of the intellectual circles. Not long ago, newspapers carried some articles whose general idea can be summarized as reemphasizing the importance of remolding the bourgeois world outlook of the intellectuals. I think that this runs counter to our party's evaluation of the intellectuals. It often happens that because an individual intellectual makes a speech, or writes an article which contains something not quite perfect or contains errors, or even has no errors but because of differing opinions, some people might reach some conclusions, maintaining that the situation is not good and asking who is ruling the ideological circles, and so on. I think that such an evaluation has, in fact, shaken the basic trust in the party's policy on the intellectuals and the basic trust in the double hundred principle.

Second, should spiritual life be monotonous or varied? I hold that spiritual life should be diversified and colorful. Whether in the study of natural and social science or in the cultural and artistic life, in fact all our human spiritual life should be varied and colorful. We should absolutely not return to the era of having only eight model operas. In spiritual life, we should allow and encourage people to make exploration in a diversified way. Of course, we should call on the artists and scientists to adhere to the orientation of serving socialism and the people. But we should not use this to restrict every specific work and subject of research. It is not very easy to judge whether a work tallies with the orientation of socialism or not. It needs to be tested by practice, even protractedly and repeatedly. If only those people who are in line with the orientation are allowed to create wroks, the first quesion should be who sould be the judges. If only a few people are qualified to be the judges, a large number of works might be throttled.

Only by letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend can we discover the works which conform most to the socialist orieintation and are most lively, and gradually eliminate those works which are in poor taste and not in conformity to the socialist orientation through competition. Success is a result of constant exploration and growth. If we should require that exploration only succeed, and not fail, it is tantamount to not allowing exploration and blocking the road of creation and the road of seeking truth. We just cannot allow the correctness of a work or scientific research, or the content of the spiritual life of our society as a whole to be decided by the personal feelings of individuals (including individual leaders).

Third, should Marxism continue or stop developing? I think that everyone would say Marxism should continue to develop, rather than being brought to a standstill. Nevertheless, I think that in order to develop Marxism, people should be allowed to break with some outdated theories in the classical works of Marxism and supplement and develop Marxism. If people should be afraid of hearing the words: making some breakthroughs, or tend to regard viewpoints which differ from the classical works as heretical beliefs, this is, in fact, tantamount to not allowing the development of Marxism. Only through development can Marxism have true vitality and be truly upheld for a long time. If people only stress the persistence of Marxism but not the development of Marxism, this so-called Marxism will have hardly any vitality and will become a grey theory. Life is like an evergreen tree. If theory does not advance along with the development of practice, it will turn grey.

"Contention Concerning Letting a Hundred Schools of Thought Contend" -- by Huang Qinghe

Thirty years ago, as a member of the science selction of the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, I did some specific work in implementing the policy of letting a hundred schools of thought contend in the field of genetics. I personally experienced and witnessed how popular the policy was among the people and how it pleased the vast numbers of scientists and technicians at that time. Like a good rain after a long drought, it filled the country's scientific and technological circles with vigor and vitality. After 3 decades on a tortuous path, everyone has gained a more profound understanding of the policy of letting a hundred schools of thought contend. Here, I would like to raise two viewpoints, which can also serve as a contention concerning the policy of letting a hundred schools of thought contend.

1. The formulation of the policy of letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schooools of thought contend is, in fact, a reform in the ideological field.

The double hundred policy is aimed at solving improper interference of political forces in learning, technology, and art. In the 1930's and 40's the CPSU supported one school of thought to suppress another in the academic circles. This practice spread to China in the early period of the People's Republic, bringing about great confusion, first in genetics, and then in other relevant branches of learning. In an article mourning Stalin's death, Lysenko wrote: "Comrade Stalin personally brought to light a series of the most important laws on biology."

That is to say, it was not biologists but Stalin, who was not a biologist, who brought to light a series of the most important laws on biology. From the fact that conclusions on biological contention had been drawn by a politician we can see to what extent politics and learning were mixed up at that time.

The year 1956 was worth recollecting and commemorating. In that year the CPC Central Committee put forward the double hundred policy in order to vigorously develop science and to bring about a flourishing art. If we compare the double hundred policy of 3 decades ago with the reform of the economic structure today, we shall notice some important similarities: They are reforms aimed at instilling vitality in the relevant systems. There are also similarities between the patterns of the two reforms: The "microscopic" principle of the policy of letting a hundred schools of thought contend is to separate politics from learning and to call on the party not to draw conclusions on academic issues; and its "macroscopic" principle is to create a relaxed environment and atmosphere and to call on leading organs at all levels and on scientific and technological circles ot observe the double hundred policy, to convince people by reasoning, and to learn from each other.

2. I would like to probe into the causes for the oversimplified, crude, and even uncivilized methods that have been adopted toward science and the obstructions in implementing the double hundred policy.

In the early 1950's, the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee repeatedly received emergency calls from agricultural scientists: The experimental plot for the distant hybridization of wheat and rye conducted by Bao Wenkui, a research fellow of the Sichuan Provincial Research Institute of Agricultural Science, was abolished in a crude way; Professor Wu Shaokui of Henan Agriculture College was prohibited from experimenting on the hybrid corn seeds he had brought back from the United States; Professor Lin Kongxiang of South China Agriculture College was ciriticized for holding views different from those of Soviet experts on the cause of citrus yellows. Young people today will probably be unable to believe these things. However, they were all true and by no means the only cases.

Today, how do we explain the phenomena which happened at that time and afterwards? In my view, we can look at them this way: 1) The most direct and superficial reason was that, in the course of exclusively learning from the Soviet Union, we also accepted erroneous things. The practice of raising academic issues to the high plane of political ones emerged in the Soviet Union 5 decades ago. At a meeting in 1935, Lysenko said: "The task of old science was to help the bourgeoisie, kulaks, and all exploiters, while our science serves the construction of collective farms....Kulak saboteurs not only exist in collective farms but also in scientific circles and so do their harmfulness and destructiveness....A class enemy is always a class enemy, whether he is a scientist or not." By reviewing this history we cannot only understand why those things happened in our genetic and biological circles in the early period of the People's Republic but also the cause for the many more extreme measures adopted during the "Great Cultural Revolution."

However, the obvious external influence is superficial. When the environment changes, the external influence will gradually disappear due to the loss of support.

2) A slightly deeper and direct cause is underdevelopment. An underdeveloped culture and economy have led to our unability to distinguish right from wrong and have made it easy for us to be duped or to oversimplify things. Underdevelopment is the overall situation of a society. For this reason, it is difficult for even outstanding elements in society to distinguish right from wrong and to avoid oversimplifying things and being duped. Underdevelopment is our weak point. It is quite difficult to eliminate this factor. However, after several decades of hard work, China will eventually flourish.

3) A deeper cause is China's special cultural tradition. With the exception of the Spring and Autumn Period and the Warring States Period, in which academic ideas were fairly lively, the Confucian school has exercised absolute power for the past 2,000 the habit of concentrating on one thing only, of attaching importance accustomed to diversification, to personal ability and creativity, an unfavorable environment and soil for the implementation of the double hundred policy. With the progress of economic reforms, the social mentally will also change. However, the cultural tradition of a nation changes fairly slowly.

Reviewing the events in the past 3 decades, we should be gratified at the excellent situation today and the great changes that have taken place. At the same time, we should also fully appreciate the difficulties in implementing the double hundred policy. As a reform, the double hundred policy will certinly meet with obstructions and even reversals in its implementation. We should be ideologically more prepared and foster more practical expectations for the policy. We should gain these understandings after 3 decades of practice.

"The Desire to Seek Truth and Beauty Is Above Everything Else -- by Yan Jaiqi

For scholars and theoretical workers engaged in academic research, the implementation of the double hundred policy means ensuring their freedom in the academic field. Freedom in the academic field is note only an important condition for the development of science, but also a target treasured by all scholars who are in pursuit of truth. All people engaged in academic research hope that they can air their views freely and straightforwardly, that there is an environment for seeking truth and holding firmly to truth without being persecuted and an environment for them to work for the prosperity and development of China's science and culture, and that a number of great scientists and literary giants may emerge and be brought up in our great motherland. For many years past, our academic and theoretical circles we indignant at the phenomenon of using power to support a certain viewpoint while suppressing another. If we believe that through the people's free discussions, erroneous views will be unable to exist for long; if we believe that through free discussions, people will be able to correct their erroneous views and opinions, and if our newspapers and magazines can encourage free contention of diferrent academic views and allow free criticism and counter-criticism without any authoritative interference, all this will not only be extremely helpful to the development of China's science and culture, but will also be extremely helpful to establishing the socialist political system with a high degree of democracy, which is not only a political question but also an academic question.

Without free and full development in the academic field, we cannot even begin to talk about the research and exploration of a high degree of democracy in the political field, not to mention the real practice of building a high degree of democracy.

Einstein, the famous scientist, once said: "The development of science, as well as the development of general creative mental activities" need both "external freedom," "that is, no one should be endangered or injured due to airing his views and propositions on general or specific scientific questions," and "internal freedom," "or mental freedom, which means that one should free his mind from the restriction of any authority and social prejudice or any conventions and habits that run counter to ordinary philosophic theories."

The prosperity of China's science and culture is not only determined by the "external freedom" we have created, but also the "internal freedom" of tens of thousands of our intellectuals and mental laborers. All creations, discoveries, innovations, and progresses originated from the people's minds, which are active in practice, and in the "internal freedom". Without "internal freedom," there would be no great scientific and technological achievements today, nor would there have been great thinkers and writers such as Shakespeare, Voltaire, Tolstoy, Beethoven, Marx, and Lu Xun.

In science, we need to make our choice through practice in the ocean of thinking in order to seek truth, in art, we need to make our choice through practice in the ocean of images in order to seek beauty. Without the freedom of choice, there would be no creation. If we agree that "academic freedom" is based on the principle that the desire to seek truth is above everything else, we should also agree that in art, "freedom of creation" is based on the principle that the desire to seek truth and beauty is above everything else. Only on this basis can science and art be developed and human civilization be continuously promoted. Today, in the 1980's, if we are still making our choices just from safe words and phrases in order to protect ourselves from any possible political attacks and injuries, rather than making our choices in order to seek truth and beauty. If we are still choosing certain words and phrases from marx and Lenin in order to avoid being criticized or merely for the purpose of enhancing the authority of our own opinions, this kind of choice will never bring about any creation. It is by no means an expression of "academic freedom" or "freedom of creation."

"The Double Hundred Principle Is a Basic National Policy" --by Huang Mei.

The flourishng literary and artistic creation, the vigorous situation in the theoretical field, and the many talented who have come forward since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee have been unprecedented. Compared with the "Cultural Revolution" period, facts have evidently proved that the double hundred principle is the sole, correct principle for promoting the prosperity of China's socialist literature and art. As Comrade Mao Zedong pointed out: The double hundred principle will be conducive to the consolidation of the state and the development of culture.

Viewed from the situation on the literature and art front, the theories of literature and art became rigid and various forbidden zones took shape due to the influence of the "leftist" ideas and "taking class struggle as the key link" which resulted in the strangling of the double hundred principle.

In order to depict life, our literature and art should reveal the complicated problems in life. A creative work on a historical or modern topic that merely takes class struggle as the key link actually negates the complex nature of contradiction and conceals many problems. Consequently, it makes the themes monotonous or formularizes and generalizes the literature works. This runs counter to the law of life and art.

If a writer cannot depict real life and reveal the various problems in life and if he does not have freedom to select a theme or topic, it means that he does not truly have creative freedom of creation. If that is the case, letting a hundred flowers blossom and free competition of forms and styles would be out of the question.

In recent years, controversial works such as "The Legend of Tianyun Mountain," "Man at Middle Age," Heavy Wings," "Wreaths at the Foot of the Mountain," and "New Star" are actually the works well received by the masses. This shows that writers should have the courage to face reality, acquire a correct understanding of the new problems they are facing, seek answers through exploration, and forge ahead on the basis of summing up historical experience. The new and wide-ranging themes and the true, touching figures depicted in these works manifest the talent of our writers and the new breakthroughs made in forms and styles. The practice of our writers has promoted the development of Marxist aesthetics and put forward new topics for further study and exploration for the theory of literature and art. Thanks to the extensive horizontal ties established among literature and art circles, the major historical changes that have taken place in reform and the building of the four modernizations, the development of the economic situation, the changes in people's thinking, psychology, ideas, and life-styles, and the progress of science and culture, the theoretical workers of literature and art should study politics, economics, sociology, natural science, psychology, and ethics and observe the changes and development in current literature and art. This is another aspect which our literary and artistic theory seldom approached in the past and which must be further developed. For this reason, while conducting academic discussions on the theory of literature and art, we cannot separate academic problems from political ones. Lu Xun said: "Without the pathbreakers who dare to break with all traditional ideas and methods, it would be impossible for China to have genuinely new literature and art." Now it seems that such a new era is approaching. A number of pathbreakers have emerged. Naturally, the process of breaking a new path is a process of exploration and blazing new trails. Therefore, mistakes are unavoidable and we should not demand successes on every occasion without any failure.

Under the excellent situation today, we should review our history and find out why we fail to appropriately implement the double hundred principle. Furthermore, we must develop the double hundred principle in light of the new situation and realize that it is the sole, correct principle for building socialist literature and art with Chinese characteristics and that it is a basic, long-term strategic principle and a basic national policy.

If we fail to uphold the double hundred principle, it would be impossible to have genuine freedom of creation and comment, to adhere to the socialist orientation, and to uphold and develop Marxism and Mao Zedong Thought on literature and art.

We should inherit and develop the fine cultural heritage of the Chinese nation and also open up to the outside world to draw on all the useful experience of other countries. It is necessary to further emancipate minds, realistically carry out theoretical research work, promote the prosperity of literary creation, and depict the great struggles of real life. We should create a relaxed, harmonious, and united atmosphere of mutual trust so that the leading cadres in charge of literature and art and writers and artists can freely and equally discuss questions of theory and creation. Only in this way can we develop a high degree of artistic and political democracy.

In the past, whenever the double hundred principle was mentioned, some people would try by every means to combat bourgeois liberalization; when there were dissenting views on theoretical and academic problems, consclusions would be made hastily and "mass criticism" would be launched; and when mistakes were made in exploration and blazing new trails, the work would simply be negated. As a result, the influence of "leftist" ideas obstructed the implementation of the double hundred principle. Such a state of affairs must be changed.

I fully agree with the views of some comrades: The double hundred principle should be clearly defined as a basic national policy. So long as literary and artistic creation and theories do not run counter to the constitution, the laws, and the four basic principles, they should be protected. The double hundred principle should be legalized and institutionalized. Laws concerning literature and art should also be made in light of the double hundred principle.

"It is Necessary To Implement the 'Double Hundred' Policy in Military Academic Studies" — by Jiang Siy

Implementing the policy of letting a hundred schools of thought contend is the only way for science to progress, and military science and military academic studies are no exceptions.

We are now in the new period of modernizing our national defense and the modernization of our army can only be achieved through reform. A victorious Army should not allow its past successful experiences to become a hinderance to the development of its military build-up in the face of potential threats of war. Our Army must be reformed and must modernize its military equipment, undergo reorganization and train modern military personnel, but what is most important is that we must try to modernize our military thinking, including working out a correct strategy for the development of national defense and devising solutions to the problem of halting aggressive wars. In short, we must take flourishing of military science as our guide to reforming the army and modernizing national defense.

It is obvious that such arduous tasks of academic studies cannot be fulfilled by a small number of people. To fulfill them, we must pool the wisdom of the masses and implement the policy of letting a hundred schools of thought contend. The study of military science should be conducted by leading cadres, professionals, battle veterans, and servicemen, but it can also be conducted by ordinary cadres, non-professionals, those who have not engaged in battles, and comrades working in the localities. If military academic studies are not controlled by a particular school of thought of certain authoritative persons but are conducted in accordance with the principle of letting a hundred schools of thought contend, they will certainly make greater progress.

Military academic studies must be conducted in an atmosphere of democracy and we must ensure that everyone is equal before academic problems. Position and administrative power cannot be equated with knowledge and the truth. Rigid control, excessive demands, everyone speaking with one voice, or everyone in subdued silence — all these are by no means a gratifying phenomena. Comrade Ye Jianying once said: The PLA Academy of Military Science is in fact an organ of hot debate. We must encourage people to enter into debate and uphold the truth. Contention over academic problems is in no way class struggle.

We must take a scientific attitude toward scientific research and a scientific attitude means a realistic attitude. We must have the courage to size up the new situation, identify new problems and look into new conclusions which are suited to objective reality. In conducting scientific research, if we know only how to copy classical works and imitate what leaders say, then we can only write something "which is irrefutable but also useless." We must organically combine the study of history with the study of the realities of the day and anticipation of the future. If we pay attention only to looking into the orbit of historical development and pay no attention to the study of the realities of the day and anticipation of the future, the result of our studies will not be helpful to reform. Leaders at various levels should create conditions for conducting academic research and seeking truth in a realistic way. This provides a most important guarantee for making military science flourish.

In ancient China, there were different schools of military thought. Books on the art of war like "Military Strategy and Tactics of Sun Zi" were all the result of letting a hundred schools of thought contend. "Problems of Strategy in China's Revolutionary War," "On Protracted War" and other famous military works by Comrade Mao Zedong all came into being in the course of debates among different points of view. At a time when we are launching the all-round reform, if we further implement the "double hundred" policy under the leadership of the CPC Central Committee and its Military Commission, our military science will certainly flourish and develop vigorously.

"Willing To Work Hard To Make Social Science Flourish" — by Ma Ding

The growth of young theoreticians needs some internal and external conditions. As far as the internal conditions are concerned, young theoreticians must be equipped with solid basic knowledge and scientific methodology, make long-term arduous exploration and independent reflection and studies, and show the courage to voice new theoretical ideas and the pioneering spirit to blaze new trails. As far as the external conditions are concerned, the growth of young theoreticians needs a harmonious atmosphere, and a more lively and relaxed environment regarding public opinion. In the course of theoretical study and exploration, young theoreticians will certainly encounter one problem or another and display many shortcomings and deficiencies. These are normal phenomena inevitable in the process of cognition which are nothing to be surprised at, and nobody should capitalize on young theoreticians' vulnerable points, bludgeon them, or blacklist them. History has told us that intervention in academic debates by administrative means and handling of these issues by organizational measures are unfavorable to the flourishing and development of science and, in particular, to the growth of young people.

As a young theoretician, I have several wishes: First, the policy of letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of though contend should be adopted as a long-term basic policy but not a short-term, temporary, and discontinuous expedient measure. To fulfill this aim, it is necessary to put socialist democracy and socialist legal system on a sound basis, fix the socialist freedom of creation, research, academic activities, and speech as a part of the legal system, and provide full legal guarantee of these rights. Second, it is necessary to ensure genuine equality in the academic field. Nobody enjoys privilege in academic criticism and discussion. Everybody is equal in academic debates, just as everybody is equal before truth. Third, it is necessary to practice freedom of academic activities on the basis of quality in the academic field. Freedom of academic activities should not be reduced to an empty phraseology but should provide the following specific freedoms: theoreticians enjoy the freedom of independent thinking, the freedom to participate in debate, the freedom of creation and criticism, and the freedom to express and hold to their views and to have reservations.

Fully 30 years have passed since the double hundred policy was first put forth. There were twists and turns in the course of implementation of the double hundred policy and we have suffered from bitter experience. However, society is always forging ahead and history keeps on developing. Today, the commemoration of the advancement of the double hundred policy in itself indicates great historical progress. I would like to join our seniors in working hard to implement the double hundred policy and to make social science flourish.

RENMIN RIBAO ON RECTIFYING POLICEMEN'S WORK STYLE

[Commentator's article: "Firmly Establish the Viewpoint That 'I Maintain Public Order for the People'"]

[Text] Strictly managing the police force and maintaining a good work style in the Public Security Department constitutes an important part of political work in grass-roots public security departments. This is of great significance in raising the quality of the public security departments, and forming close relations between the police and the people. The central leadership and the general public are deeply concerned with this matter, so party and government leaders at all levels and the public security departments should pay close attention to the matter and should seriously handle this issue.

The public security departments shoulder the important responsibility for maintaining social order, work order, and production order. In the course of performing this glorious task, public security cadres and policemen at the grass-roots level have to come into contact with ordinary people every day. Because public security cadres and policemen have power and weapons in their hands, the masses generally do not treat them as ordinary people. The words and deeds of public security cadres and policemen have direct bearing on the prestige of the party and the government. In recent years, through the implementation of the principle for strictly managing the police force and through education in ideals trade ethics, and discipline among the public security cadres and policemen, the mental attitude of the vast number of public security cadres and policemen has greatly improved.

They handle cases and treat people in a civil manner, and many good cadres and policemen who serve the people wholeheartedly and step forward bravely when facing dangers and difficulties have emerged. They have left a good image among the people.

However, we should also notice that there are all kinds of unhealthy tendencies and decadent capitalist and feudalist ideas in society, which will certainly corrode our public security cadres and policemen and adversely influence their work style. For example, some policemen do not strictly abide by discipline and maintain the required standards of appearance and bearing; some policemen do not have the idea of serving the people and treat people rudely; some people are keen on seeking privileges and selfish gain by using their power and official functions; and some people have even violated laws and committed crimes. All these bad phenomena have inevitably influenced the prestige of the public security departments among the masses. This thus requires us to strengthen the political work in the public security departments. We should first straighten out the party style and police work style among leading cadres and in leading organs. Leading cadres should set a good example and should also dare to stop the bad phenomena among subordinate personnel. The grass-roots public security departments must seriously and effectively straighten out the work style of and enforce discipline among their personnel.

In order to strengthen the political work among the grass-roots public security personnel, we should always grasp the central link of conducting ideological and political education among them so as to bring the thinking of public security cadres and policemen into line with the fulfillment of the party's general task and general objective. It is necessary to conduct constant education in ideals and discipline. We should constantly educate the policemen in the purpose, ethics, duties, and discipline of the people's police force, and should also educate them on policy and handling situations. All policemen should clearly understand that the people's police force is the state's armed administrative force, so they must prudently exercise their power given by the party and the state in the course of performing their functions for the people's democratic dictatorship. The public security personnel must have a high sense of responsibility, strictly abide by discipline, and serve the people wholeheartedly. They should establish the viewpoint that "I maintain public order for the people," and overcome the idea of seeking privileges as the overlords of the people. They should realize that their primary duty is to protect the legitimate rights and interests of the people from being infringed upon. Grass-roots public security cadres and policemen must be able to do mass work and must take root among the masses. Facts show that only by relying on the masses can we have combat effectiveness. In the localities where the police have good relations with the masses, public order is also good. If our public security cadres and policemen form close ties with local people, they will enjoy high prestige among the people and the people will warmly support their work, then social order will be effectively guaranteed.

MA BI ARTICLE PRAISES CPC ACHIEVEMENTS

[Report: "Late Ma Bi Claims That CPC Has Reached Beyond the Three People's Principles, Marches Toward Socialism" — ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Beijing, 17 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) — Mr Ma Bi, a late member of the NPC Standing Committee, said in an article he wrote before his death that the mainland not only has completely realized the three people's principles, but has also gone beyond these principles and begun to advance toward socialism.

Mr Ma Bi returned from Taiwan on 3 November 1981 and settled down in Beijing. He died of illness in Changsha on 8 October 1985. After returning to the mainland, Mr Ma Bi visited many places around the country and inspected the political and economic situation on the mainland. He was deeply impressed by what he saw and heard, and wrote an article in December 1982 entitled "the CPC has surpassed the scope of the three people's principles and is advancing toward socialism." This article was published recently in RENMIN ZHENGXIE BAO.

In his article, Ma Bi said: In the past 50 years and more, I devoted most of my time to studying Dr Sun Yat-sen's thought. Now, I find that Dr Sun's cause of revolution and construction on the basis of the three people's principles has been first fulfilled on the mainland. In fact, the mainland has surpassed the scope of the three people's principles and is advancing toward socialism.

Ma Bi's article briefly describes the development of the three people's principles. He wrote: In the years before and after Dr Sun's death, the obstacles to the implementation of the three people's principles remained in the old China, and these obstacles had to be removed by some violent means. In those years, the national state that Dr Sun strived to build was still an ideal. Dr Sun led the revolution to found the Republic of China, but the Republic existed merely in name. The social state that Dr Sun strove to build was still far from becoming a reality. That is, in those years, no thorough revolution and construction had yet been carried out in China.

It was fortunate that Dr Sun laid down the three major policies of "allying with the Soviet Union, allying with the Communist Party. and supporting workers and peasants" before he died. This added new content to the three people's principles and formed the new three people's principles. In its first 30 years and more, the CPC fulfilled Dr Sun's revolutionary cause of destroying the old China and accomplished the process of the new democratic revolution. In this process, the big mountain of imperialism, an obstacle to the principle of nationalism, was removed; the big mountain of feudalism, an obstacle to the principle of the people's rights, was removed; and the big mountain of bureaufractic capitalism, an obstacle to the principle of the people's livelihood, was also removed. The removal of these three big mountains paved the way to the revolutionary construction process of the three people's principles.

The new democratic revolution continued after the founding of the PRC, and capital construction of the three people's principles was carried out into a new stage. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the focus of the revolutionary cause has been shifted to socialist construction. In recent years, not only have the three people's principles been fully implemented, but they have also been surpassed. The mainland of China is now advancing toward socialism.

Ma Bi's article finally says: In general, modern socialist culture in China has surpassed the scope of nationalist culture; socialist politics has surpassed the scope of politics based on the principle of the people's rights; and the socialist economy has surpassed the scope of the economy based on the principle of the people's livelihood. All this fully shows that the Chinese mainland under the leadership of the CPC has surpassed the stage of the three people's principles in all fields and is advancing toward socialism.

VISA FORMALITIES FOR SOME FOREIGNERS EASED

[Dispatch by reporter Zhang Zhiye: "China's New Entry, Exit Law Helps the Open Policy"]

[Text] An official of the Ministry of Public Security told this reporter that on-the-spot visas issued at Chinese ports of entry are apparently advantageous to China's open policy. Only a limited number of working personnel in China are assigned to issue on-the-spot visas at the ports of entry. The official said that foreign visitors who have obtained entry visas at the designated Chinese entry ports account for only 1 to 5 percent of the total. Visas are generally issued by Chinese embassies abroad. Easing visa formalities at entry ports is only a supplementary arrangement to assist a limited number of travellers on urgent economic or scientific business in China. Such travellers must possess passports and invitations from Chinese units.

According to the new management law on border entry and exit, permanent resident permits will be given to those who have invested in China or otherwise contributed to the country. The West German Werner Gerich has become the first to receive such treatment for his work as director of the Wuhan Diesel Engine Factory. He has been well received by the Chinese people for his outstanding work. The local authorities held a special ceremony granting him a permanent resident permit. The permit is considered a special honor in China.

In more than 4 months since the law was announced, the official said, the implementation has been satisfactory in general. However, trouble had occurred due to lack of knowledge of relevant regulations by a small number of foreign visitors. According to the new law, for instance, those leaving the country need not go through exit formalities if their documents, including passports, still hold good. In addition, they must had over their temporary resident certificates to frontier inspection stations. The lack of knowledge of the new law by some foreign visitors has led to unnecessary misunderstanding. With a deeper understanding of China's laws acquired by foreign visitors, the official said, the problems will gradually decrease and their journeys will be easier.

Regarding the question of applications for exit by Chinese citizens, the official said, the relevant regulations are being implemented. The "difficulties in getting exit permits" in the past have been solved basically. In order to lift the restrictions on applications for exit by Chinese citizens, greater authority has been granted to lower-level units to approve exit applications. Furthermore, regulations on refusal of applications have been clearly specified. Any refusal of an application now has to be submitted to public security bodies at provincial level or above for further examination.

To date, the official said, only one percent of the applicant's have been refused permission to leave the country. According to the law, applicants may appeal to the higher authorities if their applications are refused. Since the publication of the law, there has been no appeals against refusal.

But the official admitted that the state still exerted strict control over applications for exit to Hong Kong and Macao, saying it is because of considerations for the maintenance of stability and prosperity in the areas. Obviously, this is understandable.

The official said that the state is now drafting detailed rules and regulations for the better implementation of the law concerning entry and exit.

CENTRAL MILITARY COMMISSION TO REFORM ACADEMIES

OW192335 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0740 GMT 19 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 19 Jun (XINHUA) — The military academies in China are undergoing reform in an overall manner so as to meet needs by providing competent military personnel for the new period.

A policy decision made by the Central Military commission pointed out: In carrying out educational reform in military academies, we must pay attention to our goal of modernizing our national defense and catering to the needs of the world and the future.

In building a military educational system, the decision stressed the following six requirements:

1. Readjust the level of training for commanding officers. Junior military schools will concentrate on basic military, political, and cultural education with an eye toward training platoon commanders. Intermediate academies will carry out specialized training for regimental-level officers. Comprehensive military education will be given to senior officers at the most advanced academies.

2. Improve the system of training specialized technical officers and place emphasis on training qualified personnel with polytechnic school or college-level education.

3. Run, on a trial basis, a group of comprehensive academies where officers can study military and political sciences, logistics, management, and technique at the same time and where officers will be helped to enhance their ability to adapt themselves to new assignments.

4. Steadily develop graduate programs.

5. Gradually improve the system of continuing education for officers.

6. Make preparations to establish various organs for the training of sergeants in a planned manner.

The decision pointed out: To improve officers' political qualities is the most important task of the military academies. All military academies must ensure that the students have the spirit of dedicating themselves to the cause of national defense, and regard this spirit as a criteria in determining whether the students are competent and qualified or not.

The decision also called on military academies to open their academies to the outside. It said: Coordination must be carried out among the military academies and the local institutions of higher learning. Those academies approved by the Central Military Commission to open to the outside world may establish friendly relations and ties with military academies abroad.

PROPER PLACEMENT OF TRANSFERRED SOLDIERS URGED

[Commentator's article: "Do a Good Job in Placing Demobilized Army Cadres"]

[Text] In June last year, our government decided to trim Armed Forces by one million and to fulfill the task of undergoing structural reform and reduction-in-strength reorganization within 2 to 3 years. Thanks to the profound concern of the CPC Central Committee, the State Council, and the Central Military Commission, with the concerted efforts of the Army and the localities, the work of transferring the first group of military cadres to civilian jobs has been completed. The recent national meeting of representatives of units advanced in resettling Army cadres transferred to civilian work and advanced individuals from among the transferred cadres summed up experiences and commended the advanced in this aspect of work. This will be of great significance in expediting the work of placing Army cadres transferred to civilian jobs and encouraging vast numbers of transferred Army cadres to make great contributions to the four modernizations.

The People's Army is charged with the glorious mission of defending the motherland and safeguarding the four modernizations. In order to fulfill the task, a large number of Army cadres have fought for more than 10 years or even several decades, dedicating their valuable youth to national defense of the motherland. In implementing the Army structural reform, streamlining, and reorganization, they valued the overall interest of the country and the interests of the party and the people above everything else, and were voluntarily transferred to civilian work in order to meet the needs of the state. In the border areas of the interior of our country as well as in the grass roots units or leading organs, they all studied assiduously and worked hard by developing the glorious tradition of the People's Army, thus playing an important role in the building of the two civilizations.

Having steeled themselves in the large school of our Army, these Army cadres who transferred to civilian work are the valuable wealth of our party and country. The CPC Committee and government at various levels have an unshirkable duty of "taking care of them with enthusiasm, properly resettling them and assigning appropriate jobs for them, organizing job training programs for them, and making good use of them.

In accordance with instructions by Comrade Deng Xiaoping, over the past few years, local governments and departments in charge of placing transferred Army cadres have not only made tremendous efforts to resettle Army cadres transferred to civilian work, they have also trained them through different channels and in varied forms such as organizing special training courses for them and sending them to universities and colleges for training so as to enable them to adapt themselves to civilian work as quickly as possible. Shifting the focus of the work of transferring Army cadres to civilian work from a simple take-over and resettlement to professional training, and changing the process of resettlement and job assignment into a process of training and sending more qualified personnel to work on the four modernizations are new experiences created in our work of transferring Army cadres to civilian jobs in order to meet the needs of the four modernizations. Many local authorities insist on training them before they are assigned to new jobs and train them in light of jobs assigned to them. They combine training with an assessment of their proficiency and with assignment of new work and make it as a regular practice and system.

This year is the second year of streamlining and reorganizing the army. The number of Army cadres transferred to civilian work will be larger than before and the work of resettling them will be much more heavy. For this reason, all localities should take effective measures to do a good job of the work. After Army cadres are transferred to civilian work, their working conditions will change greatly. In accordance with the instructions by the State Council and the Central Military Commission, departments in charge of placing transferred Army cadres should take good care of them politically and in work, give due consideration to their demands and wishes, and do every thing possible to assign them to the places where they wish to go and work. At the same time, we must do painstaking ideological political work in an effort to imbue them with the idea of being ready to work both at the top or at the grass roots and being ready to be an official or one of the common people, and to encourage them to go to the places where they are badly needed to make new contributions for socialist construction.

After Army cadres are transferred to civilian work, they will certainly come across numerous difficulties in life such as housing, settlement of families and transfer of their children to other schools. The departments concerned should look at everything from their perspective and help them solve problems by every possible means. Under the present conditions of continued strains on housing, we must give appropriate preferential treatment to them so that they will feel the warmth of living at the grass roots.

Resettling Army cadres transferred to civilian work is an important political task, and it has a direct bearing on the implementation of the strategic policy decision on streamlining and reorganizing our Army. Therefore, the CPC committees and governments at various levels should attach primary importance to it and strengthen leadership over it. The departments concerned in the localities should offer strong support and close cooperation so as to succesfully fulfill the glorious task set by the CPC Central Committee and the State Council.

SATELLITE COMMUNICATIONS NETWORK COMPLETED

[Text] Beijing, June 19 (XINHUA) -- China has completed construction of its satellite communications network, a spokesman for the Ministry of Posts and Telecommunications announced at a press conference here today.

Formed by five ground stations, the network has gone into trial operation and will be put in service officially early next month.

Construction started in late 1984, the ground stations are located in Beijing, Urumqi, Hohhot, Ihasa and Guangzhou. They are connected with the long-distance telephone offices by signal relaying and switching facilities. China launched its first experimental communications satellite April 8, 1984, and the second telecommunications and broadcasting satellite February 3 this year.

HONG KONG XINHUA DIRECTOR SCRAPS PLANS FOR EUROPE TRIP

HK200607 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 20 Jun 86 p 2

[By David Wong]

[Text] China's chief representative in Hong Kong, Mr Xu Jiatun, has shelved plans to visit six European countries to study their capitalist systems. The trip was to enable him to get a better understanding of how their economies operate in a capitalist environment and would have provided China with valuable guidance in implementing the basic policies listed in the Sino-British Joint Declaration on Hong Kong.

The basic policy of guaranteeing "no change" to the present system here for 50 years after the transfer of sovereignty in 1997, revolves around an innovative idea of "one country, two systems." This hinges on an assumption that capitalism and socialism can coexist peacefully.

Sources told the STANDARD that Mr Xu had planned to embark on his study mission in May, accompanied by one of his close aides, Mr Ji Shaoxiang, head of the Foreign Affairs Department of XINHUA NEWS AGENCY. Mr Xu is now the director of the agency which is China's representative office here. Mr Ji was selected because he has worked in the Chinese Embassy in London and has long experience in Western European affairs.

According to the original plan, Mr Xu and Mr Ji were to go on a three-week tour of Britain, France, the Netherlands, West Germany, Switzerland and Italy. But the visit was not an official one as Mr Xu does not hold an official title of a Chinese Government ministry although his rank is equivalent to that of a government minister. It is understood the planned visit was basically a fact-finding mission.

Following his return from Beijing at the end of April after attending a meeting of the Basic Law Drafting Committee, Mr Xu became involved in a series of unexpected developments that prevented him from embarking on the trip.

Sources said Mr Xu had been one of the chief advisers in the talks that were held in Hong Kong with China Airlines over the return of the Boeing 747 cargo jet and crew after the pilot, Mr Wang Shi-chueh, defected to China when he flew the aircraft to Guangzhou on May 3.

Mr Xu will have a very heavy schedule in the months ahead as the drafting of the Basic Law has gathered momentum following the second meeting in Beijing and the formation of sub-groups to accelerate the pace of consultation and drafting work. "It is doubtful if the study trip will materialize in the foreseeable future," a source said.

Mr Xu was appointed director of the Hong Kong branch of the XINHUA NEWS AGENCY In 1983. Since the signing of the Sino-British Joint Declaration in 1984, Mr Xu has repeated, on a number of occasions, that capitalism and socialism can coexist peacefully. "Capitalism is an existing reality in certain parts of the world. It still has vitality in a certain historical period. This does not mean that there is only conflict and antagonism between capitalism and socialism. Under proper conditions, they can coexist peacefully," he said.

In short, Mr Xu emphasised that capitalism was not totally repulsive to socialism in some respects. "For instance, its advanced scientific technology and administrative expertise are something we should learn from," he said.

RESEARCH INSTITUTE EXPLORES PRC TRADE DEFICIT

[By Jan Altink]

[Text] China's trade deficit may grow even larger during the seventh five-year economic plan to 1990, unless the country manages to improve its export sector, according to the Hong Kong offshoot of Japan's Nomura Research Institute. In a paper entitled China's Foreign Trade -- A Review and Analysis of Its Key Factors, Normura Research International predicts that "the great domestic demand for imports, particularly related to the modernisation needs, versus the relatively uncertain export prospects, may translate into larger China trade deficits."

Efforts will have to be made in the domestic export sector, whicdh hads been the main offender in bringing China's deficit to a record US$7.61 billion as imports have surged in recent years since the liberalisation of the country's economy in 1978. These efforts will need to be persistent if Beijing is to deal with the growing trade imbalance.

Nomura suggests that China should consider boosting its services exports, such as tourism. Additional measures that will have to be implemented will include the need for an increase in its external borrowings and further bond issues.

Nomura expects China's gross domestic product to slow to an annual 7.5 per cent during the current economic plan from 10 per cent in the last plan.

Also, China's successful handling of its economy will depend on whether the utilisation of economic measures, such as exchange rates and tariffs, becomes more important than the use of administrative measures, such as the trade licensing system.

Turning in more detail to projections of China's imports, Nomura says "the composition of major items of imports will change substantially in the next five years." "Capital goods imports will be given priority over consumer goods, since China will demand a lot of raw and intermediate materials input in order to support its manufactured products, exports and import-substitution industry."

Steel will be one of the major items in demand. Official estimates put the country's consumption of raw steel at 100 million tonnes by 1990, whereas local production by then will only be 55-58 million tonnes. Thus imports of steel are expected to triple last year's level to 40 million tonnes in 1990.

Normura says China's burdensome foreign exchange problems, persisting because of the trade imbalance, will result in continued restraints on consumer imports.

However, China "should be careful that the restraint on consumer imports may lead to an inefficient domestic consumer goods industry, thus reducing the incentive to introduce new technology."

Normura also expects China to maintain the imports of feed grains due to low world prices. Moreoever the increase in intake of animal products in the general Chinese diet should lead to a growing domestic demand for animal products. However, imports are not expected to be high because China is able to maintain a "high comparative advantage in the food industry."

SHEKOU INDUSTRIAL ZONE FACES DECREASING INVESTMENTS

HK190319 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 19 Jun 86 BUSINESS STANDARD p 1

[By Eva To]

[Text] The Shekou Industrial Zone of China is facing a major setback in its development as a result of the country's brake on capital investment and new funding. No investment agreement has been signed for the zone so far this year and the zone's authority recently sent out three teams to woo overseas investors, apparently to correct this situation. This compares with more than 20 investment deals struck last year and a total of 209 investment contracts signed since the opening of the zone in 1979.

Situated in west of Shenzhen, the 10-square-km zone is developed by the state-owned China Merchants Steam Navigation Co (CMSN), a commercial arm of the Ministry of Communications of China. China Merchants Holdings Deputy General Manager Mr Wang Shi-zhen told BUSINESS STANDARD in Shekou yesterday that though no investment deals has been reached for Shekou so far for 1986, a number of negotiations are undergoing. He explained that this situation is largely a result of the "more prudent attitude" of the zone authority in conducting investment deals.

However, vice-chairman of the Shekou's administrative committee Mr Wang Jing-gui seems to be more open in admitting the trend of investment slowdown. Though more than 20 investment contracts were signed for 1985, he expects less than 10 to be struck for 1986. Mr Wang Jing-gui believes that Beijing's recent tightening policy on capital investment and credit squeeze have rendered it more difficult to obtain funding for new projects.

Other China watchers felt the country's new export control has made the processing of export-led investment applications a more complicated exercise, thus prolonging the time needed for approval.

In a bid to curb parallel trading, specific approval or "export licences" are required from the country's foreign trade authority for all existing and new export-oriented projects. From February 1986 onwards, the country's export control scheme further expanded to cover a total of 235 export items. Mr Wang Jing-gui said while approval for new projects used to take a month, it can now take as much as half a year.

Four special economic zones were set up in southern China in 1979 to attract foreign capital and technology by offering more favourable investment terms than those available in the rest of the country. Mr Wang Shi-zhen further said that three special teams were sent last month to US, Singapore and Japan, respectively, to talk to potential investors interested in Shekou -- as well as to get a general study of the latest technology development of these countries.

He added that US and Japan have been most responsive to these calls for investment, though no deal has yet been realised from these trips. He said the priority areas for foreign investment is electronics, building and food industries as well as back-up service for the south China oil fields.

Since 1979, a total of 209 investment contracts have been signed for Shekou, of which 109 were joint ventures with foreign investors. This stands for a total investment of US$2.4 billion, of which US$1.6 billion was from overseas. Sixty projects have started their production so far and 15 more is expected to follow suit within the year, Mr Wang Shi-zhen pointed out.

GUIZHOU PLANS TO COUNTER BACKWARDNESS, BAD IMAGE

HK200523 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 20 Jun 86 BUSINESS POST pp 1, 5

[Report by Olivia Sin, "Recently in Guizhou"]

[Text] China's southwest province in Guinzhou has ambitious plans to speed up its economy and to shed its image of backwardness. The cash-starved province will also adopt more aggressive tactics to attract foreign investment and advanced technology.

Under China's five-year plan ending in 1990, Guizhou's economy is projected to grow at a faster pace than the nation's average. The province's total industrial and agricultural output is expected to grow at an annual rate of eight per cent over the five years, compared with the target of 6.7 per cent for the country as a whole. Guizhou's gross domestic product is planned to increase by 8.6 per cent yearly, or 1.1 per cent higher than China's annual GDP growth, in the period. An annual increase of 15.3 per cent in the province's exports is envisaged, against the national average of 8.1 per cent.

Senior Guizhou officials said the higher growth rate is necessary to narrow the gap between the province and the more developed coastal areas. In a recent briefing to a group of Hong Kong reporters, the vice-governor of Guizhou, Mr Liu Yulin, admitted that the province is backward.

Only part of Guizhou was opened to foreign visitors in late 1982, and the lack of infrastructure has hindered the growth of tourism and businesses. Mr Liu had no illusions about the province's development, saying it will take years for it to catch up with China's advanced provinces. But he is confident Guizhou's wealth of mineral resources and abundant power supplies will compensate for its weaknesses. The province has more than 60 kinds of minerals and is the country's top producer of some of them. These include mercury, silica, coal, phosphorus, bauxite and antimony.

However, analysts said the low prices of some of these raw materials, for instance coal, will probably hamper investor's interest in the province for the time being.

Guizhou also has abundant hydroelectric power and is one of the few areas in China which has surplus electricity that it can supply to its neighbours.

But, like other inland provinces, Guizhou suffers from inadequate transportation, accommodation and telecommunications facilities. According to Mr Liu, a chronic shortage of funds and lack of trained technical personnel are the two major obstacles facing the province.

Since the central government has no plans to dramatically increase its investment in Guizhou, the province will need to rely on its own initiatives to raise funds for development. Mr Liu said it plans a drive to attract foreign investment and hopes to raise more funds through co-operation with other provinces.

Total fixed-asset investment in Guizhou's state-owned enterprises is expected for each 8.226 billion yuan (about HK$19.7 billion) over the next five years, an increase of 16.8 percent on the previous five years.

The figure is small compared with the 44 billion yuan investment planned in Guangdong over the same period, but one of the central planks of China's economic reform is to help advanced provinces build up their wealth and let this filter through to the backward areas later.

Beijing normally provides subsidies to backward provinces to improve their economies, with a sum of 800 million yuan going to Guizhou last year. But the figure is likely to decrease, according to Mr Liu, since the province has been asked to create its own wealth. "We had blood transfusions from the central government in the past, but we have to make our own blood from now on," he said.

To strengthen ties with foreign businessmen, Guizhou will stage its first export products fair in Hong Kong in August. A senior delegation of provincial officials will come to Hong Kong to hold talks with foreign businessmen on various projects, including mineral exploration, to tourism and food processing. The province will also open a trade representative office, Guida Co, in Hong Kong shortly.

Guizhou officials are attaching special importance to the trade fair, which they hope will bring the province more than US $20 million worth of orders.

Diesel engines are also manufactured in the province, and as a centre for the manufacture of military equipment, Guizhou possesses some of China's most advanced technology, including that used in the manufacture of defence aircraft.

However, the bulk of its industries are backward and inefficient.

In an attempt to train more skilled workers, Mr Liu said the province will raise its allowance to tertiary education institutes by 20 per cent a year from now on. The sum this year is 20 million yuan.

CHING PAO ON LITERATURE, ART FEDERATION REORGANIZATION

HK180747 Hong Kong CHING PAO in Chinese No 109, 10 Jun 86 pp 49-51

[Article by Mo Ming-chi -- "Zhongnanhai Orders Reorganization of the Literature and Art Federation" -- written at the Huaqiao Hotel, Beijing on 30 May 1986]

[Text] "More often than not, the valiants whom I admire are covered all over with bruises and nailed to the cross. However, when they descend from the cross, they can still run and charge everywhere as before like wounded, unyielding lions." "With four seasons in the year, the earth becomes beautiful. If there are four seasons on the earth, it must be so with man. Demanding that people be always beaming with smiles will distort the world of man." -- quoted from prose by Liu Zaifu.

Recently, the "Ma Ding incident" and the "Liu Zaifu incident" occurred on the mainland. Since then many CPC leaders of the higher echelons have, one after another, issued enlightened statements allowing contention in academic theoretical work. People can easily see from this move that the old forces, with the old-timer theoretical authority as the head of the former director of the Central Propaganda Department, who stopped at nothing to "eliminate pollution", as the backbone, have found themselves in an unsecure position.

CPC Orders Reorganization of the All-China Federation of Literature and Art Circles

According to authoritative sources, Zhongnahai recently ordered reorganization of the leading party committee of the All-China Federation of Literature and Art Circles, dismissed Zhao Xin from his post, and appointed middle-aged composer Wu Zhuqiang as secretary of the association's leading party committee, thus cleaning up the leading body of the All-China Federation of Literature and Art Circles, which has been long dominated by the "leftists" and riddled with numerous conflicts between different factions. According to the analysis of Beijing observers, the higher echelons of the CPC made this a decision with a view to making concerted efforts to pursue a more liberal policy in the ideological field.

What sort of a person is Wu Zhuqiang, who is 55 years old? He is the younger brother of Wu Zhuguang, "child prodigy" playwright of the older generation, president of the Central Conservatory of Music, and composer of the famous opera "Fish Beauty." Although Wu Zhuqiang was sent to Leningrad in the Soviet Union to study how to write music when he was young, he and most Chinese intellectuals still had a mutual affinity, rather than being muddled by eating delicious Russian black caviar. The general opinion of the Central Conservatory of Music shows that Wu Zhuqiang is a man of new ideas who enjoys a high reputation in his career. As everybody knows, Fu Cong, the outstanding pianist who "left his court," twice returned home and gave lectures and taught students in Beijing and Shanghai is directly related to President Wu's efforts and support.

What sort of a person is Zhao Xin? As a veteran underground party member and an activist of the "military play-performing team," he has a glorious page of history in the revolutionary struggles during the periods of the war of resistance against Japan and the war of liberation. However, from the end of the seventies, he closely followed the theoretical authority and the former director of the Central Propaganda Department.

In particular, during the upsurge of the "leftist" tide, he made a stormy sea stormier or fanned the flames of disorder for the purpose of pushing aside enlightened cultural workers and of "being draped with the imperial yellow robe by his supporters" in the All-China Federation of Literature and Art Circles, as people said. We leave aside his activities of "following the old track with new shoes" in the literature and art world and his participation in attacking Zhou Yang, Xian Yan, and Chen Huangmei.

In summer and autumn of last year, when the modern drama "Wm (We)" was covertly banned from being staged by the VIP's who had not discarded their "leftist" habits, because the secretariat of the Chinese Dramatists Association supported the trial performance by the Chinese dramatists and artists society, he put pressure on secretaries Zhang Ying (Zhou Enlai's long-time secretary and wife of Zhang Wenjin, former ambassador to the United States) and Wang Zheng (a dramatist who was labeled as "a rightist" and son of a revolutionary family) by every possible means, alleging that the latter violated discipline concerning foreign affairs by giving a press conference to foreign journalists" and threatening to expel him from the party.

In mid-May, a week before the dismissal of Zhao Xin was announced, at an enlarged meeting of the All-China Federation of Literature and Art Circles, Zhao still truculently said that investigation should be conducted to affix responsibility on the leading body of the dramatists association for the cause of "Wm (We)." (Zhao Xin was once "head" of the Chinese Dramatists Association and was later replaced by dramatist Liu Housheng.) At a meeting, poet Feng Mu openly exposed his evil practices of "playing underhand tricks" and urged him to repent and mend his ways. The current decision to dismiss Zhao Xin from his post taken by the policymakers of the CPC's higher echelons is indeed happy and welcome news to the cultural workers on the mainland.

There Will Gradually Be a "Relaxed" Environment in the Ideological Field

What merits more attention is that there will gradually be a "relaxed and harmonious" atmosphere on the mainland's ideological front. This is naturally closely related to the CPC's handling of the "Ma Ding incident" and the "Liu Ziafu incident." I would like to state the causality and interrelations of these two things.

It is strange to report that people in the cultural, education, and theoretical circles on the mainland spontaneously say: "Nanjing University is truly an institute of higher learning where people of talent have come forth in large numbers." They even say: Kuang Yaming, the old president of "Nanjing University," is a man of "boundless beneficence" who has trained many intellectuals, characterized by lively thinking, who dare to speak out and to break through. Why is the university, which is situated at the foot of Nanjing's Miming Temple, called a place where "people of talent have come forth in large numbers?" Apparently, this is related to the first opportunity for combat seized by his excellency Deng after he was reinstated in the summer of 1978, an opportunity to reverse the course of events, that is, "practice is the sole criterion for testing truth."

This topic was assigned by Hu Fuming, a young lecturer in Nanjing University's Philosophy Department. His excellency Deng cleverly added the word "sole" to the topic, which started the great change of bringing order out of chaos. This debate on the "criterion of truth," which was arranged by Deng Xiaoping and personally organized by Hu Yaobang, eventually led to the formulation of a realistic line and a series of liberal policies by the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. Six years have passed since then.

On 3 November last year, Ma Ding (the pseudonym of Song Longxiang) was the first to ask difficult questions when he published his article "Ten Major Changes in China's Study of Economics" in GONGREN RIBAO, openly advocating that "it is necessary to be bold in importing Western economic theories, including those of J. M. Keynes'." As luck would have it, he is also a young lecturer in Nanjing University's Philosophy Department. This young man, who dared to speak out and did not fear being labeled as "departing from the classics and rebeling against orthodoxy," explained in simple terms some policies and social phenomena (production and the market) which had appeared since China's economic reforms moved from the countryside to the cities. Just as in the early twenties, when Lenin implemented his new economic policies on a big scale in Soviet Russia, it cannot be denied that some capitalist economic factors exist in socialist China. Over the last 6 years, how many capitalist elements have actually emerged in the areas ranging from production to commodity exchange, ownership, economic management, and trading methods, and how many questions cannot be explained by the classical work "Das Kapital?" I am afraid these questions are difficult to answer.

Whether CPC leaders of the higher echelons or economists, all agree now that it is better to sum up experience after much practice and then to raise practical experience to the level of theory. Now that Mao Zedong's political economics has long landed the Chinese mainland in the quagmire of poverty and backwardness, why can his successors not categorically discard his "classical text of communism in poverty" and seek a way out? Moreover, there is not yet any fixed model for socialism in the world. The economy of the Soviet Union, which has won victory in its revolution for 69 years, is still developing in "a lopsided way." The cry for "change" has been heard everywhere in East European countries.

Why Does Zhongnanhai Protect Ma Ding?

The several rounds of debate, launched following the publication of Ma Ding's article, and the will of the peole have long shown that Hu Qiaomu's further performance of "brandishing his arrogance-deflating big stick" went against the trend of the times and run counter to the current situation of reform. One may well say that he showed no understanding of the times. In his instructions on a report, he regarded "the social trend of thought" represented by Ma Ding as a great crime and said that it was necessary to "criticize" it. He hardly realized that people with breadth of vision throughout the nation unanimously agreed that "Ma Ding's views" were of positive significance and that even if there were anything open to discussion in his views, contention and exploration should be allowed to be conducted on a really equal footing under the principle of academic freedom, and no VIP's should set the tune for launching any criticism against his views.

Hence, there appeared articles in JIEFANGJUN BAO (8 March), Shanghai's WEN HUI BAO (2 April), and in RENMIN RIBAO, "mouthpiece" of the CPC Central Committee, articles which resisted Hu Qiaomu-type criticisms and which were opposed to the practice of "intimidating people by abusing one's power." The fact that economist Yu Guangyuan and other economic workers and Premier Zhao Ziyang protected Ma Ding, and that General Secretary Hu Yaobang "agreed" with Premier Zhao about supporting free contention in academic (economic theoretical) matters also reflects the determination of the liberal-minded leaders at Zhongnanhai to resist rigidity in thinking and to safeguard the results of the reform.

Many persons with breadth of vision have pointed out: Judging from the debate sparked by the "Ma Ding incident" and Zhongnanhai's support of free exploration in the academic and theoretical world, the current academic and theoretical explorations will be another ideological emancipation following the discussion of the "criterion of truth," and its influence will be far-reaching.

Why Is the "One Magazine" Still Cherishing the Old Ways?

As for the speech delivered by Liu Zaifu at a session of the national CPPCC committee this spring (that is, "Eight Suggestions on Cultural Problems"), on the one hand, liberal-minded people in the cultural community unanimously acclaimed it, and on the other, some conservatives were furious at it. Of the same nature as the "Ma Ding incident," this incident is a reflection of the struggle between the reformers and counterreformers in the cultural sphere and also an engagement taking place in the CPC's higher echelons.

In his 15,000-character article published in HONGQI No 8, 1986, Chen Yong (a "leftist" theoretician and "a red little devil" who grew up in Yanan, and who was mistakenly labeled as a "rightist" in those years) criticized Liu Zaifu, a gifted young man in the literature and art circles, by name. This shocked the cultural world and made people in those circles terrified. Some people even mistakenly thought that Qu Benyu (the champion of the "Great Cultural Revolution" who was appreciated by Mao for making his name known throughout the nation by criticizing Wu Han and Luo Ergang), was revived in a new guise. However, this was not the first time the 45-year-old Liu Zaifu, director of the "Cultural Studies Institute of the Academy of Social Sciences," a specialist in Lu Xin studies, and a writer of prose, had been criticized by the great "leftist" masters as the leading exponent of "bourgeois liberalization."

Last year, when "purging" Wang Ruoshui and Wang Ruowang and directing the campaign against Liu Binyan, the theoretical authority and the former director of the central propaganda department suddenly found that a certain person was bent on propagating "bourgeois humanism" (of course, Deng Pufang's views on humanism are not included) and, moreover, this person was a newly appointed leading cadre who was a literature and art theoretician. Therefore, they once again wielded the magic wand of "combating bourgeois liberalization" and fiercely criticized Liu Zaifu. This time they put literature and art theoretician Chen Yong on the stage and used the party magazine HONGQI as the arena so as to build up a greater momentum of criticism.

It is strange to say that through repeated reorganization and transformation over the last few years since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, of the "two newspapers and one magazine" (that is, RENMIN RIBAO, JIEFANGJUN BAO, and HONGQI), so-called during the Great Cultural Revolution, the "two newspapers" have changed their guidelines concerning editorial work, gradually shifting their stand to the forefront of the struggle "against leftism," or at least they no longer pursue "leftist" absurdities. Only HONGQI failed to make progress after stalling for a long time. As the CPC Central Committee's theoretical magazine, apart from some party officials who read it, almost no intellectuals read this "authoritative" magazine. (At present it is hard to buy a copy of HONGQI at the numerous newspaper stalls on Beijing's streets. It can thus be seen that the people are no longer "interested" in it.)

While the "two newspapers" are making progress, why is the "one magazine" still cherishing the old ways? The reason behind this state of affairs is simple. The magazine has always been in the firm grip of the "powerful authority," and its number one man was the man of the hour during the "Great Cultural Revolution." Such being the case, it is not strange at all that some people wittily say: "HONGQI criticized Liu Zaifu using a 10,000-character-long article. This is an honor to Liu Zaifu."

Intellectuals Have Changed From Daring To Think to Daring To Debate

In fact, of Liu Zaifu's "eight suggestions", two are the most crucial. One is that a cultural atmosphere consonant with the "four modernizations" program (that is, a liberal phenomenon characterized by harmony, free exploration and discussion, no wielding of big sticks, and no blacklisting) should be created and, above all else, leaders should not be content to play the role of a "guard" or a "referee." The other is that there are numerous unhealthy practices in the cultural world, which are all encouraged or created by high-ranking cultural officials, such as that "a statement by an individual official means the final judgment on a literary work." These two suggestions are bound to enrage the high-ranking cultural officials and theoretical authorities who are used to making indiscreet remarks or criticisms everywhere and to easily flashing "the yellow card as a warning." As I see it, Liu Zaifu's remarks are mild and polite enough.

For quite some time in the past, some CPC high-ranking officials in charge of ideological departments have modeled themselves after Zhdanov, the famous hatchet man in the Soviet cultural community, and constantly defended traditional moral principles and upheld the law, and there is even a tendency of the pupil surpassing the master among them. The results of the "debates" and "mass criticisms" carried out over the last 36 to 37 years in the fields of literature and art, culture, and social scientific theory were eventually that the people concerned were either "branded with political labels," "sent to the countryside to do manual labor," "dismissed from their posts and dispelled from the party," or "put behind bars."

The instances of high-ranking cultural officials riding roughshod over the people are too many to mention individually. When thinking of these malpractices, people still feel bitterly depressed. Now they unexpectedly forbade Liu Zaifu to touch on past events already known to all. Does this not mean intending to practice cultural autocracy and the policy of keeping the people in ignorance once again?

However, times have changed and the will of the people has also significantly changed. The policy of opening up to the outside world has enabled people to widen their field of vision and his excellency Deng's "Theory on Practice" has heightened the courage of intellectuals to speak out and to debate, as well as daring to think. In this situation, not only does Chen Yong's big stick not work, but the VIP's behind him are also overshadowed. Since the last 10 days of April, Zhu Houze, the current director of the Central Propaganda Department, has made four speeches containing liberal views. Hu Qili, a vital, real power-holder, appreciated and protected Liu Zaifu. When speaking at a forum attended by writers and artists in Shanghai in April, he vigorously advocated that "it is necessary to create an atmosphere of unity, harmony, and mutual trust and understanding." All this indicates that the "double hundred" principle will be further implemented.

However, the intelligentsia in Beijing have novel and incisive views on how to genuinely implement the "double hundred" principle. RENMIN RIBAO carried Yu Haocheng's article entitled "The Double-Hundred Principle and Legal Guarantees" on 30 May. The article says: The double-hundred principle is, in reality, a principle designated to practice political democracy in the ideological and cultural spheres. The key to the smooth implementation of the double-hundred principle lies in developing socialist democracy and achieving real political democratization. If discussion is encouraged in settling academic issues but if political issues are still regarded as a forbidden zone, "democracy of a higher level" will mean engaging in theorizing. Does the party newspaper's publication of Yu's article indicate that political democratization will be gradually carried out? Let us wait and see.

HU YAOBANG COMMENTS ON PRC 'DISTRUST' OF USSR

[By Pierre-Antoine Donnet]

[Excerpts] Beijing, June 22 (AFP) -- China remains distrustful of the Soviet Union, holding that Moscow's actions do not match its words when it comes to normalization of relations, East European sources here said.

During a meeting early this month with the speaker of the Polish Parliament, Chinese Communist Party (CCP) chief Hu Yaobang spoke at length about Beijing's distrust of statements coming from Moscow purporting to favour normalisation of Sino-Soviet relations, the sources said. Mr Hu told Roman Malinowski during a two-hour meeting that despite Moscow's repeated calls for improvement in relations with Beijing, Soviet spy planes continued to gather information about China. "The Soviet Union talks a lot about improving and normalising relations with China but at the same time continues activities such as flying spy missions against China. Since the beginning of this year we have counted about thirty of them," Mr Hu was quoted as saying. The sources said that Mr Hu, who brought up the subject with his Polish guest, added: "The Soviet Union says one thing and does another."

Mr Malinoswki, who heads the Polish Peasants' Party allied to Poland's Communist Party, was here between June 5-13 leading the first Polish parliamentary delegation to China since 1949.

Throughout his tour of Britain, West Germany, France and Italy which ends Monday, Mr Hu has said that Sino-Soviet economic relations were developing rapidly, but that in the political sphere no substantial progress had been made.

Another Chinese official who met with Mr Malinowski urged Poland, despite its close ties to the Soviet Union, to put pressure on Vietnam to withdraw its troops from Cambodia. "China hopes that the Polish comrades will ask Vietnam to withdraw its troops from Cambodia," Ye Fei, vice-president of the National People's Congress, was quoted as saying. "Only then could relations improve between China and Vietnam," he added. "It is intolerable that a socialist country should commit an act of aggression against another socialist country. Cambodia is one example of this and our position is that the country must be governed by its own people," Mr Ye said.

Noting that China and Vietnam had been "like two brothers" in the 1950's and 1960's, Mr Ye said that relations between the two countries were now in "very regrettable" shape, a direct result of Hanoi's invasion of Cambodia in late 1978.

Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian has accepted an invitation to visit Poland next year, according to the sources who said he was likely to take the opportunity to also pay official visits to Bulgaria and Czechoslovakia. Mr Wu returned early this month from visits to East Germany and Hungary, the first visit to Soviet bloc countries by a Chinese diplomatic chief in a quarter of a century.

Alongside a gradual improvement in relations with Moscow, Beijing has begun to seek a rapprochement with Eastern bloc countries, and has said on several occasions that it is ready to establish party-to-party relations with Eastern Europe, exclusively the Soviet Union.

RENIMN RIBAO HAILS DPRK PROPOSAL ON TALKS

["Short Commentary" "Positive New Proposal"]

[Text] On 17 June, the DPRK People's Army Supreme Headquarters issued a press release proposing talks between North Korean, U.S., and South Korean military authorities in order to alleviate the tension on the Korean peninsula, to ease the confrontation, and to create favorable conditions for the peaceful reunification of Korea. This has been another positive move taken bythe DPRK since the beginning of this year with a view toward promoting the peaceful reunification of its motherland. This proposal has great positive significance for easing the military confrontation between the North and the South, for alleviating the tension on the Korean peninsula, for resuming the dialogue between the two sides, and for introducing a new, peaceful situation. The Chinese people completely endorse this proposal.

Since 1985, thanks to the unremitting efforts made by the DPRK and the responses made by South Korea, there have been several economic talks between the two sides, Red Cross talks, and preparatory talks for a joint session of their assemblies. The first exchange of visits between North and South Koreans and their relatives in the South and the North in the 41 years of the division of the country had brought about an encouraging situation on the Korean peninsula. It is regrettable that paying no heed to North Korean advice and warnings, the U.S. and South Korean authorities conducted a large-scale joint military exercise in February this year as scheduled, thus introducing an uneasy atmosphere on the Korean peninsula and leading to the suspension of the dialogue between the North and the South.

In its press release, the DPRK People's Army Supreme Headquarters points out that the tension on the Korean peninsula must be alleviated as quickly as possible and that "only by alleviating the military tension can the suspended dialogue be resumed under favorable circumstances." The purpose of the new DPRK proposal for trilateral talks between the military authorities is precisely to break the deadlock, to seek the reopening of the dialogue, and to seek an appropriate way to achieve peaceful reunification on the basis of mutual trust. North Korea indicates that so long as they are favorable to peace, all U.S. and South Korean proposals can be discussed. This once again shows that Northern Korea is sincere. Over the past few days, the new proposal put forward by North Korea has aroused international attention. People are looking forward to a positive U.S. and South Korea response to it.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON HU YAOBANG'S EUROPEAN TOUR

Briefs Craxi on Foreign Policy

OW201414 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0649 GMT 20 Jun 86

[By reporter Huang Changrui]

[Text] Rome, 19 Jun (XINHUA) -- Italian Prime Minister Craxi held a grand banquet tonight at Villa De Madama in honor of the visiting Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang.

Craxi spoke first, warmly welcoming Hu Yaobang's visit to Italy. He said: Hu Yaobang's visit "shows the importance of consultations between China and the European Community which serve to keep the world in balance." He said: "China is an important factor of great wisdom and moderation which plays an active role in reinforcing cooperation on an international scene fraught with tension and crises."

On bilateral relations, Craxi said: There is no dispute between Italy and China. On major international issues, especially those which concern peace, stability, and security, "there exists an encouraging convergence of their points of views." He pointed out: With the support of the two governments, trade between the two countries has greatly expanded in recent years. The cooperation between the two countries in the fields of science and technology is rapidly developing.

In his speech, Hu Yaobang reviewed the long history of friendly exchanges between the two peoples. He went on saying: "Sino-Italian trade in 1985 was already in the forefront in trade among various Western European countries. The two '3-Year Plans for Cooperation and Development' and the Plan for Technical and Scientific Coopeation between the two countries are being effectively implemented, cultural exchanges and contacts between civilians of the two countries are also on the increase. Your country has adopted an open-minded approach on technology transfers and a positive attitude in providing loans and grants and in setting up joint ventures. All this is farsighted and conducive to promoting common development. There is no conflict of fundamental interests, and there are no outstanding issues between Italy and China. They only have a common desire to continuously strengthen friendship and cooperation. There are broad prospects for Sino-Italian relations based on the principles of mutual respect, equality and mutual benefit."

On China's foreign policy, Hu Yaobang said: "to oppose hegemonism, safeguard world peace, develop friendship and cooperation with all other countries and promote common prosperity is the aim of our foreign policy. World peace is indivisible while the security of all nations is closely interrelated. As an Asian nation, China is concerned with peace and stability in Asia. At the same time, it is also concerned with peace and stability in Europe and the Mediterranean because they are vital to world peace."

He emphatically pointed out: "When it comes to those vital issues such as peace and development, all countries should have a say on the basis of equality no matter whether they are big or small, rich or poor, strong and weak. All of them should be able to make their own contribution. World affairs should not be left at the mercy of the superpowers. Now more and more nations are determined to grasp their destiny in their own hands and engaged in active moves to curb aggression and prevent war. This makes us believe that the cause of working for a lasting peace in the world is full of hope." At the end of his speech, Hu Yaobang said that he was eagerly looking forward to Prime Minister Craxi's third visit to China at an earlier date.

Chinese Vice Premier Li Peng, Vice Chairman Fei Xiaotong of the Chinese National CPPCC Committee, and Chinese Ambassador to Italy Du Gong attended the banquet on invitation. Also present at the banquet were Italian Minister Without Portfolio for Scientific and Technological Research Granelli; Minister of Tourism and Public Entertainment (Pandolfi); Minister of Rural Development Lagorio; and famous Italian singer Pavarotti who is scheduled to visit China soon.

[By reporters Yu Jiafu and Huang Changrui]

[Text] Rome, 21 Jun (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the CPC Central Committee, held talks with Alessandro Natta, general secretary of the Italian Communist Party [PCI], at PCI headquarters this morning.

After the talks, an official of the International Liaison Department of the CPC Central Committee told reporters that the two sides had held 2 hours of intensive talks in a cordial and comradely atmosphere on the relation between the two parties and a series of international issues, including the European situation.

Hu Yaobang said: We are statisfied with the development of the relations between our two parties based on the principle of full independence, equality, mutual respect, and non-interference in each other's international affairs. The development of our two parties' relations is conducive to further strengthening the friendly relations between our two countries and to world peace.

Hu Yaobang said: "After our two parties resumed relations, two general secretaries of the Italian Communist Party, Berlinguer and Natta, have visited China, and both of them have invited me to visit their party. Now I am very glad to pay this return visit to the Italian Communist Party by taking advantage of my visit to your country."

General Secretary Natta said: "We are very grateful to General Secretary Hu Yaobang for paying a visit to the Italian Communist Party. We value highly this visit made by General Secretary Hu."

Holds Press Conference

OW211555 Beijing XINHUA in English 1545 GMT 21 Jun 86

[Text] Rome, June 21 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Communist Party leader Hu Yaobang told reporters here today that his visit to Italy will help further Sino-Italian friendship and cooperation.

Speaking at a one-hour press conference on the third day of his visit to the country, Hu said that his talks with Prime Minister Bettino Craxi and other Italian leaders as well as his meeting with Italian Communist Party General Secretary Alesandro Natta had offered him an opportunity to exchange veiws with the Italians on international issues of common concern and to discuss with them ways of promoting the friendly relations between the two countries and the two parties. As a result, he said, "our mutual understanding has been deepened and our friendhsip reinforced."

His tour of Western Europe, Hu noted, is aimed to seek common ground and not differences. In that regard, said the Chinese party leader, "my visit has proved to be a success."

Asked about the talks he had with the leaders of Britain, Federal Germany, France and Italy, Hu said that despite some differences, he has found there is a common language between them on the fundamental issue facing mankind, i.e., the issue of preserving world peace. Europe, as a strong entity, will be in a position to play a significant and positive part in securing peace on earth, he stressed.

Hu also answered questions on China's foreign and domestic policies, such as China's relations with the Soviet Union, Kampuchea and Afghanistan, China's economic ties with West European countries, and inter-party relations between the Chinese and Italian Communists.

After the press conference, Hu and his party went to a luncheon hosted in his honor by the Italian Communist Party General Secretary. He is to have a meeting with cadres of the Italian Communist Party this afternoon.

Comments on USSR Ties, Other Issues

[By reporters Feng Bin, Huang Changrui, Li Zhengang]

[Text] Rome, 21 Jun (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the CPC Central Committee, said at a noontime press conference in Rome today that Europe is "a strong entity," and that there are broad prospects for Sino-European cooperation.

Hu Yaobang said: "If European countries consult each other and coordinate their actions on major issues, they will be in a position to play a significant and positive role in securing peace on earth and expediting common development."

When asked to comment on the prospects for cooperation between China and Europe, Hu Yaobang said: "I think there are broad prospects in the fields of safeguarding world peace and in economic and technical cooperation. As far as China is concerned, it will maintain a steady and lasting momentum for cooperation."

Hu Yaobang also requested Vice Premier Li Peng to brief the press on Sino-European economic cooperation. Li Peng pointed out: The trade voluem between China and the four European countries [that Hu Yaobang has visited] registered a fairly high growth of approximately 30 percent in 1985. We have had discussions on the prospects for economic cooperation with each of the four countries. China needs to import advanced technology and managerial expertise. There will be broad prospects for cooperation in such areas as communications, energy, electronics, telecommunications, metallurgy, and nonferrous metallurgy. There are roughly three methods of cooperation: First of all, China, which has sustained deficits in varying degrees in its trade with the four countries, hopes that they will buy more Chinese goods so that China can pay for its equipment and technology imports. The second method takes the form of extending loans to China on favorable terms. Li Peng thanked Italy for the good work it has done in this area. The third method is to establish foreign-owned enterprises, joint ventures, or multilateral enterprises in China.

Answering a question on CPC-PCI relations, Hu Yaobang said: "Following the resumption of CPC-PCI relations, two PCI general secretaries have visited China and have invited me to visit the PCI. [as received] My official visit to the PCI is fair and reasonable. The CPC and the PCI hold identical views on a broad range of issues. Because of different historical backgrounds and situations, we have differences in some issues. These differences are secondary and will not affect the two parties' friendship and unity. We discussed inter-party relations and each other's viewpoints on major issues. We did not discuss any issues involving Italy's internal problem."

On Sino-Soviet relations, Hu Yaobang said: The development of Sino-Soviet economic and friendly cooperation has been relatively smooth. Both sides are quite satisfied with the progress in this area. China also hopes that there will be normalization in the political area. Regrettably, however, there has been no substantial progress in this regard.

Commenting on the new Soviet leaders' foreign policy, Hu Yaobang said: They have put forward many new proposals, but "I am not sure" whether or not the talks between the Soviet Union and its principal adversary, the United States, can be successful.

Answering a reporter's question on his view about Vietnam's proposal on "troop withdrawal," Hu Yaobang said: "Vietnam has no plan to withdraw its troops from Cambodia; their claim of withdrawing troops is a fraud. It has been 3 years since they said they would withdraw troops from Cambodia. There are now three resistance forces in Cambodia fighting the Vietnamese armed forces, and the Khmer Rouge is one of them. If we write off the Khmer Rouge now, it would mean defeat! World public opinion must not be deceived by this proposal.

Asked whether he had raised the question of China joining the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [GATT] during his talks in Italy, Hu Yaobang said the issue was not discussed. He added, however, that since China was one of the GATT founders and the government of the People's Republic of China is the only legitimate government of China, the PRC's proper role in the GATT should be reinstated.

Remarks on Defense Expense

[Text] Rome, June 21 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Party leader Hu Yaobang said here today that China will not spend much money on arms purchases although it might import some advanced defense equipment and technology from other nations.

Hu, who arrived here Thursday for a four-day official visit, told a press conference that "China has now concentrated its financial and human resources on its economic development. We will not spend much on arms expansion including arms purchases, for we cannot afford to do so."

Vice-Premier Li Peng, who was also at the press conference, said China is satisfied with the development of economic cooperation between China and West European countries. "The volume of China's trade with West European countries has increased significantly," Li said, adding that China wants to expand economic cooperation with foreign countries in the future, especially in the fields of transport, telecommunications, electronics and metallurgy.

Listing three ways toward better cooperation, Li called on the four European nations they have been visiting to buy more goods from China for a balanced trade; to offer preferential loans to China to enable it to import more; and to invest more in joint ventures or independent enterprises. He expressed gratitude to the Italian Government for providing China with preferential loans.

Referring to China's steel tube project now inviting foreign bidders, he said that there still are opportunities for Italian entrepreneurs to win the bidding for the project if they are more competitive in the offer of preferential loans.

Supports Proposal on Cambodia

OW211739 Beijing XINHUA in English 1732 GMT 21 Jun 86

[Text] Rome, June 21 (XINHUA) -- China supports the eight-point proposal for the peaceful solution of the Kampuchea issue, visiting Chinese Party leader Hu Yaobang said at a press conference here today. The proposal was put forward by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea in mid-March.

When asked about the Hanoi-vaunted partial withdrawal of Vietnamese troops, the general secretary of the Chinese Communist Party said that the withdrawal is a "swindle" aimed at cheating public opinion.

Hu went on to say that all the resistance forces of the tripartite coalition government are waging armed struggle against Vietnamese aggression, and warned that the world must not be taken in by any attempt to exlude Democratic Kampuchea (Khmer Rouge) from a solution to the Kampuchea issued. If Democratic Kampuchea, the backbone of the armed struggle, is excluded, "which force will be strong enough to resist the Vietnamese aggressors?" he asked.

Hu said that Vietnam has brought destruction and sufferings to the Kampuchean people and China supports the eight-point proposal of the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea headed by Samdech Norodom Sihanouk.

Hu Addresses Italian Communists

[Excerpts] Rome, June 21 (XINHUA) -- The sincere and friendly relations based on equal footing between the Communist Party of China (CPC) and the Italian Communist Party (ICP) can be rated as a model of party-to-party relations, General Secretary Hu Yaobang said here today at a meeting with cadres of the ICP.

As comrade Hu Yaobang and Li Peng, vice premier and member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the CPC, Zhu Lian, head of the Liaison Department of the Central Committee of the CPC, and other Chinese comrades arrived at the ICP Rome provincial committee's headquarters in the company of Italian Communist Party General Secretary Alessandro Natta, they were given an enthusiastic welcome by Italian Communists present at the hall.

Paolo Bufalini, member of the ICP leadership, introduced the Chinese comrades to the floor, then ICP Rome Provincial Committee Secretary Goffredo Bettni delivered a warmly worded welcoming speech. Amid loud and lasting applause, Comrade Hu began his speech with a comradely tribute to the ICP and Italian Communists.

General Secretary Hu's 20-minute speech had been frequently interrupted by applause from the floor before his last work aroused an unusually enthusiastic, standing applause. As the meeting which proceeded in a very warm and comradely atmosphere came to an end, the Italian Communists bid a heart-touching farewell to General Secretary Hu and other Chinese comrades.

["General Secretary Hu Yaobang's Address When Meeting Italian Communist Party [PCI] Cadres on 21 June 1986" — capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text]

Dear Comrade Natta,

Dear Comrade Bufalini,

Dear Comrades,

This morning I had cordial and friendly talks with Comrade Natta and other leaders of your party, and now I am very happy to be meeting you comrades here again.

Our two parties were born in the same year. In the past 65 years, the members of the CPC have consistently watched with admiration the long and glorious course followed by your party, which was founded and nurtured by Cranci and Togliatti. During the years of the anti-fascist war, the PCI, together with other democratic forces, waged an extremely arduous struggle, and the glorious achievements of many outstanding party members are still being made today. After the war, your party proceeded from Italy's realities in advocating the unity of all democratic and progressive forces, and waged an heroic struggle to defend national sovereignty and independence, in preserving world peace and security, and in seeking the fundamental interests of the masses. Your party has taken deep root among broad sections of society and enjoys very high prestige in the international workers' movement. Not long ago you successfully convened your 17th national congress. The congress embodied the principled stand in your own hands and displayed an excellent atmosphere of solidarity and democracy and the scientific spirit of rich innovation and bold exploration. As Comrade Togliatti said: "We have come a long way and are going a long way." Today the PCI, with its glorious history, is striding toward a bright future as it continually overcomes difficulties and obstacles on the way ahead.

Comrades, back in the years of the war against facism, our two parties expressed support for each other. Since Comrade Enrico Berlinguer's visit to China in 1980, the traditional friendship and cooperative relations between our two parties have entered a new period of development. Comrade Alessandro Natta's visit to China last year, and his return visit I am now paying to your esteemed party, have again expressed the profound friendship between our two parties. I can say without exaggeration that the relations of equality, sincerity, and friendship between our two parties may be rated as a model of inter-party relations.

Why have our two parties been able to build this new kind of close relationship? I hold that there are three main reasons: FIRST, BOTH OUR PARTIES ADOPT A SCIENTIFIC APPROACH TOWARD MARXISM.

Marxism is a sharp weapon for observing things and understanding the world and a guide propelling our social progress. It is continually developing scientific system of ideology. Both parties share an understanding that as a science, Marxism itself requires a scientific approach. The major victories achieved and serious setbacks suffered by the CPC have taught us with both positive and negative examples that Marxism, far from being an immutable rigid dogma, must be constantly developed and enriched in the course of practice. We must be good at rejecting individual principles which are either outdated or proved through practice to be inapplicable, and at replacing them with new ones while adhering to the fundamental principles. Marxism is the supreme crystallization of the spiritual civilization of all mankind. In advancing Marxism under the new historical conditions today, we must continuously assimilate and summarize, in a critical way, the latest achievements of human civilization. Here I recall Comrade Berlinguer's article written in 1983 to mark the centenary of the death of Marx, entitled "Marxism at the End of the 20th Century." The article contained this passage: "Marxist teaching is that actual historical and social progress is undoubtedly affected by thought and ideology, but in the course of this progress, thought and ideology (including revolutionary ideology and Marxist ideology) are also constrained by the actual movement, which even produces actual changes, and they gradually gain new meanings, forms, and contents." I appreciate this scientific approach of Comrade Berlinguer toward Marxism.

Facts have proven that there is no fixed formula as to how different countries should approach socialism and how they should build socialism, nor can we find a set of ready answers in books. Socialism is ultimately still in the process of practice. In the West, under the new and complicated conditions since the war, you are now exploring paths toward socialism; in the East, we are currently carrying out reforms, perfecting the socialist system, and exploring a way to build socialism with Chinese characteristics. We have never concealed the fact that the tasks facing us are extremely complex and arduous, and we have not the slightest doubt that Marxism undergoes great development in the complex and ardous practice of transforming society and nature. We firmly believe that so long as we are bold in practice and skilled in continually summing up experience, our explorations and efforts will be successful and we will thus make our proper contributions toward the progress of human society and the development of Marxism. SECOND, BOTH PARTIES STEADFASTLY REPRESENT THE FUNDAMENTAL INTERESTS OF THE PEOPLE OF THEIR RESPECTIVE COUNTRIES AND THE WORLD AT LARGE IN INTERNATIONAL AFFAIRS.

Preserving national independence, seeking the development of society, and striving for world peace are the common aspirations of the whole of mankind, and they also represent the irrestistible tide of history. Our two parties have come to realize from their practice that the interests of our people at home are fundamentally in conformity with those of the people of the rest of the world. Communist Party members whose basic point of departure is the people's fundamental interests must make tremendous efforts to conform to and represent this tide of history; only thus can they develop and strengthen their own contingent. For this reason, both parties cherish our national independence and safeguard our national dignity and at the same time respect the independence and dignity of other countries. We are both dedicated to the development of our respective countries, support Third World countries in their efforts to develop their national economy, and strive to promote economic prosperity in the world.

Both our parties are firmly opposed to the threat of war, nuclear war in particular, and are against the arms race and any form of aggression and expansion. In international affairs, both parties have always independently decided on their respective stands according to the right or wrong of an issue, and have resolutely safeguarded the fundamental interests of the people of their respective countries and the world at large. We neither echo nor work hand in glove with, but denounce and oppose, the views and acts of injustice of big, rich, and strong countries of bullying small, poor, and weak ones, and attempts by big countries to dominate the world. It is precisely in this common understanding and similiarity of stand that our two parties find common language on a wide range of international issues.

THIRD, BOTH OUR PARTIES STICK TO THE CORRECT PRINCIPLE GUIDING INTER-PARTY RELATIONS.

Although our two parties use different ways of expressing the basic principles on party-to-party relations, we have both reached a common view based on our own experiences. The party in each country should be independent and maintain the initiative in its own hands, and there is no such thing as a center of leadership. Yours was one of the first parties to put forward such an important idea.

It is our common belief that every Communist Party, large or small, new or old, and in or not in power, should each hold itself responsible for the people of its own country and has the right to make its own decisions and manage its own affairs. Party-to-party relations should be those of mutual independence and complete equality.

It is entirely normal that, due to different histories, experiences, and situations, each party should have a different view or approach toward certain questions. Such differences should be mutually recognized and respected.

All communist parties, with a large or small membership and a long or short history, and in or not in power, have their own strong and weak points, and they can all make their contributions to developing and enriching Marxism through practice. No party should be allowed to regard its judgment on right and wrong as the criterion for truth or falsehood and impose it on other parties. Nor should any party be allowed to monopolize the key to the treasure house of the theory of Marxism and to prevent others from exploring and developing Marxist theory.

There is no justification for any party to consider itself privileged and to place itself above other parties. No party should make irresponsible remarks or criticisms on the internal affairs of other parties. Nor should any party take advantage of its relations with another party to oppose a third party.

Our two parties have strictly adhered to these principles in practice. Hence, differences in situation and experience and certain differences resulting from them, far from affecting mutual understanding and trust, have actually resulted in mutual enlightenment and mutual study and advancement, and we have made all the greater efforts to explore the truth.

Comrades, our party is extremely satisfied and happy with the relations of close friendship and cooperation between the Chinese and Italian parties. May I take this opportunity to thank the members of the PCI for their sympathy and support for our cause and the Italian people and friends in all circles for their friendship toward the Chinese people. Our country is launching its Seventh 5-Year Plan this year.

We hope that, as a result of 60 or 70 years of hard work beginning now, we will be able to attain a level approaching the developed countries by the mid-21st century, and to build China into a modern socialist country with a high degree of civilization and democracy. In concluding my address, I warmly welcome the comrades of the PCI present here tody and those who are not here, and Italian friends in all circles, to come to China and have a look if they get the chance, and to put forward their valuable views and suggestions on the cause we are undertaking. This will be sincere support and help for us.

Thank you all.

Delegation Tours Venice

OW230010 Beijing XINHUA in English 2356 GMT 22 Jun 86

[Text] Venice, Jun 22 (XINHUA) -- After two and a half days of intensive talks and meetings in Rome, Italy's capital, Chinese Communist Party General Secretary Hu Yaobang today toured Venice, the world-famous lagoon city.

Hu and his party, including Vice Premier Li Peng and Vice Chairman of the National Committee of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference Fei Xiaotaong, were met at Venice airport by Italian Minister of Labor Gianni de Michelis, Governor of Venice Province Ugo Trotta and Mayor of Venice Nereo Laroni.

The visit to Venice has historical significance, Li noted at a luncheon on the scenic isle of Torcello hosted by Minister Michelis. Venice was where Marco Polo, the famous Italian explorer, began his renowned China tour 700 years ago, a trip that resulted in a bridge of friendship between Italy and China.

Venice also plays an important part now in developing Italian-Chinese friendship and cooperation, Li said. It is also symbolic, Li told the Italian hosts, that a senior member of the Chinese delegation, Professor Fei, is from Suzhou, China's lagoon city that has sister ties with Venice.

The Chinese guests attended a concert this evening at Labia Palace, followed by a dinner there in Hu Yaobang's honor given by Italian Minister of Health Costante Degan. He and the Chinese delegation are scheduled to leave Venice tomorrow morning to visit Turin.

Italian Ambassador Interviewed

[By Gao Shi]

[Text] With party leader Hu Yaobang visiting Italy, CHINA DAILY interviewed Raffaele Marras, Italian ambassador to Beijing, who said Sino-Italian relations have "undergone progressive improvement since 1983."

Italy is one of China's major trade partners in West Europe. According to Chinese statistics, the bilateral trade in 1985 exceeded $936.71 million, more than 40 percent in 1984, which makes Italy the champion in trade growth rate. In the first four months of this year, the bilateral trade reached $418 million, an increase of 31 percent over the same period last year. "Starting in 1983, the general trend of such things as commercial exchange, the number of visas and scholarships and the presence of experts and businessmen in China has doubled each year," Marras said. "The technical assistance programme that the Italian Government offers China is most important," the ambassador said. He said it involves industry, agriculture, energy, public health, and scientific and professional training. Italy was the first West European country to provide large preferential government loans to China.

In the political field, the ambassador said, there are no conflicts of interest between the two countries. "We fully appreciate China's aspirations for peace, stability, social and economic advancement of all mankind," the ambassador said.

People-to-people exchanges, academic contacts and co-operation in sports and tourism between Italy and China "have also reached a remarkable level," he added. In 1980, Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang visited Italy, and in 1984 Italian President Francesco Cossiga, then president of the Senate, visited China. "Hu Yaobang's visit marks a milestone in the development of Sino-Italian relations," Marras said. "We believe the visit will further improve co-operation and strengthen the mutual feelings of friendship and trust," Marras said.

As for the future, the ambassador remarked that to prevent good relations from Beijing just so much talk, both countries should promote the flow of capital, people, goods and technology. The imminent signature of a Consular Convention will be "an initial step in that direction," he said. Hu Yaobang's visit is "most certainly a very valid proof of solid future development."

The ambassador revealed that Genoa's Teatro Comunale with the famous tenor Luciano Pavarotti will tour Beijing and other major cities in China this year.

'Roundup' on Visit to Italy

OW210822 Beijing XINHUA in English 0753 GMT 21 Jun 86

["Hu-Visit-Round-up — Hu and Italian Friends Extol New Friendship Between Two Ancient Nations" — XINHUA headline]

[Text] Rome, June 20 (XINHUA) — Visiting Chinese Communist Party leader Hu Yaobang this afternoon toured the Colosseum, the Arch of Constantine and other landmarks of ancient Romne after attending a welcoming ceremony at which he praised the historical links between China and Italy.

Staring at the ruins of ancient Roman buildings in southern Rome, the general secretary said, "In my youth, I paid attention to Roman history and read books about Spartacus." Spartacus led the large-scale slave rebellion against the Roman Empire during 73-71 B.C. After touring the Colosseum, where slaves were forced to fight each other or with prey while elites watched, Hu said the rulers at that time were merciless in oppressing slaves. In ancient China, he said, the form of slavery was different but equally cruel. Slaves were often buried alive with their deceased masters, he said.

Hu praised Italy for its efforts in preserving its ancient monuments after seeing the renovation work underway on the Arch of Costantine, named after Roman Emperor Constantine the Great.

Hu flew in Thursday for a five-day official visit to Italy, on the last leg of his 16-day four-nation European tour which has already taken him to Britain, Federal Germany and France. This morning, speaking at a welcoming ceremony held by the municipal government of Rome, Hu said the grandiose vestiges of ancient Roman civilization, as well as the significant achievements of contemporary culture, science and technology, show the ever-thriving creativity of the Italian people. Contacts between Rome and China date back 1,800 years and Rome today occupies a proud place in Italion-Chinese friendly relations, which far exceed those of our ancestors, he said.

Mayor Nicola Signorello of Rome in his welcoming speech recalled that the Italian merchant Marco Polo travelled to China 700 years ago along the so-called "silk road" through the inland of the Asian-European continent, which helped the West understand China.

The city of Rome regards China, which has made immeasurable and unmatched contributions to peace, as an essential factor in world balance and security, the mayor said.

The Chinese leader told Mayor Signorello and other municipal officials present at the ceremony that by the end of the month, a direct Beijing-Rome air link will be formally opened to serve as the new "silk road" of the century. "We are obliged and at the same time in an even better position to promote the friendship between our two nations for the common benefit of our peoples and in the interests of world peace," Hu said.

Hu today also talked with Italian President Francesco Cossiga on bilateral relations and cooperation, East-West relations and the Afghanistan and Kampuchean issues.

A spokesman for the Chinese Foreign Ministry said the two leaders expressed satisfaction over the development of friendly relations between the two countries and confidence in the prospects for future Sino-Italian cooperation. Since the establishment of diplomatic relations between China and Italy, about 14 cities of the two countries have forged ties of "sister city." Italy is also one of the earliest West European countries to offer China with large amounts of preferential loans.

The volume of bilateral trade in 1985 reached 936 million U.S. dollars, 40 percent more than in 1984. In the first four months of this year, total trade volume was 418 million U.S. dollars, 31 percent up from the same period last year.

Hu today also met Italian Senate President Amintore Fafani, President of the Chamber of Deputies Leonilde Jotti, Foreign Minister Giullio Andreotti and other Italian officials.

PCF PAPER INTERVIEWS CPC POLITBURO'S HU QILI

PM171429 Paris L'HUMANITE in French 13 Jun 86 p 16

[Laurent Ballouhey dispatch: "Strengthening the Socialist System"]

[Text] At the end of a 2-week visit to China a French communist press delegation headed by Francois Hilsum (Footnote: The French communist press delegation headed by Central Committee member Francois Hilsum was comprised of Andre Delord, Roger Delbarre, Catherine Leynack, Jose Fort, and Laurent Ballouhey) was received by Hu Qili, member of the CPC Politburo and member of the Central Committee Secretariat. During these 2 hours of talks Hu Qili, the youngest member of the Politburo to which he was promoted last October, who is at present standing in for the party general secretary, gave an exclusive interview to L'HUMANITE.

First he stressed the significance of General Secretary Hu Yaobang's visit to four West European countries -- Britain, the FRG, France, and Italy. In France, where he will stay from 16 to 19 June at President Mitterrand's invitation, Hu Yaobang will also have talks with Georges Marchais at PCF headquarters in the Place du Colonel-Fabien. "The main aim of this visit to France, and to Europe in general, by our general secretary is the defense of peace," Hu Qili said. "If Hu Yaobang's visit helps halt the arms race, strengthen the trend toward dialogue, and reduce confrontation, we will regard it as successful," he said. The Chinese official commented on the international situation, described as "complex and tense."

The arms race is continuing at the same time as the desire for peace is growing. What is at stake in North-South relations is development; what is at stake in East-West relations is peace. But the two are linked because, if they are to develop, the Third World countries need peace, as do the European countries. "That is why," Hu Qili said, "An independent and strong Europe strikes us an important in order to impose peace. The West and East European peoples do not want war and refuse to be harnessed to a chariot of war. In the same way, the Chinese people do not intend to follow any chariots of war. Without setting preconditions, and taking account of different historical conditions, China shares with the European peoples the search for detente and the rejection of the arms race." Hu Yaobang's visit will concentrate on this, but the second aspect of his tour will of course be to increase trade and cooperation with the four countries in the economic, technological, scientific, and cultural spheres.

Turning to the internal situation, Hu Qili gave a short assessment of the building of socialism in China, stating: "The CPC has been in power for 37 years. It has experienced only two phases of satisfactory economic development: the first 7 years from 1949 through 1956, and the 7 years since the reforms, from 1978 through 1985. Between these two phases were 23 years of setbacks and disappointments. At that time China was following a tortuous path, starting with the Great Leap Forward in 1958 -- a path characterized by too much haste, especially during the 10 years of the Cultural Revolution."

Hu Qili then discussed the new reform policy adopted at the end of 1978, after the party had assessed the internal troubles and the mistakes of the Cultural Revolution. "We started by restoring Marxist principles: 'Seeking the truth in practice' and 'proceeding on the basis of reality.' On this basis," he said, "the 11th party congress laid down the three main guidelines of our current policy: pursuing the socialist path; introducing economic reforms and opening up the country to the outside world; defending world peace and combating hegemony."

"After the initial success of the rural reforms, based on individual responsibility for the peasants, the reform policy was extended to the urban regions. We thought that the economy had been too concentrated at the state and ministry levels in the past. We wanted to decentralize, extending the decisionmaking powers of the provinces, regions, and enterprises. This reform in the cities is more complex and also more systematic, because it encompasses many spheres, including the political structure," the Chinese leadership member explained.

"In this respect the reform was political from the start. We first had to eliminate leftism and end the period of political chaos. Today our task is to extend this political reform, linking it to the development of socialist democracy and legislation," he explained. "We want to achieve real control of the government by the workers and the peasants. However, this extension of democracy depends on the establishment of socialist legislation. China experienced a very long feudal period," Hu Qili explained. "We made enormous efforts to catch up and create a legislative system. It is in this way that we can combat bureaucracy, corruption, and abuse of power for personal ends.

"The aim of these reforms is to strengthen the socialist system, to improve it, and to make it more dynamic," he added. "The press in the capitalist countries has expressed doubts about the meaning of these reforms, stating that they were a return to capitalism," he said, before refuting this viewpoint by stating: "It would be catastrophic if China abandoned socialism or fell into dependence on another great power. However, if 1 billion Chinese build socialism and struggle for peace, our country will make a major contribution to the whole of mankind's progress.

"The majority of Chinese," he continued, "think it is obvious that only socialism can save China and give its people prosperity. Our living standard is still very low. Our per capita income has increased from $250 per year in 1980 to $350 in 1985. The aim is to achieve $500 by 1990 and $800 or $1,000 by the year 2000 -- which makes it necessary to quadruple GNP. "We are not approaching that yet, but we have already solved the major problems facing our large population: adequate food, proper clothing, and a permanent dwelling. Everybody is aware that this is the result of socialism," he said.

Hu Qili then outlined future prospects, explaining: "We plan to reach the average level of industrialized countries by the year 2050, with an annual per capita income of $4,000. While increasing living standards we will not allow a wealthy class to be created while 90 percent of the population lives in poverty. We will avoid this polarization between rich and poor, which occurs in many other Third World countries, by maintaining the principle of socialist distribution: to each according to his labor. In the course of this process, thinking and values will change. The influence of feudal traditions -- for instance, a strong concept of hierarchy to which egalitarianism is added -- explains the lack of democracy. The gradual elimination of the remnants of the feudal society will make it possible to develop socialist democracy and legislation," the Chinese leadership member stated.

"Compared with the history of capitalism, socialism is still in its infancy," he pointed out. "Theory is not an abstract invention; it is a practical human creation. It is in practice that leaders must learn to defend principles," he added. Hu Qili then commented on the method used by the Chinese leadership in introducing reforms and solving the conflicts which arise, stating: "We allow the little streams to flow. We simply watch in which direction the water flows. When the water flows in the right direction we build channels through which these streams can lead to the river of socialism."

Holds Talks With Zhao

[Text] Beijing, June 19 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang said here today China is satisfied with the friendly relations between China and Mali. Visiting Malian President Moussa Traore said that cooperation between the two countries is effective and would continue to develop. The two leaders held talks on bilateral relations and international issues of common concern at the Great Hall of the People here this afternoon.

Zhao said that with the frequent exchange of visits by leaders of the two countries and increasing contacts between their peoples, economic and technological cooperation between them have expanded since the establishment of their diplomatic relations.

Zhao pointed out that the Chinese Government attaches great importance to the development of its cooperation with Mali. Noting that both countries have been gaining experience in economic construction and carrying out economic reform in recent years, Zhao said the two countries can learn from each other and mutually promote their economic development.

Traore expressed the hope that friendly relations, joint management of cooperative projects by the two countries in particular, be strengthened and developed.

Responding to Traore's suggestion, Zhao said that the Chinese Government would make positive efforts in this respect. He added that further efforts should be made to develop trade relations between state enterprises and nongovernmental companies of the two countries.

Traore gave a brief account of the struggle being waged by African countries against drought. He said that the drought is continuing and that Africa cannot overcome this disaster without outside aid.

Zhao said that the international community should exercise greater influence on developed countries to make them help African countries to overcome immediate economic problems. Developed countries are duty-bound to help developing countries overcome economic difficulties, Zhao said. He said China would, as always, support African countries and other Third World countries in their just struggles and enhance its economic and technological cooperation with them. Zhao stressed that China would never change its basic stand on protecting the rights and interests of Third World countries no matter what changes take place in the international situation.

Before the talks, Zhao presided over a welcoming ceremony for President Traore, his wife and their party, which featured a 21-gun salute and a guard of honor of the three services of the Chinese People's Liberation Army. State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian attended the ceremony.

Zhao Hosts Banquet

[Text] Beijing, June 19 (XINHUA) -- Premier Zhao Ziyang said today that African peoples will surely reach their goals of economic, scientific and technological and cultural development as they did in winning national liberation and political independence. Zhao was speaking at a banquet he gave in honor of Malian President Moussa Traore, his wife and their party at the Great Hall of the People this evening.

Zhao described the African people as "having glorious fighting tradition and the spirit of constantly striving to become stronger" and Africa "being a developing continent with great potentials for development".

Zhao pointed out that leaders and far-sighted figures of African countries are exploring proper ways for development and have made significant progress in this respect, while facing economic difficulties due to long colonial rule, unreasonable international economic order and natural disaster. Zhao praised the Malian Government and people for their achievements in developing national economy and their just stand in international affairs. He wished them greater success.

Both Zhao and Traore spoke highly of the smooth development of friendship and cooperation between the two countries since the establishment of their diplomatic relations 25 years ago. "During such a short period," Traore said, "we have established a very effective variety of cooperative relations to the aspiration of our peoples." Zhao said it has been proved that Sino-Malian friendship, which is based on the five principles of peaceful coexistence, can stand time test.

Traore said that this is his third China visit, which will mark a starting of a new stage in the development of relations between the peoples of the two countries. Traore thanked China for constantly supporting Mali in its development and expressed satisfaction with China's technological aid to his country. The support met the Malian people's needs and was helpful for Mali to carry out its policy of national independence, he added.

The two leaders both condemned the South African authorities for their racist policy, suppression on black people and aggression against neighbors. Among those present ere State Councillor and Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian and Qin Zhongda, chairman of Chinese Government Reception Committee and minister of chemical industry.

[Text] Beijing, June 20 (XINHUA) -- Malian President Moussa Traore and Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang both expressed satisfaction with their talks in Beijing. They were speaking at a return banquet given by Traore and his wife in honor of Premier Zhao at the Great Hall of the People here this evening.

Traore described the talks as being "cordial and frank", saying that the foreign policy stands of both countries coincided. He said both countries are determined to strengthen their existing friendship and cooperation.

Zhao said both sides had a deep discussion on a wide range of issues concerning the development of friendship and cooperation between them in the fields of politics and economy.

AFP EXAMINES CURRENT PRC-AFRICA RELATIONSHIP

HK191046 Hong Kong AFP in English 0948 GMT 19 Jun 86

[By Patrick Lescot]

[Text] Beijing, June 19 (AFP) -- African students and diplomats here fear that the Chinese, as they open their doors to the West, have chosen economic expediency over their traditional political links with the Third World.

African diplomats say China has changed: Its foreign policy, formerly anchored in South-South cooperation and the principle of revolutionary aid, is shifting toward a Chinese brand of realpolitik based on the need for help from the West in building its economy.

"Remember the United Nations in 1971" -- The placard carried in a June 6 demonstration by African students in Beijing was a plaintive reminder that 27 African nations backed China's entry into the United Nations.

And Beijing's standard messages of support to opponents of apartheid recently on the 10th anniversary of the Soweto uprising failed to reassure African diplomats and students shaken by a clash between foreign and Chinese students at a northern university last month. In the Tianjin incident, 300 to 600 Chinese students laid seige for five hours to a group of foreign students, mostly Africans, celebrating the anniversary of the founding of the Organization of African Unity. Chinese authorities denied there was any racist element in the incident, saying it was simply a misunderstanding provoked by the foreign students' refusal to turn down loud party music after 11 PM.

It was Prime Minister Zhao Ziyang's tour of Africa in 1982-1983 that signalled the change. From now on, the guiding principle in bilateral relations was to be mutual interest rather than revolutionary assistance.

The era of the mammoth African project entirely financed and built by the Chinese was over. Undertakings such as the 100,000-seat stadiums thrown up in Dakar, Kinshasa, and Harare, designed to be public relations coups for Beijing, were financially disastrous.

The message to Africa was that China now had to practice abroad the sort of pragmatism being encouraged within its own borders.

Projects such as the epic construction of the Tanzam railway, which thousands of Chinese laborers built across 1,860 kilometers (1,160 miles), to take Zambian copper to the Tanzanian port of Dar Es Salaam, gave way to joint ventures which held out the promise of practical and immediate results.

The level of Chinese aid to Africa has fallen off steadily since 1976. Loans are still interest-free, but the more advanced China becomes, thanks to Western technology, the higher the price of cooperation, one African diplomatic said. Another diplomat went further, suggesting it might be cheaper to buy from Europe these days, where spare parts were also easier to come by. A Western diplomat concurred: "Beijing now is placing priority on economic development, including in its foreign policy objectives."

In its modernization drive, Beijing is shifting toward Europe, the United States and Japan. Africa is perceived as having little to offer China both in terms of trade and in security needs, he added.

Chinese strategy in the Maoist era was to combat the growing Soviet influence in Africa, every inch of the way. Today, after a series of setbacks, Beijing aims to maintain a low profile in the area, one diplomat from the region said.

Has China renounced its role as guardian of the Third World? Apaprently, said one Western diplomat. But although Beijing is no longer promoting revolution and the anti-imperialist struggle, it now has more to teach African countries, and can offer a development model worth studying.

RENMIN RIBAO ON ISRAELI WITHDRAWAL FROM LEBANON

[Article by Zhu Mengkui: "Israel Must Withdraw All Its Forces From Lebanon"]

[Text] Israeli forces made a large-scale invasion of southern Lebanon on 6 June 1982 and have since occupied half of the country. To safeguard their territorial integrity and sovereignty, the Lebanese people have carried out a protracted, unswerving struggle against the enemy. Israel's brutal aggression has met with condemnation throughout the world, and Israel is becoming increasingly isolated.

Lebanon's just struggle to resist Israeli aggression and for national salvation has enjoyed extensive support from the international community. The United Nations, the nonaligned countries, the Islamic countries, and the Arab countries have on several occasions adopted resolutions and issued statements demanding unconditional withdrawal of all Israeli forces from Lebanon. During the Israeli invasion of Lebanon, nearly 5,000 Israeli troops have been wounded or killed, its military expenditures have exceeded $2.5 billion, and its economy has deteriorated, thus arousing its people's antiwar feeling. This unjust war has landed Israel in the deep mire in Lebanon. Internationally, it has found itself in a very isolated position.

After its brazen invasion of Beirut in September 1982, Israel proposed "normalization of relations" with Lebanon and unjustifiably demanded that Lebanon open its trading ports to Israel and allow Israel to set up diplomatic representative organs in Lebanon. This was flatly rejected by the Lebanese Government. To urge Israel to withdraw its forces from Lebanon and to restore Lebanon's independence, sovereignty, and territorial integrity, Lebanon has conducted arduous, repeated negotiations with Israel through U.S. mediation, and in May 1983 they signed a withdrawal agreement. However, under all types of pretexts, Israel delayed its withdrawal from Lebanon. In this situation, the Lebanese government had no choice but to expose and condemn a series of Israel's perfidious moves and to abolish, in March 1984, the withdrawal agreement, which had long become a mere scrap of paper.

In spite of all this, however, the Lebanese Government still made efforts to conduct withdrawal negotiations with Israel, and by the end of 1984 withdrawal negotiations between Lebanon and Israel were resumed through UN mediation. However, not only did Israel not set the time for withdrawals by stages, it also insisted on building a "safety zone" in southern Lebanon which would be subject to security checks by the Israeli-supported southern Lebanese troops. Israel also asserted that it would retain the right of pursuit across the Lebanese border. This obstinate stand, which ignored Lebanon's sovereignty, brought the negotiations to a deadlock again. Although Israel has unilaterally announced its withdrawal, the Israeli troops still hang on in southern Lebanon and keep launching attacks on the Lebanese people. This has caused much turbulence to the situation in Lebanon. Facts have proved that Israel is playing the trick of partial withdrawal in an attempt to permanently occupy southern Lebanon for the purpose of realizing its expansionist ambition aimed at undermining Lebanon's peaceful unification and controlling Lebanon.

From the development of the situation in Lebanon, people can understand that Israel's aggression and threats are the main causes of destruction and calamities in Lebanon. In recent years, Lebanon has suffered untold war calamities, which have made tens of thousands of people homeless and caused an economic loss totalling tens of billions of U.S. dollars. To realize the country's unification and territorial integrity, the Lebanese Government has always regarded the liberation of southern Lebanon and urging Israel to withdraw its forces as an important task in rebuilding Lebanon. However, Israel has continued to strengthen its military occupation in southern Lebanon regardless of the just demands by Lebanon and the international community. This indicates that Israel's aggression is not only the root cause of turmoil in southern Lebanon, but also a serious threat to peace and security in the Middle East.

The Chinese people, together with the people of justice-upholding countries in the rest of the world, profoundly sympathize with the Lebanese people and resolutely support their struggle for restoring their independence, sovereignty, and territorial integrity. Today, the Lebanese Government and people are entrusted with the arduous mission of rebuilding the country and putting an end to Israel's aggression against southern Lebanon. Various forces in the country are facing the urgent task of ceasefire and reconciliation. So long as Israel does not withdraw its forces from Lebanon, there is no peace in the country. In such cases, the Lebanese people will not stop fighting for even one day. We are convinced that with the support by the Arab countries and the international community, the Lebanese people will finally liberate southern Lebanon and realize the unification of the country.

OFFICIAL COMMENTS ON SITUATION OF DISSIDENT WEI

[Text] Beijing, June 20 (AFP) -- A senior Chinese official on Friday said he knew nothing about a hunger strike by China's best-known dissident, Wei Jingsheng, who was jailed in 1979 for 15 years for "counter-revolutionary crimes."

Generally reliable Chinese sources have said Mr. Wei has been on hunger strike in prison for some time, and is force-fed by his guards.

But China law society vice-president and former Justice Vice-Minister Zhu Jianming told AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE: "Wei Jingsheng was in good health at the end of last year. I don't know where he is right now, but I have heard nothing about him being on hunger strike at the moment."

However, he said he would ask the relevant authorities about Mr. Wei's current predicament and reveal what he learned in about 10 days.

Mr. Zhu said that when he was at the Justice Ministry he had access to internal reports about Mr. Wei. According to such reports up to the end of 1985 Mr. Wei was behaving well and was allowed to read newspapers, listen to the radio, watch television and receive visits from his family. Mr. Wei was one of the leading lights of the 1978-79 Beijing Spring movement for greater democracy in China.

Thousands of young Chinese joined the Beijing Spring movement, which originally enjoyed the support now predominant Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping. But after Mr. Wei's arrest the movement was progressively silenced when Mr. Deng's regime came to regard it as a threat to its authority.

Between 1979 and 1981 all the main Beijing spring activists were jailed.

Some were subsequently released, but the authorities have kept quiet about the fate of the others. The authorities have only rarely spoken of Mr. Wei. In 1985 they said he was in good health in a labour camp in the northwestern province of Ginghai.

Public security minister Ruan Chongwu said in reply to foreign correspondents' questions delivered at an All-China Journalists' Association lunch that he had no knowledge of Mr. Wei's situtation. "He's just an ordinary prisoner like any other. I can't understand why there's such interest abroad in his predicament," he said.

Mr. Zhu, without predicting the early release of Mr. Wei, said prisoners could earn remission for good conduct after serving between a third and a half of their sentence. Mr. Wei has already served half his jail term.

Said Mr. Zhu: "If he behaved well and reforms himself suitably he could get remission. If, however, he is disobedient, we can force him to undergo reform through labour."

Common criminals and counter-revolutionaries jailed for more than three years generally have to undergo a tough programme of "reform through labour," under which they are put to work each day.

FURTHER COVERAGE OF NPC STANDING COMMITTEE

Plenary Meeting Held

OW210843 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1311 GMT 20 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, 20 Jun (XINHUA) -- The 16th Session of the NPC Standing Committee held a plenary meeting this afternoon to hear several reports submitted by the State Council and reports on foreign trips.

At the request of the State Council, Wang Bingqian, state councillor and minister of finance, and Lu Peijian, auditor general of the State Auditing Administration, reported on the state final accounts of 1985 and the auditing work in 1985.

Wang Binqian said: The year 1985 was a year which China achieved enormous successes in socialist construction. Owing to the hard work of people of all nationalities in the country, the nation's socialist construction was accelerated, and remarkable progress was achieved in production, construction, and reforms. In addition to achieving a sustained, steady, and harmonious economic growth, the state's financial situation continued to improve. Relatively significant growth was noted in both revenue and expenditure. This was a composite reflection of the nation's vigorous industrial and agricultural growth and continuing expansion of domestic and foreign trade, as well as the success of upholding the Central Committee's principle of enlivening the domestic economy, opening to the outside world, and continuing to restructure and improve the financial and taxation systems.

Lu Peijian said: To contribute to the fundamental improvement of party and social conduct and to ensure normal progress in opening to the outside world, enlivening the domestic economy, and restructuring the economy system, auditing organs at all levels have, since last year, achieved remarkable progress in dealing with such serious financial and economic irregularities as fraud and taking advantage of loopholes in reform. We will intensify auditing supervision from now on in order to fight against all types of financial and economic irregularities and facilitate economic reform and improving party and social conduct.

The meeting also heard a report by Jiang Xinxiong, minister of nuclear industry, on China's policy for construction and development of nuclear power.

At President Li Xiannian's request, State Councillor Chen Muhua submitted a written report on President Li's visit to Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Egypt, Somalia, and Madagascar. Chen, who was a member of the president's entourage, said in the report that President Li's visit to the five Asian and African countries was a complete success.

The meeting also heard Vice Chairman Peng Chong's reporton the NPC delegation's visit to Australia. Peng Chong said: At the invitation of the parliament of the Commonwealth of Australia, an NPC Delegation with Peng Chong and Bainqen Erdini Qoigyi Gyaincan, vice Chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, as head and deputy head, made a goodwill visit to Australia from 29 April to 10 May 1986. The visit achieved its anticipated objectives, as it has enhanced mutual understanding of the two countries' parliaments and peoples and their friendship and cooperation.

Wang Bingqian Finance Report

[Text] Beijing, 20 Jun (XINHUA) -- State Councillor and Finance Minister Wang Bingqian said today that China's financial situation continued to improve in 1985 and the nation's revenue and expenditures were both higher than those of 1984. He added that revenue and expenditures were balanced in 1985. At the State Council's request, Wang Bingqian reported the 1985 final account this afternoon at the plenary meeting of the 16th Session of the NPC Standing Committee. He said: According to official statistics, the state's total revenue in 1985 was 186.64 billion yuan, or 121.6 percent of the target, and the total expenditure was 184.48 billion yuan, or 117.9 percent of the targeted spending, showing a favorable balance of 2,162 million yuan. Compared with the forecast made in a report submitted to the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC, the total revenue had increased by 1,229 million yuan, and the total expenditure by 1,884 million yuan. The healthy situation can be indicated by the drop in actual surplus of 655 million yuan. Of the total revenue for 1985, domestic receipts amounted to 183.72 billion yuan, or 122.5 percent of the budgeted figure, while foreign loans came to 2.92 billion, or 83.5 percent of the budget figures.

Wang Bingqian said: While the implementation of the 1985 state budget was satisfactory, we must also be aware of the various other problems. Most notable are the facts showing that certain factors causing economic instability have not yet been totally eliminated, that investment in fixed assests is still too large, that the growth of consumption funds is too sharp, and that the economic performance of many enterprises remain essentially unchanged due to poor management and low technological standards. All of this will directly or indirectly affect the financial situation as well as financial stability and balance in the future. Financial work itself is also problem-ridden. Because of financial loopholes, the losses in revenues and wastes in spending are still serious. We must attach great importance to these problems and deal with them with effective measures.

1985 Expenditures Reported

[Text] Beijing, 20 Jun (XINHUA) — State Councillor and Minister of Finance Wang Bingqian said today that domestic receipts and expenditures during the first 5 months this year were respectively 73 billion and 70.3 billion yuan, showing a favorable balance of 2.7 billion yuan. Wang Bingqian made this disclosure today while making a report on the state's 1985 final accounts at a plenary meeting of the 16th Session of the NPC Standing Committee. He said that the receipts and spending during the first 5 months represented respectively 35 and 32 percent of the budgeted targets.

He said: The nation's current economic situation is fine, and all production and construction projects and economic reforms are in progress. The implementaton of this year's economic and social development plan has been on the whole normal, as is the implementation of the budget.

In accordance with the needs of the current economic growth and the implementation of this year's budget, the State Council has urged all regions and departments to ensure receipts and strictly control expenditures in an effort to ensure successful implementation of this year's budget and balance revenue and expenditures.

1985 Audit Work Reported

[Excerpts] Beijing, 20 Jun (XINHUA) -- At the State Council's request, Lu Peijian, auditor-general of the State Auditing Administration, today delivered a report on the 1985 auditing work at the 16th Session of the NPC Standing Committee. He said: To contribute to the fundamental improvement of party and social conduct and ensure normal progress in opening to the outside world, enlivening the domestic economy, and restructuring the economic system, since 1958 auditing organs at all levels have firmly dealt with serious financial and economic irregularities, such as practicing fraud and taking advantage of loopholes in reform. In 1985 auditing organs audited over 66,000 units, or 5.7 times more than that of 1984. They found large sums of money of dubious origin, and reimbursed over 2.82 billion yuan to the state. Each auditor reimbursed an average of over 100,000 yuan to the state.

Lu Peijian said: Auditing organs began their work last year by auditing the budgets and special funds of several trades. Despite the fact that the budgets and special funds were tight in certain areas, they found that a considerable amount of money had been misappropriated or wasted. In the course of auditing some 2,200 educational units in 12 provinces and municipalities, auditing organs found that over 82 million yuan were misused in building offices, dormitories, and guest houses; purchasing automobiles; and setting up business firms.

Lu Peijian said: Auditing organs also audited the units using loans from the World Bank. Whenever they discovered that any loans for cultural, educational, and agricultural projects were misused, they promptly notified the relevant units to correct the mistakes. The Auditing Administration's report was considered by the World Bank as up to international auditing standards.

Lu Peijian said: Since the party Central Committee and the State Council set forth a series of measures for combating irregularities last year, financial and economic regulations have been more effectively observed. However, because party and social conduct has not been fundamentally improved, certain measures for restructuring the economic system are uncoordinated and imperfect; certain financial and economic departments have failed to enforce law strictly; and certain people and units have used the opportunity to practice fraud, taking advantage of the loopholes in reform. Financial and economic irregularities are therefore still a conspicuous issue today. It has been found that the majority of the audited units had violated financial and economic regulations one way or another, and that some financial and economic administrative units have taken advantage of their authoritiy to seek gain for certain individuals or a small group of people.

Lu Peijian said: Although auditing organs have achieved remarkable successes over the past 2 years, much work still has to be done. Confronting them are numerous difficulties and problems. Their operation needs improvement, and they still have to earnestly study and resolve the new situations and new problems in auditing work, particularly those for which the existing policies still cannot be clearly applied.

Chen Muhua on Li Xiannian Tour

[Text] Beijing, 20 Jun (XINHUA) — Entrusted by President Li Xiannian, State Councillor Chen Muhua today submitted to the 16th meeting of the 6th NPC Standing Committee a written report on President Li Xiannian's visit to Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Egypt, Somalia, and Madagascar. The report described President Li's visit as a success and said that it achieved the expected goal of deepening understanding and friendship and strengthening unity and cooperation between China and these countries.

Chen Muhua accompanied President Li on his tour of these Asian and African countries. In her written report, she said: At the invitation of the presidents of Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Egypt, Somalia, and Madagascar, President Li Xiannian paid state visits to these nations from 8 to 27 March. It was the first time a Chinese president visited these Asian and African countries since the founding of new China. President Li's visits strengthened the traditional friendship between China and the five Asian and African countries, and showed that China attaches great importance to the development of friendly relations and cooperation with Asian and African countries. The visits also demonstrated that China's foreign policy is basically aimed at enhancing unity and cooperation with the Third World Countries.

The report said: At the state banquets given by the heads of state of the five nations, President Li made important speeches praising the fine relations between China and these five countries as well as the achievements attained by these five nations in national construction and foreign affairs. On various occasions he also introduced China's domestic situation and its foreign policy, particularly its policy on South Asia and the Middle East. President Li also talked with the presidents of the five countries on international issues, on the situation in various regions, and on bilateral relations. At the same time, they exchanged views on many subjects on various occasions. Chen Muhua and those who accompanied President Li on his tour also held meetings with their counterparts in the five countries. In his meetings with his counterparts, President Li elucidated China's independent foreign policy for peace and introduced China's views on the current international situation and major international issues. The meetings showed that China and the five nations have identical views on major international issues. Both President Li and the heads of state of the five countries were satisfied with the bilateral relations between China and the five countries. They also expressed their determination to strengthen the existing fine relations and further tap the tremendous potential in developing cooperation in the fields of economy and trade on the basis of equality and mutual benefit. We realised from the warm and friendly talks with the leaders of the five countries that they sincerely hope that China will become more progressive and prosperous and stronger. Like China, they earnestly desire to develop bilateral relations.

The report said: During the visit, we were delighted to notice the remarkable achievements made by the five countries in developing their economies and the fact that they are actively exploring ways to develop their economies according to the state of affairs in their respective countries. We are convinced that they will definitely be able to continuously forge ahead and achieve their magnificent goal of bringing about economic prosperity through their own efforts and international cooperation.

Minister on Nuclear Development

[Text] Beijing, June 21 (XINHUA) — China will introduce nuclear power gradually, the country's highest legislative body was told on Friday.

Nuclear Industry Minister Jiang Xinxiong said in a report to the current session here of the National People's Congress Standing Committee that safety and quality would be stressed as the industry developed step by step.

The nuclear power stations under construction now in China were both designed to safety standards widely accepted in the world, and Chinese specialists were confident about their safety. He said development strategy had been drawn up in the light of world energy trends and China's own circumstances.

According to expert forecasts, world oil reserves would not last very long, and nuclear energy offered a better backup to coal and hydroelectric power than solar, geothermal, methane and wind power.

As a supplement, he added, nuclear power could also help reduce environmental pollution caused by coal-generated power.

Considering its energy resources and serious transport shortages, China would develop nuclear power gradually, while actively developing coal and hydroelectricity.

Nuclear power stations would first be built in China's south-east, where industry was relatively advanced but suffered serious power shortages. This would be a foundation for future development.

China is rich in coal and water resources, he said, so it can still rely mainly on coal and hydroelectric power. But 70 percent of China's water resources is concentrated in the southwest and 60 percent of its coal in the north and northwest. Transportation would be a big problem to ease energy shortages in the coastal and northeast areas even if coal industry can further develop, he said.

EFFORTS TO STOP DRUG SMUGGLING IN 1985 REPORTED

[By staff reporter Xu Yuanchao]

[Text] China's crackdown on drug smuggling made new progress last year, with security officers ferreting out a total of 24 kilograms of opium intended to be taken out of the country.

International drug smugglers, collaborating with Chinese criminals, wanted to seize the opportunity of China opening to the outside world, Ruan Chongwu, Minister of Public Security, told reporters yesterday in Beijing.

He said most drug cases had been reported in border areas of Yunnan and Guangdong provinces and Guangxi where the culprits had planned to move opium over the Zhuang Autonomous Region border.

The minister said China's overall crime rate had dropped 20 percent due to the nationwide crackdown on serious crime over the past three years. But in the first quarter of this year, he said, the rate rose 12.3 percent over the same period last year.

Some of the offences were reportedly committed by juveniles. Some 70-80 per cent of juvenile crimes were thefts, the minister said. Since becoming minister, Ruan said, the most serious problem his department had faced was the rising crime rate.

"We will make efforts to reduce the rising rate but we need support from the whole of society, including education departments," he said. China had an average of 500,000 criminal cases each year, one of the lowest figures in the world, he added.

NATIONAL ECONOMIC SYMPOSIUM HELD IN BEIJING

[Report by Xia Fenglei: "Representatives Attending the National Economic Situation Symposium Hold That Insufficient Total Demand Has Become an Obstacle to the Development of the Economy and Reform" — capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] Some time ago, the Research Institute on China's Economic Structural Reform and the Economics Association of Beijing Youths held a symposium on the national economic situation. The participants discussed several theoretical issues on macroeconomic balance and control and, on this basis, the economic situation in the first quarter of 1986, particularly the current problems of enterprises. They put forward proposals and measures for further reforms.

The participants held: A phenomenon marked by insufficient money supply and insufficient total demand exists in our country. A serious contradiction between supply and demand also exists in the economy. In particular, the problem has intensified in the industrial structure. This has become a major cause for the restriction of economic growth. For from mitigating the structural contradiction, the existing economic control policies have sharpened this contradiction. A proper structural adjustment is therefore needed. Behind the fluctuating economic growth, the reform environment of enterprises is quietly deteriorating, the behavior of enterprises is being thrown into disorder, and the enterprise mechanisms are becoming more complicated.

AT THE MEETING, THE MACROECONOMIC OFFICE OF THE RESEARCH INSTITUTE ON CHINA'S ECONOMIC STRUCTURAL REFORM PRESENTED A STUDY REPORT ENTITLED "SEVERAL THEORETICAL ISSUES ON MACROECONOMIC BALANCE AND CONTROL." AFTER MAKING A COMPREHENSIVE ANALYSIS OF THE ECONOMIC SITUATION IN 1985, THE REPORT REACHED THE CONCLUSION THAT AN OVERALL RETRENCHMENT HAS LED TO INSUFFICIENT MONEY SUPPLY AND INSUFFICIENT TOTAL SOCIAL DEMAND AND LED FURTHER TO REDUCED PRODUCTION.

By analyzing the relationship between the level of total demand on the one hand and the credit, currency amount, and currency structure on the other, the report also reaches the following conclusions.

First, an increase in credit is not tantamount to an increase in currency, still less is it tantamount to an increase in total demand. Second, the level of total demand has a close relationship with the currency in circulation, but it does not have a close relationship with the currency in a broad sense and credit scale. Credit scale cannot be regarded as a key and comprehensive index of macroeconomic balance and control. Third, the level of total demand has a close relationship not only with the total amount of currency in circulation, but also with the structure of currency in circulation change, excessive total demand and insufficient total supply may possibly emerge. There is now an insufficient total demand.

WHILE DISCUSSING MACROECONOMIC BALANCE AND CONTROL, THE MEETING ALSO DISCUSSED THE CURRENT SITUATION AND BEHAVIOR OF ENTERPRISES. THE COMRADES FROM THE ENTERPRISE FACT-FINDING TEAM OF THE RESEARCH INSTITUTE ON CHINA'S ECONOMIC STRUCTURAL REFORM AND FROM THE POLICY RESEARCH OFFICE OF THE BEIJING MUNICIPAL CPC COMMITTEE BRIEFED THE PARTICIPANTS ON THE RESULTS OF THEIR INITIAL ANALYSES AFTER CONDUCTING INVESTIGATION IN ENTERPRISES.

In their view, the principal and widespread problems of enterprises are as follows:

First, there are great fluctuations in industrial production and a notable structural problem: Production drops more substantially in collectaive enterprises than in state enterprises, more substantially in small enterprises than in large and medium-sized enterprises, more substantially in local enterprises than in central enterprises, and more substantially in light industrial enterprises than in heavy industrial enterprises. Second, demand has diminished. The enterprises have received insufficient orders. The drop in effective demand is even more serious. Third, the production scale has been relatively reduced and the equipment is generally operating below capacity. Fourth, the shortage of circulating capital is chiefly caused by the defects in structure. Although the total amount of circulating capital does not change, due to various reasons such as the means of production at the disposal of the enterprises and the debt chains among the enterprises, there is in fact a shortage of circulating capital. Fifth, the conditions of collective and small enterprises to compete with other enterprises have become worse and their economic environment has deteriorated so that the gap between them and the state and large enterprises has widened. Sixth, the initiataive of cadres, workers, and staff members has dropped. The irrational bonus tax system has led to a drastic reduction in the marginal contribution of bonuses. Seventh, the rights and interests of enterprise dealers have been substantially restricted. Their power to manage personnel and finance has been curtailed and the decision-making power delegated to lower levels has been gradually withdrawn. The reform environment is quietly deteriorating.

In light of the above problems, the representatives put forward seven countermeasures.

1) Appropriately adjust the production structure and increase currency supply in order to mitigate the contradiction between supply and demand; 2) considerably increase investments in science and technology in order to speed up technological development; 3) develop demand substitutes in order to expand demand; 4) improve the bonus tax system by practicing the graduated system instead of the skipping system [tiao jin zhi 6426 6651 0455]; 5) let banks institute a promisory note system in order to solve the debt chains among enterprises; 6) further invigorate small and collective enterprises; 7) protect the rights and interests of dealers. The director funds system can be tried out so that dealers can have clearly-defined financial powers.

PROTECTING BUSINESS OPERATORS' INTERESTS URGED

[Commentator's article: "Pay Attention To Protecting the Interests of Business Operators"]

[Text] Since the reform of the economic structure began, we have accumulated a great deal of experience in adopting the system of contracted economic responsibilities as a form of reform and the results in implementing this system are very good. Now, we should continue to push this aspect of the reform forward.

The key to excellent results in using the system of contracted economic responsibilities is that the enthusiasm of workers and staff members at various levels of contracted enterprises is generally aroused because their responsibilities, rights, and interests are integrated, thus ensuring that the state will get the major share of interests, the enterprise the medium share, and the workers and staff members the minor share and that the business operators, as leaders of a contract, will also have corresponding interests.

What is worth noting is that because no clear lines of demarcation between unhealthy trends and the appropriate interests of business operators have been made and because of the influence of the force of old habits, some business operators have not yet got their due interests. They dare not take the bonuses or payments which they are entitled to according to the contract and some of them have to equally share their bonuses and payments with others. This practice is harmful to arousing the enthusiasm of business operators who are chiefly responsible for a contract. Therefore, while stressing giving due consideration to the interests of the state, the enterprise, and the workers and staff members, enterprises, departments, and units run on a contract basis should pay great attention to and protect the interests of business operators. This is very important to pushing forward, developing, and perfecting the system of contracted economic responsibilities and to increasing economic results.

To stress paying attention to and protecting the interests of business operators fully conforms to the principle of distribution according to work. Business operators assume important and even legal responsibilities for a contract. This involves risks. It is precisely because of this that they often have to make great mental and physical efforts, surmount dangers and overcome difficulties, and work much harder than others before they can invigorate the enterprise. So long as they exert themselves to the utmost and undertake responsibilities, it is entirely reasonable and legal for them to get more payment and bonuses than others in accordance with the contract.

They are entirely different from the leaders of a few enterprises who abused their power, embezzled part of the bonuses which should have been given to the workers and staff members, or promoted themselves when others should have been promoted instead. Besides, we should also consider that our country was under feudal rule for a long time. After the liberation, the practice of "eating out of the same big pot" lasted for several decades. Therefore, the influence of the force of old habits is very great. Some people often look at the appropriate interests of business operators in the light of egalitarianism and feel upset when business operators get more than they do and consider it unreasonable. Egalitarian ideas are serious obstacles to the development of reforms at present. Our broad masses of workers and staff members should look at and understand the importance of protecting the interests of business operators from an angle which is conducive to the development of the socialist commodity economy and the social productive forces and should not accommodate ourselves to or go along with egalitarian ideas. Otherwise, it will be difficult for reforms to develop smoothly and and it will also be difficult to attain the goal of increasing the income of the workers and staff members.

To stress paying attention to and protecting the rights of business operators and to stress scrupulously abiding by and fulfilling contracts, giving awards and meting out punishments accordingly show the solemnity and continuity of our party's and country's economic principles and also show that "economic contracts" are protected by laws and have legal solemnity. Therefore, contracts must be fulfilled irrespective of whether the amounts of bonuses or payments prescribed in them are large or small. If a contract is not fulfilled simply because the amounts of bonuses or payments prescribed in it are large or if no one dares to take these bonuses or payments for the same reason, where then is the solemnity and continuity of policies and laws? Will contracts then become mere scraps of paper? Of course, this also involves the question of whether a contract was properly signed. If a contract was actually improperly signed, it can be revised by parties concerned and it may have to be legally notarized again. This alone is the solemn attitude we should take to constantly perfect the system of contracted economic responsibilities.

In short, we must pay attention to and protect the interests of business operations. If business operators are only obliged to undertake responsibilities but are not entitled to appropriate payments, who then will be interested in conducting reforms or taking up work on a contract basis? This will be extremely harmful to reforms and we should pay attention to correcting such practices.

COMMENTATOR URGES EFFICIENCY IN LEADING ORGANS

[XINHUA commentator: "All Leading Organs Should Improve Their Operating Efficiency"]

[Text] Beijing, 22 Jun (XINHUA) — Dilatoriness and inefficiency have been the chronic malady of the leading organs of many departments and regions. This malady, which obstructs the normal implementation of the general and specific policies of the party and the state, and which affects efficient settlement of real issues, is very harmful to the economy and social order.

In recent years, many units have thought of some measures and made great efforts to solve this problem. However, the results are invariably insignificant. One important reason is the overstaffing of many of our departments. Their operations and responsibilities are so meticulously divided that they handicap each other. Unless such a system is reformed, it will be hard to change these organs' conduct and improve their operating efficiency. However, this does not necessarily mean that absolutely nothing can be done to improve their conduct and operating efficiency before their organization has been restructed. Earnestly implementing the guideline set for th by the CPC Central Committee early this year that "central organs themselves must be the first to pay attention to efficiency," the State Planning commission recently made great efforts to improve its leadership, and its operating tempo has been noticeably quickened. In April and May, the commission finished handling between 60 and 70 percent of all the documents it had to handle, as opposed to only 37 percent in January. This should have served as an enlightening example for us. Facts show that, although it is difficult for our organizations to improve their operating efficiency because of irrational structural set-ups, there are also actual conditions under which efficiency can be subjectively improved. The State Planning Commission's operation involves all trades and professions and all regions, and has always been highly complex. Since its operation is related to many other quarters, it should have been quite difficult for it to improve its efficiency. Its good experience in taking the initiative to improve its conduct can be emulated by the leading organs of other departments and regions. To achieve this, there are two essential requirements:

First, like the State Planning Commission, we should encourage the masses to expose problems within their own organizations, and should not cover up shortcomings or evade problems. Only when we realize our deficiencies will be able to improve. It is impossible for us to improve efficiency if we dare not confront the problem of inefficiency.

Second, like the State Planning Commission, we should have the proper remedy for our problems. This means that, to deal with defects affecting operating efficiency such as nuclear division of work, irresponsibility, shifting responsibility onto others, and blaming each other, as well as problems regarding the system, measures, and supervision, we must take corrective measures, do actual work, and pay attention to actual results.

In short, comrades of the State Planning Commission have made an important step in improving their organization's operating efficiency. We hope the leading organs of other departments and regions will also examine their actional situation, see where they lag behind, and work hard to improve their operating efficiency.

VENTURETECH PRESIDENT ON VENTURE CAPITAL

["Excerpts" of report delivered by Zhang Xiaobin, president of China Venturetech Investment Corporation, at "recently held" international conference in Beijing]

[Text] China Venturetech Investment Corporation is a financial institution affiliated with the State Science and Technology Commission and the People's Bank of China.

It is dedicated to assisting research and development of technological ventures by providing investment and managerial support to small and medium-sized companies and to new businesses.

Our targets are smaller companies and new start-ups, regardless whether they are owned by the State, collectives or even individuals. We aim at companies having difficulty gaining access to normal financing channels.

Our investment focus is information technology, micro-electronics, biotechnology, new materials and other forms of emerging technology.

We also stand ready to help existing companies up grade their technology.

Utilizing venture capital investment in China is a new avenue for promoting technological innovation and its commercialization. It aims not only to diversify the nation's financing mechanism, but also to inject an entrepreneurial spirit into industries too timid or too financially strapped to undertake risks.

Conceptually, the venture capital industry is at the centre of capitalism, determining what new business will start and what new ideas will receive financing. That is the traditional view in most Western countries. But I think the concept may be also viewed in a broader sense.

Venture capital is a mechanism that can be applied wherever it is needed. If it can be applied will in other countries. It also can be applied in China. A venture capital company may be geared to increase profits, but it also increases the overall wealth of a society. That is true of every country.

China must introduce and adapt this mechanism to its wun national needs for several reasons:

— Venture capital encourages businesses to take more risks in technological research and development.

It is a generally accepted rule that the greater the technological advancement, the higher the financial risk. Research and development institutions must orient their work towards commercial uses rather than confining themselves to pure academic pursuits.

In China, for many years, a considerable number of smaller innovations failed to attract development money. If the requried investment is too small, the banking system, which is geared to large-scale lending, is often slow to respond.

Conventional banks in China usually ignore an entrepreneurs promising idea, especially in sophisticated technological areas. Lack of qualified professionals make banks reluctant or even imcompetent to deal with the complications of highly technical ventures.

Many innovative projects originate as spin-offs from the work of individuals and organizations having no access to normal government financing channels. Hence, nobody wants to take responsibility for guaranteeing their borrowing.

-- Venture capital spurs downstream application of proven high-tech innovations.

Small and medium-sized companies are encouraged to become actively involved in high-tech development and their results are valuable in upgrading the technologies of outmoded industries.

-- Venture capital provides a way to channel surplus funds into high-tech production.

There is always extra budgetary money in some organizations, including large industries. Funnelling that money to support technological innovation would have significant impact on the nation's modernization. Such organizations, once educated in the venture capital mechanism, would welcome a way to put surplus money to work for them.

Some critical issues related to the investment climate in China must be fully understood.

One critical question is how venture capital can exist from mature start-ups in the absence of a capital market. Investors in Chana must have other ways to get their money back, ways suitable to Chinese circumstances.

Although great changes have taken place in the last few years, people still tend to put job security ahead of entrepreneurial creativity. Job mobility simply has never existed. Universities and research institutions often stand isolated from industry. Spin-offs from either universities or large industries are limited.

China does not have a cash-rich climate that encourages long-term commitment of ventures money. Nor is there a venture capital industrial sector where investors may share risks and expectations by pooling investment.

Other factors also set China apart form Western countries. Domestic markets are fragmented with irrational entry and exit barriers. Lack of flexibility makes corporations passive in undertaking new ventures or diversification.

Venture capital in China must, therefore, develop in a uniquely Chinese way. For example, in addition to equity investment, a normal procedure in Western countries, we have to broaden business scope and design investment pattern through such means as leasing, trust funds, returns on sales royalties and after-tax profits.

China faces severe challenges -- highly competitive world markets, rapid changes in technology, emerging economies of other Third World countries and a worldwide boom in the venture capital industry. These challenges cannot be met with traditional, rigid approaches. Venture capital investment provides a strategic alternative in the nationwide reform of science and technology management.

XINHUA PUBLISHES 'SUMMARY' OF CHEN YUN'S WORKS

[Capitalized passages denote those passages designated by XINHUA to be published in boldface]

[Text] Beijing, 14 Jun (XINHUA) -- Summary of the Third Volume of Chen Yun's Works.

Incorporated in this volume of selected works are 56 of Comrade Chen Yun's major works during the period from September 1956 through September 1985, of which 44 are published for the first time. The main contents of this collection of selected works are Comrade Chen Yun's expositions on socialist economic construction, the reform of the economic structure, and the ideological, workstyle, and organizational construction of the party in power following the basic completion of socialist transformation.

This volume of collected works can be roughly divided into two parts based on the course of history:

WORKS IN THE FIRST PART cover the period from September 1956 through March 1962. This is a period when the socialist transformation of our country was basically completed and we began socialist construction on a large scale but suffered serious setbacks. Comrade Chen Yun, then vice chairman of the CPC Central Committee, head of the Central Five-Person Group in Charge of Economic Work (later redesignated the Central Financial and Economic Group), and vice premier, set forth many important economic views and put forward many feasible suggestions in light of the changed situation and the new problems that had cropped up. These views and suggestions, as is known to all, played a significant role in consolidating the tremendous progress in economic construction achieved by us in the period immedite after the PRC's founding, in overcoming the serious difficulties at that time, and in regarding the initiative. Twenty-seven works during that period are incorporated into this volume.

"The New Problems After Socialist Transformation are basically Solved", the first article of this volume, is a speech by the writer to the Eighth National Congress of the Chinese Communist Party. The speech pointed out malpractices in our rapidly developing socialist economic structure and their social and historical causes, and put forward several measures for improving business relations between industrial and commercial enterprises, the forms of production and operation, market management, price policy, and planned management methods, measures aimed at stimulating the economy while upholding the planned economy. At the end of the speech, he elaborated on an overall design for an improved socialist economic structure: State and collective enterprises make up the main body of industry and commerce with a number of individually managed enterprises playing a supplementary role; planned production as the main body of industrial and agricultural production with free production in accordance with market changes and within the limits permitted by the state plan playing a supplementary role; and, within the socialist unified market, the state market plays the principal role while the free market, under the leadership of the state, plays a supplementary role within certain limits.

In line with the aforementioned design and after thorough research and investigation, the writer drafted the following three documents for the State Council: "Regulations on Improving the Industrial Management System", "Regulations on Improving the Commercial Management System", and "Regulations for Improving the Financial Management System." This was the first attempt made by the party and government to improve the socialist economic management system. The major contents of this attempt to improve the management system are: Under the unified state plan, delegate, to a certain extent, power to local governments and enterprises to adopt measures that suit local conditions and delegate a number of enterprises affiliated with central authorities to be directly managed by local authorities; introduce a system whereby a ratio between local expenditures and revenues is adopted and held unchanged for a 5-year period; with regard to commodity prices, introduce a system of unified leadership with different levels holding different responsbilities; reduce the scope of mandatory quotas assigned by the State Council; under the condition that the number of workers and staff members is not increased, enterprises are allowed to make organizational and personnel readjustment on their own; the state and enterprises share revenues at a fixed ratio and hold this ratio unchanged for a 3-year period, and so on and so forth. All these measures were designed to solve the most pressing problems of that time, namely, too much concentration of power and too little delegation of authority in the management system caused by some historical reasons, so as to mobilize the initiative of localities and enterprises and to adapt to the reality of China, which has a big population, vast area, and varied conditions in different parts of the country. Comrade Chen Yun's speech to the Third Session of the Eighth CPC Central Committee entitled "The Problems That We Should Pay Attention to After the Economic Structure Is Improved" points out that after some central powers are delegated. The work of overall balancing in the country should be strengthened instead of being weakened.

The success achieved by China's First 5-Year Plan attracted worldwide attention. While the success provided precious experiences for China's economic planning, it also taught us a lesson or two. Because of impetuosity in our economic work during the 1953-56 period, certain work was done hastily, and some quotas were too high, giving no regard to whether or not they could be fulfilled. This caused serious shortages in the supply of means of production and means of living. Thus, Comrade Chen Yun and other central leading comrades, who were then in charge of the nation's financial and economic work, took timely measures to correct the mistakes -- measures such as initiating a movement to increase production and conserve resources, appropriately curtailing the investment in capital construction, and drawing up plans for controlling society's purchasing power. They also set forth the principle that economic construction should neither be conservative nor rash, but must proceed steadily with overall balance.

The Scale of construction Should Be Compatible With National Strength, the talk Comrade Chen Yun made in January 1957 at a meeting of secretaries of party committees from all provinces, autonomous regions, and municipalities directly under the central government represents the way he correctly summed up the positive and negative experiences gained in economic construction during that period. He pointed out that whether or not the scale of construction was in line with the state's financial and material resources determined whether or not economic development was stable. As for how to guard against the danger that the national strength might be exceeded by the scale of construction, he proposed that the following guidelines be followed.

First, not only should there be a balance between revenue and expenditures and between credit and repayments, there should also be a little surplus. Second, material resources must be rationally distributed and utilized according to priorities. This means that when there is a shortage in the supply of raw and semifinished materials, first pirority must be given to meeting the minimum requirements of those departments which produce daily necessities, and only the surplus should be used on capital construction. Third, the people's purchasing power should be improved, but the extent of improvement must be in line with the availability of consumer goods. Fourth, people should not only heed the balance between the scale of capital construction projects and availability of financial and material resources for a single year, they should also look ahead and behind, making sure that continuity can be maintained, in order to avoid losses caused by sudden rises or falls. Fifth, importance must be attached to the nation's agricultural development, which plays a significant role in determining the scale of China's economic construction. In that speech, Comrade Chen Yun also pointed out that it was necessary to pay great attention to the urgent task of studying the proportional development of the national economy.

The two articles -- Attach Great Attention to Food Supply, and the Principal Measures for Solving the Problems of Food and Clothing -- were written in connection with the shortage of food and clothing, discussing the importance of developing agricultural production and increasing food supply, and setting forth the policy of developing chemical industry and building water conservancy projects. Comrade Chen seriously pointed out that the Second 5-Year Plan should be drawn up with a view to producing enough to wear and eat. He said that unless it was based on producing enough to eat and to wear, economic construction would not be reliable and it would have to start from the very beginning all over again.

In view of the shortage of pork and other nonstaple food, the articles Measures for Solving Shortages in Pork and Other Nonstaple Food; Do Commercial Work Properly; Heighten the Political Concept, and the Concept of the Masses and Production in Commercial Work; Answering a XINHUA Reporter's Questions on Commodity Prices on the Market; and The Problems of Vegetable Supply Must Be Properly Solved, set forth the basic policy that both economic construction and the people's livelihood must be taken into consideration, as well as specific measures that must be taken in order to promote production of nonstaple food and enliven their circulation.

The "Great Leap Forward" and the movement for People's communes, which started in 1958, caused widespread, serious "left" mistakes mainly characterized by high quotas, arbitrary and impracticable directions, proneness to boasting and exaggeration, and "a wind of communization." This disrupted normal economic order and resulted in a serious disproportion among the main sectors of the national economy. Quickly discovering the serious problems caused by the "Great Leap Forward," Comrade Chen Yun on several occasions expressed his differing opinions with the then high quotas for steel, coal, grain, and cotton and made tremendous efforts within his power to correct the mistakes of the "Great Leap Forward" and to reduce losses caused by these mistakes.

"A Letter to Comrades of the Central Financial and Economic Group" was written in April 1959, with a view toward easing up the shortages of supplies on the market and creating a realistic national economic plan.

In the letter, the following five measures were suggested to ease up the shortage of supplies on the market: 1) It is necessary to economize on grain. The problem of food has not yet been solved in our country. When the supply of grain is adequate, the country remains tranquil. When grain is in short supply, the situation in the market becomes tense. 2) It is necessary to organize the supply of pork, chickens, ducks, and fish. Efforts should be made to raise pigs, chickens, and ducks, and the state, the collective, and the individual may do so at the same time. At present, however, state farms and people's communes do not have sufficient experience in this regard, so it is most reliable for scattered peasant households to raise pigs, chickens, or ducks with quick results. 3) Special arrangements should be made for the production of daily necessities. Former handicraft cooperatives should be organized to engage in their original trades. In name, they may remain state factories or cooperative factories but should practice independent accounting and be responsible for their own profits or losses. 4) It is necessary to carefully reduce the more than 10 million workers overrecruited in 1958 and to make arrangements for them to settle down in rural areas in order to cut down the present purchasing power. 5) Priority should be given to making arrangements for transporting materials to the market.

"The Question of Fulfilling the Iron and Steel Targets" and "A Letter to Comrade Mao Zedong on the Iron and Steel Targets" were two reports submitted to the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and Comrade Mao Zedong by Comrade Chen Yun, whom Comrade Mao Zedong asked to lead the Central Financial and Economic Group, after making a thorough investigation and study. The reports advocated reducing the 1959 target for steel from 16.5 million metric tons, which was set by the Seventh Plenary Session of the Eighth CPC Central Committee, to 13 million metric tons, a matter which had a bearing on the economic situation as a whole. In correcting the mistake of being impetuous and rash in economic construction, the reports set forth the principle of retreating to a reliable position and advancing after standing firm.

After the Lushan meeting in the summer of 1959, a struggle "against right deviation" was mistakenly carried out throughout the party. This struggle politically did serious harm to the democratic life of the party from the central to the basic level and economically prolonged the mistakes of the "Great Leap Forward." Besides, there were natural disasters, and the Soviet Government tore up their agreements and contracts with us. As a result, our national economy encountered serious difficulties and had to start a phase of readjustment in 1961.

To stabilize the overall situation and surmount grave economic difficulties, Comrade Chen Yun successively made a number of speeches at working conferences of the party Central Committee and a special foreign conference, such as "Some Leeway Should Be Left in Making Arrangements for Market Supplies," "Mobilize Urban Residents To Go the Countryside," and "Do a Good Job in Foreign Trade." At the same time, he also drew up a document entitled "Accelerate the Development of the Nitrogenous Fertilizer Industry" for the CPC Central Committee. In addition to stressing the continued readjustment of the party's basic rural policies, the speeches and document also expounded at length on measures the party and the government must resolutely adopt, including measures to import grain, reduce the number of workers and staff members, mobilize urban residents to go to the countryside, accelerate the development of the nitrogenous fertilizer industry to support agriculture, and sell expensive candies and pastries. All this was aimed at resuming and increasing agricultural production, alleviating the contradiction between the social purchasing power and the supply of materials, withdrawing some of the currency from circulation, and stabilizing the market.

In the article "The Investigation Conducted in the Rural Areas of Qingpu County", Comrade Chen Yun cited numerous convincing facts to explain the important issue of reinstating and developing agricultural and sideline production. He noted that even sows should be privately owned by the peasants, that crop farming should be planned in a way appropriate to the local conditions, and that the peasants' privately-owned plots should be as large as what was allowed by the regulations prescribed by the central authorities. To further arouse the peasants' production enthusiasm in order to deal with the problems encountered in agricultural development at that time, Comrade Chen Yun, after conducting the investigation in Qingpu County and in other areas, also proposed that production quotas should be fixed for each household. The correct proposal, however, was misinterpreted, and he was erronously criticized.

The article "How Can We Have A More Correct Understanding" discusses the viewpoint that objective facts must be understood "from all angles," and by making "comparisons" "over and over again." In that article, Comrade Chen Yun reiterated that leading organs should spend at least 90 percent of their time conducting investigation and study, and not more than 10 percent of their time making decisions. This was the way of thinking Comrade Chen Yun advocated for correcting the "leftist" mistakes in those days. In that article, Comrade Chen Yun also underscored the importance of giving full scope to democracy and constantly making criticism and self-criticism. He pointed out that inner-party life had not been normal for years, and that it was extremely dangerous to harbor the idea that "we should say only 30 percent of what is in our mind to whomever we talk to, and we should never say anything without reserve to anybody." He said: The party does not mind if anybody has said anything wrong, it does mind if nobody wants to say anything. Leading cadres must be humble, and they should make a special effort to listen to negative comments.

During a meeting of members of leading party groups of ministries and commissions under the State Council in February 1962, Comrade Chen Yun made a speech entitled "The Current Financial and Economic Situation, and Measures for Surmounting Difficulties". With a serious scientific approach, he analyzed the extent of China's financial and economic difficulties, charted the course for combating problems, and pointed out what should be done to cope with the situation. The speech became a document guiding the country to achieve a fundamental improvement in the financial and economic situation. Following the meeting, the CPC Central Committee instructed that the speech be printed and distributed to all party members. Subsequently the document played an extremely important role in unifying the thinking of a vast number of cadres and in increasing their confidence in surmounting difficulties.

In his "Speech at the Meeting of the Central Financial and Economic Group" delivered in March the same year, Comrade Chen Yun further noted that the issues of agricultural and market needs were big issues having a close bearing on over 500 million peasants and over 100 million urbanites. He pointed out that it should be a major national policy to solve this issue, adding that, for the sake of agricultural and market needs, a little "sacrifice" in other areas was absolutely necessary. Within a given year, he said, raw materials should be distributed in such a way that agricultural and market needs must first be met, and industrial production should be planned according to how much raw materials were still available. The industrial sector must also consider its needs for maintenance and repair, construction of support facilities, and simple reproduction.

And only when the needs of the production plan of that year were met should there be capital construction, whose scale should be adjusted on the basis of the availability of resources. Not only should this be the case in that year alone, it should be the case for all subsequent years, so that the people's living conditions could improve year after year. In the light of historical experiences and lessons, Comrade Chen Yun also underscored in that speech the importance of achieving an overall balance in economic development. He said: Overall balance means proportional growth. When we have proportional growth, there will be balance. Without stressing overall balance, economic work can hardly proceed.

WORKS IN THE SECOND PART cover the period from March 1977 through September 1985 -- a period during which the CPC proceeded to restore order and set forth and implement correct ideological, political, and organizational lines following the crushing of the "gang of four." As one of the principal leaders of the party and the state, Comrade Chen Yun in this period put forward many important proposals of far-reaching significance in guiding the party to achieve a great historical transition, restructuring the misguided operations in all economic sectors, expediting socialist modernization and economic reform according to China's actual situation, building a stronger contingent of old, middle-aged, and young cadres, and ensuring good conduct of the ruling party. This volume of selected works contains 29 articles.

"The Two Major Tasks After the Crushing of the '"Gang of Four'" is a written speech Comrade Chen Yun made at a central work conference in March 1977. Aiming at the erroneous "two whatevers" principle upheld by Comrade Hua Guofeng, who was then in charge of operations of the Central Committee, Comrade Chen Yun earnestly proposed that the Central Committee reinstate Comrade Deng Xiaoping and reverse the judgment passed on the Tiananmen incident.

"Upholding the Principle of Correcting All Mistakes" and "Five-Point Opinion on Current Economic Issues" are two Comrade Chen Yun speeches made at a central work conference held before the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. The first speech reaffirmed the fact that the Tiananmen incident was a great mass movement in which hundreds of people in Beijing expressed their grief for Premier Zhou Enlai, opposed the "gang of four," and opposed the criticism of Comrade Deng Xiaoping, pointing out clearly that Comrade Bo Yibo and 60 other comrades were not renegades, that Comrade Peng Dehuai's contributions to the party were significant, and that his ashes should be entombed in the Babaoshan Cemetery of Revolutionaries, and so forth. He also pointed out that Kang Sheng had committed serious mistakes. The discussion and settlement of these significant and wide-ranging political issues greatly expedited the restoration of order, and served as the preparation for thoroughly correcting the "leftist" mistakes committed during and before the "Great Cultural Revolution." As such, they were naturally endorsed by those comrades present at the meeting, and warmly supported by the vast number of cadres and people. In view of the seriously misguided economic development in those days, Comrade Chen Yun proposed in the second speech that 20 million metric tons of food be imported annually over a period of 3 to 5 years so that agricultural production could be resumed and developed step by step after the peasants' needs were met.

He also proposed that foreign industrial projects be introduced into the country gradually, and not simultaneously and hastily, so as to avoid losses caused by recklessness. Politically and economically, the two speeches played a significant role in enhancing the consolidation and development of the fine situation after the crushing of the "gang of four."

The article "Planning and Marketing Issues" was an outline Comrade Chen Yun wrote in March 1979. According to the Marxist principle that socialist economy should develop proportionally according to plan, and on the basis of the experience of socialist states in carrying out economic planning and the actual situation of the development of their productive forces, the article explains that economic planning and market regulation are two essential parts of the socialist period. The first part is the fundamental and principal part; but the second part, although supplementary, is also essential. Comrade Chen Yun pointed out: The main issue lies in the fact that we have yet to consciously realize that these two functions should differ proportionally in different departments.

The article "A Letter on Financial and Economic Work to the Central Authorities," "Persist in Readjusting the National Economy According to the Principle of Proportional Development of Various Sectors," "Economic Construction Should Be Carried Out in a Down-To-Earth Way," and "The Economic Situation Versus Experiences and lessons" point out and analyze the repeated mistakes of rushing into our 1978 economic work and propose that 2 to 3 years be spent on correcting the serious imbalance in the national economy. As a matter of fact, in regard to this question, it is imperative for the party to pay attention at all times to averting and correcting the principal mistake in economic construction -- the "leftist" mistake -- for which we already paid a big price in the past. To this end, Comrade Chen Yun expounded and reiterated in these articles some guiding thoughts for socialist economic construction based on the situation at that time. The first and fundamental point is: Our country has a big population, of which 80 percent is rural. The acreage of arable land is small. The social productive force is at a low level. Our country is poor, and the people's living standards must be improved. This is the basis on which we should formulate the blueprint for our socialist construction. Second, from a farsighted point of view, proportional development is the quickest way of development of the national economy. Putting only steel to the fore was a mistake we once committed; it has been proved that such a practice cannot be carried on for a long time. Third, investment in capital construction should not result in financial deficit. If we resort every year to issuing currency for the purpose of capital construction, there will be an "explosion" [bao zho 3615 3498] after a certain period. Fourth, in proceeding with socialist modernization, we should, in addition to building several big projects, put emphasis on tapping potentials and making innovations in existing enterprises and on transforming them. By doing so, we may seem slow in advance, but in reality we will be making rapid strides. Fifth, we must develop cash crop production and, at the same time, gradually increase our grain output. In no way should we develop cash crop production at the expense of grain production. Grain should still be placed in a primary position. Sixth, utilization of foreign capital and acquisition of new technology are major policies China adopted after it did away with self-imposed seclusion. This policy must be earnestly implemented. In implementing these policies, however, we must remain clear-headed.

That is to say, while still regarding self-reliance as the main orientation, we may make full use of favorable international conditions and accept some foreign loans provided the terms are not disadvantageous to us. In the meantime, we must fully consider whether we are able to pay back the principal and interest of these foreign loans and must invest in projects at home to ensure better use of these loans. We must see to it that our progress in this respect proceeds in an orderly manner. Seventh, we must deem it a major task to find ways to increase our foreign exchange revenue. In this connection, we must give full play to the initiative of all quarters and, at the same time, persist in maintaining unity in dealing with foreign business firms. In a word, "we must let our own people, not foreigners, receive the benefits." Eighth, we have millions of technicians, most of whom were trained after the founding of new China. They are the foundation of our intellectual force, and their role in socialist modernization must be brought into full play. Ninth, the ultimate goal of economic construction is to improve the people's living standards. We must do whatever is good for the people, but should also act in accordance with our capabilities. Tenth, we should make reforms, but our steps should be steady. Since our reforms involve complicated questions, we cannot demand too rapid progress. Reforms should, of course, be based on theoretical studies and economic statistics and forecasts, but it is more important to conduct experiments in some localities from the start and sum up experience from time to time, that is, we must "grope around in order to cross the river," as the saying goes. It is safer to take small steps and move slowly at the beginning. Eleventh, it is good to act in accordance with economic law. Our country's economy is mainly a planned economy. However, state interference is still necessary in many fields within a certain period of time. This kind of practice is centralization. It won't do without such centralization. Without such centralization, things will get muddled up, and reforms will be adversely affected. Twelfth, people are now looking forward to the four modernizations and want the economy to develop rather quickly, but they also ask that there be no more "waste of time and effort by doing useless work." We should keep in mind this requirement while exploring ways to speed up our economic development.

In the article "Several Important Principles for Economic Construction;" "Strengthen and Improve Economic Planning;" and "Several Issues on Achieving the Strategic Targets Set by the 12th Party Congress," Comrade Chen Yun further expounded on the following several major principles for economic construction: First, after the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, conspicuous successes have been achieved in enlivening the economy. However, attention should be paid to preventing the tendency to ignore state planning in the course of enlivening the economy. This resembles the relationship between the bird and the cage. Although we should let the bird fly, it can only fy within the cage, otherwise the bird will fly away. Of course, the size of the cage should be appropriate and should be regularly readjusted according to the need. Second, the overall economic situation dictates that we must feed our 1 billion people, and carry out socialist construction. The state will be hopeless if production barely offsets consumption; the state is hopeful only when it retains the capacity for national construction after feeding the people. Third, during the Sixth and Seventh 5-Year Periods, efforts should be made to streamline operations in various quarters and prepare to launch a number of mainstay construction projects.

The economy may again become chaotic if we are too eager for success and hastily launch capital construction projects. Construction projects should be launched systematically and in a down-to-earth manner. Contrary to what some people think, haste will slow us down. This is a lesson we have learned over the years. Fourth, it is absolutely necessary for the central government to set aside a budget for strengthening construction in energy, communications and transportation, scientific research, education, and other weak links, and for ensuring the needs of the major construction projects. Such major construction projects are in the interest of the whole situation. Small, local projects should also be launched, but priority must be given to key, national projects. In other words, the part must be subordinated to the whole. The national simply does not have the resources for all large and small projects if they are launched simultaneously.

In the article "Written Report to the 3d Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee," Comrade Chen Yun reiterated: The current socialist economic reform is no less significant than the transformation of capitalist businesses during the 1950's. While the transformation of private businesses aimed at eliminating exploitation, the ongoing reform is to smash the system of "eating from the same big pot." "Eating from the same big pot" is essentially an egalitarian system under which people who do not work are entitled to the fruits of labor of those who work. Smashing this "big pot" will greatly arouse the enthusiasm of workers, peasants, intellectuals, and cadres, and will once again greatly liberate China's productive forces. Chen Yun added: "China's current economy is much larger and more complex than it was in the 1950's. Many methods useful in the 1950's are no longer applicable today."

In the article "Several Opinions on Drafting 'The Resolution on Certain Questions in the History of Our Party Since the Founding of the People's Republic of China'," Comrade Chen Yun pointed out that it is urgent for all party members to make an effort to study Marxist philosophy and party history. He said: The reason why we made mistakes in some work after the founding of the Republic was because we ignored the principle of seeking truth from facts. Therefore it is of fundamental significance to encourage party members, cadres, and young people to study philosophy and some history. We should pay special attention to this matter today, tomorrow, and in the years to come.

In the articles "Speech at the First Plenary Session of the Central Discipline Inspection Commission;" "The Issue of the Ruling Party's Conduct Is an Issue Concerning the Party's Survival"; and "Speech at the 2d Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee," Comrade Chen Yun expounded on the issue of the improvement of the ruling party's conduct. Elevating the issue of the ruling party's conduct to the level of the party's survival, Comrade Chen Yun stressed in those articles that the basic tasks of the party's discipline inspection departments are to safeguard party regulations and laws, and improve party conduct. He pointed out that, in the course of restructuring the economic system, the questions of "liberalizing" party regulations and party discipline do not exist. He said: After assuming national power, the party is now in control of the leadership in all quarters, from the central departments to the grass-root units, and from enterprises and institutions to production teams, and party members can seek personal gains with all types of power in their control.

While the overwhelming majority of party members refuse to seek personal gains, a significant number of party members have also made mistakes, and even broken the law, by seeking personal gains. If we do not harshly punish those who abuse their power and seek personal gains, and if we do not stop, or cannot effectively stop, this gust of ill wind, party conduct will degenerate and the party will lose popular support. He added: While implementing the correct policy of opening to the outside world, we must also watch out for the negative influences of this policy. The current situation shows that we have not done enough in guarding against the negative influence.

In view of the historical lessons, Comrade Chen Yun has on many occasions after the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee stressed the need to reinstate and uphold the principles of democratic centralism, saying that the most important job of the party is to create a lively political atmosphere where party members can have peace of mind. He pointed out in the article "Establishing the Central Secretariat Is an Important Measure of the Party" that there should be both democracy and centralism under the system of democratic centralism. He said: It is not bad that different opinions are permitted in a party organization at any level. When different opinions are allowed, everybody will be more careful and will do their work more rationally. When debates are permitted among people with different opinions, there will be fewer mistakes. It is bad that only one person has a say, or that we count on only one person. This is something concerning democracy. However, we also need centralism, which means that the minority should submit to the majority, and that all party members should submit to the Central Committee, otherwise nothing can be accomplished.

In the articles "It Is an Urgent Matter To Promote and Train Middle-Aged and Young Cadres;" "Promote Tens of Thousands of Middle-Aged and Young Cadres"; and "Speech at the 12th National Party Congress", Comrade Chen Yun elaborated on the issue of the training of cadres. In view of the ageing of veteran cadres and the temporary shortage of successors inside and outside the party, as well as the painful experiences of selecting successors, Comrade Chen Yun explained time and again that it is a pressing matter of the party and the state to train and use tens of thousands of middle-aged and young cadres who have political integrity and ability. Regarding the structure of the contingency of cadres; he proposed that there should be first, second, and third echelons of cadres. Thus, building a contingent of cadres with cadres of different echelons has become a major decision of regarding the party's organizational construction. On promoting cadres, he stressed: While we must on the one hand have the courage to speed up promoting middle-aged and young cadres, we must on the other hand make sure that they are politically qualified. Of these two requirements, political integrity and ability, political integrity is more improtant. This is to say that we should promote those who have strong party spirit, who are upright, and who dare to uphold principles. None of those who are capable but who lack political integrity should be promoted.

He urged veteran cadres to uphold lofty ideals, attach greatest importance to the party and state cause, take the lead in vacating their posts, let the large numbers of middle-aged and young cadres shoulder the heavy burden of their posts, and always be ready to advise and perform the duties of passing on experience to them, assisting them, and setting an example for them.

In the two articles "Spiritual and Material Construction Should Be Attended to at the Same Time;" and "It Is Imperative To Stop the Phenomenon of Ignoring Spiritual Construction," Comrade Chen Yun discussed the inseparable relationship between socialist material construction and spiritual construction. He pointed out that all comrades in the party must attach great importance to and correct the acutally existing common phenomenon of ignoring spiritual construction, and that the ruling party's conduct, heightening Communist Party members' political consciousness, and firmly preserving the purity of communism.

With specific objectives in mind, the article "Speech at the National CPC Conference" stressed the following: the contingent of cadres must preserve its echelon structure; food production must still be attended to; socialist economy must be planned and proportional; it is necessary to intensify ideological and political work and safeguard the authority of the party's ideological and political work departments; and upholding democratic centralism is a principle prescribed in the party Constitution. Commenting on the issue that socialist economy must be planned and proportional, Comrade Chen Yun reiterated that planned economy should play the leading role and market regulation the supporting role. He pointed put: There are mandatory plans and guidance plans. While these are two different types of plans, they should employ all types of economic regulatory means in a planned manner. A guidance plan is not the same as market regulation. Market regulation means that production is not planned, but is carried out according to changes in supply and demand on the market. In other words, it is regulation without a specific course. Planning is the principal basis of macroeconomic control. Only when there is effective macroeconomic control can microeconomic activities be invigorated in an orderly manner. All these discussions are of realistic guiding significance for China's current socialist construction and economic reform.

The last part of the volume has also included four important articles Comrade Chen Yun wrote during the New Democratic Revolutionary Period. These four articles, which were discovered not long ago, are: "Transmittal Outlines of the Political Bureau's Enlarged Zunyi Conference"; "Late at Night One Day'; "Persist in the Struggle in the Bastion in Southern Manchuria'; and "Cadres' Children Should Never Act Like Heroes' Children." According to time sequence, these articles should be incorporated in Volume I. The readjustment will be made in the second printing.

JILIN LEADERS PROPOSE MEASURES TO CHECK MALPRACTICES

SK160810 Changchun Jilin Provincial Service in Mandarin 2100 GMT 15 Jun 86

[Text] On the afternoon of 13 June, leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee put forward four demands concerning the issue of how to check the malpractices cropping up in specific industries and trades after hearing reports given by the relevant departments and bureaus with regard to the measures and results scored in checking the malpractices cropping up in specific industries and trades.

Leading comrades of the provincial CPC Committee stated: In order to achieve a fundamental turn for the better in party style, it is imperative to realistically check the malpractices characteristic of specific industries and trades. This constitutes current important work in straightening out party style, which includes the following tasks:

1. Efforts should be made to strengthen ideological education and to earnestly conduct education on serving the people and carrying out the party's fundamental targets among the working personnel of various industries and trades. The party's policies should be realistically carried out by the working personnel of various circles at all levels who have a direct relationship with the masses. Therefore, what they say or do reflects the party's policies and the relationship between the party and the masses. Efforts should be made to enhance ideological education among them, and, on the basis of upgrading ideological consciousness, to extensively carry out the education on [passage indistinct].

2. A good job should be done in fostering typical cases. Efforts should be made to vigorously deal with major and serious cases on the one hand and to grasp typical cases of seriously violating the law and discipline and of seeking personal gain by taking advantage of power on the other to draw lessons in teaching the masses. Efforts should be made to grasp advanced cases on the other hand. Industries and trades should regard their advanced cases as examples in encouraging and supporting the people to go all out to make progress.

3. Efforts should be made to uphold the principle of conducting reforms, to implement policies, and to establish or improve regulations and rules. Economic departments should enforce economic responsibility systems with contract agreements as the main content in order to closely integrate individual interests with the state interest. Newly established economic departments should also establish responsibility systems in order to enable everyone to know what they should do and what they should not do and to enable the working personnel to (?have rules to follow).

4. Efforts should be made to enhance leadership over work. In checking malpractices among various industries and trades, the party committees of various localities should unify their leadership over this work. The higher-level departments in charge of professional work should also enhance their leadership over work. The management of various industries and trades should not only govern the business, but also should govern personnel affairs. The managerial personnel should not only grasp professional work but also should grasp ideological work and the work style of their own industries and trades. [passage indistinct] Leadership should show concern over the working personnel in various fields. Provincial-level organs should set examples in this regard for all units throughout the province. Activities of studying the principle of leadership representing service and of inspecting the implementation of the principle should also be deeply carried out.

JILIN SCORES ACHIEVEMENTS IN RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION

[Text] Party committees at all levels throughout the province have scored marked achievements in launching the party rectification drive at the township-town level since the beginning of 1986 thanks to enhanced leadership and effective measures. They have dealt with some problems in a down-to-earth manner.

Since the beginning of the drive, localities throughout the province have firmly grasped the problem of seeking personal gain by taking advantage of power committed by personnel of townships and towns, and have concentrated on checking the malpractices of spending public funds on giving receptions and gifts to guests and conducting extravagant drinking and eating. They have also examined and recovered arbitrarily distributed bonuses, clothes, and foodstuffs, as well as long-standing arrears in public funds spent by the cadres at the township-town level; and have investigated and checked the malpractices of making things difficult for the masses and extorting money from the masses by taking advantage of specific powers, and the problems of apportioning expenses arbitrarily, imposing fines arbitrarily, collecting funds arbitrarily, conducting price hikes arbitrarily, and of making job arrangements for children and relatives by taking advantage of positions and power. Meanwhile, cities and countries have paid attention to investigating and checking the malpractices committed by cadres at the township-town level, such as occupying excess housing floor space and houses and holding extravagant wedding parties and funeral services. They have investigated and dealt with a large number of economic crimes of embezzlement, robbery, speculation and profiteering.

In launching the party rectification drive at the township-town level, localities throughout the province have further unified their understanding on the drive to conduct reforms in the rural areas, straightened out the guiding ideology on rural work, and have enhanced their consciousness in making a success of conducting second-stage reforms in the rural areas.

Through education conducted by various localities throughout the province on party rectification, leading cadres at the township-town level have further learned the concept of leadership representing service, overcome their bureaucratic work style, and have begun to change their organs from administrative ones to ones in charge of service and guidance. The broad masses of cadres at the township-town level have further enhanced their devotion to the revolutionary cause and fostered a stronger idea of serving the people. They have scored better achievements in helping the masses deal with practical problems in production and livelihood by going deep into the grass-roots-level units.

Through conducting party rectification work, localities throughout the province have also promoted the drive to conduct reforms and economic work. By regarding the party rectification drive as the motive force, townships and towns throughout the province have accelerated the pace of conducting second-stage reforms in the rural areas and carrying out economic work. They carried out spring farming in a down-to-earth manner and better fulfilled the tasks of signing fixed-quota grain purchase contracts, repairing or building water conservancy facilities, and implementing the family planning targets. Since spring, the province's temperature has been on the low side, which has caused serious disasters. Townships and towns throughout the province have organized the broad masses of peasants to plunge into the struggle against the disaster and to adopt active measures to examine seedlings and replant crops in order to reduce losses as much as possible. Those that have begun to engage in the party rectification work of examination and comparison and in later-stage work of party rectification have found their shortcomings in ideology, systems, and work by analyzing and studying the problems cropping up in the drive to conduct reforms in the rural areas.

They have formulated plans aimed at dealing with these problems. In particular, many townships and towns, in line with their actual situation, have earnestly made arrangements for fulfilling the Seventh 5-Year Plan for the rural areas and placed their work emphasis on gradually developing a diversified economy, township-and-town-run enterprises, and commodity production. By proceeding from their actual situation, they have also made the best use of the current situation in readjusting their production structure in order to accelerate the pace of developing a diversified economy and township-and town-run enterprises.

LIAONING: SHENYANG WORKERS BUY STOCK IN COMPANIES

OW021630 Beijing XINHUA in English 1426 GMT 2 Jun 86

[Text] Shenyang, June 2 (XINHUA) -- Bai Shuyu, a woman working at the Shenyang small-compressor plant, has bought 200 yuan worth of stocks in the factory. She said: "Although my holding is small, the plant's fate and mine are now linked more closely." She is one of 937 workers who have become shareholders in the plant. Their stocks have a total value of 200,000 yuan.

In Shenyang, capital of Liaoning Province, 20 collectively-owned factories are now encouraging workers to buy shares in their own factories.

In China, thre are three types of enterprises: the state-owned factories, collectively-owned enterprises and privately-owned businesses. In the past collectively-owned enterprises were managed just like the state-owned ones. Now the new system introduced aims at restoring the original nature of the enterprises.

An official of the city's machine-building industrial department said they now planned to spread the system to all their 216 collectively-owned factories over the next three years. The official said the shareholding scheme was encouraging the labor force to work harder for economic success.

The city authority began to pilot the new reform at two factories last June. They divided the shares into three types: state shares, collective shares and private shares. Under the scheme, if an enterprise achieves good economic results, workers enjoy share dividends from both collective and private shares, while state revenue is also boosted. If an enterprise incurs a loss, the workers earn no dividend, and the factory must make up the loss from future profits.

With both the new source of funds and working zeal, the small-compressor plant set up three laboratories and upgraded products within six months. The workers also made 96 suggestions aimed at improving economic results. The plant's industrial output value totalled 5,730,000 yuan with a profit of 600,000 yuan last year, 24.5 and 26.6 percent respectively more than in the previous year.

Local officials say the effective ownership of the enterprises remains in the hands of the state and collectives, as they hold an overwhelming majority of shares.

GANSU PARTY LEADER STRESSES SUPPORT FOR REFORMERS

HK190357 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 18 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Provincial CPC Committee Deputy Secretary Hou Zongbin pointed out at a 18 June forum in Wuwei City to some rural reformers and able hands that in getting rich, leaders at all levels must take a firm and clear-cut stand in supporting and protecting reformers and boldly employing able hands.

Hou Zongbin arrived at Wuwei on 16 June. In the past 3 days he has visited a number of rural entrepreneurs, specialized households, and able hands in getting rich, and has obtained a detailed picture of local urban and rural reform problems. He has found out that the phenomenon of censuring and reproaching reformers still exists. Some people, acting out of their own interests, write letters laying charges against them and spread rumors and slanders. As a result many reforms and able hands have developed ideological misgivings. This has affected the smooth progress of reform.

Hou Zongbin said at the forum that reform remains the primary task during the Seventh 5-Year Plan. The leaders at all levels must support, employ, and protect the reformers and encourage them to lay down their burdens, set aside their misgivings, and work boldly at reform.

We must in particular not pass down to the lower levels anonymous letters that slander and censure reformers, no matter at what level the problems are reported. Such letters should not be investigated or published. We should seriously and promptly deal with letters written in a responsible attitude of being concerned about reform which report on shortcomings and mistakes in reform. As for letters bearing a false signature, we must first check whether there is such a unit or person. If there is, we should investigate the problems reported in the letter. If there is not, the letter will be dealt with as anonymous, and no action will be taken on it. In this way, we can both support the reformers and also establish a new social mood and morality.

GANSU: QUALITY OF SOME CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS DECLINES

[Excerpts] At present, due to continuous increase in urban and rural construction forces, to poor management, and to insufficient ideological and political work, the quality of some construction projects in our province has declined.

Over the past few years, the construction trade and reform of the management system of provincial capital construction has started early and progressed quickly. Marked achievements have been scored. However, as construction forces, particularly the urban and rural construction forces, have quickly developed, the technological level and management work have been unable to catch up with development. Many enterprises' operational ideology is not correct enough and they have put undue emphasis on the output value and the interests of the enterprises themselves but disregarded the social benefit and quality of the construction projects. Since 1984, three single-story houses have collapsed after they were made available to users and two Western-style houses have been demolished and rebuilt after completion. At the same time, the quality of some projects is inferior. Some other projects have unsafe structures due to their poor quality. This has caused hidden trouble.

According to a report of the Lanzhou City construction quality supervision station, in the second half of last year, serious problems of quality existed among the 12 construction projects under the supervision of this station. Since the beginning of this year, due to poor quality, some 10 construction projects have been suspended or delayed.

GANSU RADIO COMMENTARY STRESSES CONSTRUCTION QUALITY

HK131517 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 11 Jun 86

[Station commentary: "Put the Quality of Construction Projects in First Place"]

[Excerpts] Our attention must be drawn to the current problem of the declining quality of construction projects in our province. The products of construction enterprises are different from ordinary consumer goods and should be strong and durable.

Over the past few years, in the wake of the implementation of the economic contract systems and after peasants had gone into urban areas to engage in the construction trade, some people have put undue emphasis on output value and economic results but disregarded the social benefit of the quality of the construction projects. Some units even once abolished the quality supervision and inspection departments and paid attention only to the economic results of the enterprises.

To improve the quality of the construction projects, it is therefore necessary first to correct the enterprises' oeprational guiding ideology and to put the quality of the construction projects in the first position. Under the premise of guaranteeing quality, it is essential to speed up construction and to control the quotation of construction prices. At the same time, it is imperative to establish construction quality supervision organs and put them on a sound basis.

In addition, the qualified management personnel and scientific and technological personnel of the construction trade of our province are insufficient and the political, cultural, technical, and professional levels of the existing construction forces are not high. The technological ability of some township enterprises and peasant construction teams is weak and their management level low. Some have even lacked general knowledge of construction. Therefore, it is imperative to vigorously train technological and management personnel and technical workers, to strengthen the management of the township enterprises and peasant construction teams of the supervision of quality, and to give technology guidance to them.

It is necessary to strictly examine the qualification of the design and construction enterprises, to strictly prohibit subcontract of construction projects, designing without a license, and bypassing the immediate leadership and applying for construction to a higher level. It is essential to really guarantee the quality of the construction projects.

GANSU LIFTS RESTRICTIONS ON COMMERCIAL ENTERPRISES

HK131153 Lanzhou Gansu Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 11 Jan 86

[Excerpts] The provincial government has recently instructed departments concerned that it has decided to further lift policy restrictions on commercial enterprises to promote the work of commercial departments and to make our province's commercial system prosperous.

In light of the characteristics that commercial enterprises are scattered here and there and capital is decentralized, the provincial government has agreed to adopt as many preferential policies as possible toward enterprises to enhance enterprises' ability to transform and develop.

First, it is necessary to suitably reduce or remit enterprises' regulatory tax. This year, in accordance with the specific situation of different trades, a reduction of 2 million yuan will first be made.

Second, all enterprises run by contract must implement the policies laid down by the state. That means that the contract charges of the enterprises under state ownership or which are run by collectives will be reduced by half. Small shops in remote places where the numbers of people are small can be sold to individuals at an evaluated price in monetary terms and this can be dealt with in accordance with the policy toward individuals. The period of repayment for fixed assets and floating capital used by the enterprises which have changed to enterprises under collective ownership can be extended and, during the period of repayment, charges for the use of the fixed assets and floating capital will be remitted.

Third, in the issuing of bank loans and in the amounts of bank loans, it is essential to take care of commercial enterprises.

Fourth, the development funds which are allocated from the enterprises' retained profits and which are decentralized can be centralized and used by a department-in-charge but must be repaid in a specified period.

Fifth, with city and county commerce bureaus as units, the [words indistinct] personnel of the state-run commercial units [words indistinct].

Sixth, it is imperative to take resolute measures to lighten enterprises' social burdens. The retained profits which are to be taken in proportion from enterprises by a commercial administrative department need not be paid for 3 years from this year in accordance with differing situations.

NINGXIA MEETING URGES CRACKDOWN ON ECONOMIC CRIME

HK190555 Yinchuan NINGXIA RIBAO in Chinese 27 May 86 p 1

[Report: "Be Resolved To Launch in-Depth the Crackdown on Serious Economic Crime"]

[Excerpts] The Ningxia Regional CPC Committee convened a meeting of responsible persons of prefectural, city, county, and district departments on the afternoon of 25 May. The meeting stressed that it is essential to eliminate carelessness and slackness, strengthen leadership, and summon up great resolve to crack down on serious economic crime.

Li Xuezhi, Hao Tingzao, and Liu Guofan, leading comrades of the regional CPC Committee, and comrades of the inspection group of the Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification attended the meeting. Li Xuezhi and Hao Tingzao made speeches.

Li Xuezhi focused on the question of party style, pointing out that there has been a turn for the better as a result of party rectification. However, there are still many problems, and the party committees at all levels must actively, seriously, and consciously act to resolve them. It is necessary to strengthen leadership and set up target responsibility systems.

Comrade Hao Tingzao's speech focused on party rectification work, launching in-depth the struggle to crack down on serious economic crime, and structural reform. On party rectification, he stressed that the party organizations at all levels must not think of relaxing but must continue to work hard at straightening out the party style. In units where party rectification has basically been completed, the party organizations must carry out inspection and supervisory work to consolidate and develop the fruits of party rectification. The problems unearthed through inspection must be seriously resolved. In particular, we must eliminate all difficulties and clear away all obstacles in seriously dealing with major and important cases. As for party rectification at village level, study and corrections should be carried out before rectification begins, and they should not wait to solve problems that can be resolved.

Speaking on cracking down on serious economic crime, Hao Tingzao pointed out: We must realize that economic crime in Ningxia remains extremely serious. Crimes are committed while the crackdown is being carried out; there is an increase in the number of party-members cadres involved in cases, and the involvement of old party members is also quite conspicuous; the scope of the cases is broad, involving not only economic and administrative departments but also the public security departments, procuratorates, and courts; and there is a marked incidence of economic crimes in the financial system, especially in the agricultural banks. In the current new situation of reform and opening up, we must by no means relax vigilance against and take lightly serious crime in the economic field. Relaxation and carelessness are extremely wrong and dangerous.

Hao Tingzao said there are both objective and subjective reasons for the present increase in economic crime. The main, fundamental reason is that the CPC Central Committee's strategic principle on "grasping with two hands" has not yet been profoundly comprehended by the party organizations and leading comrades of certain areas and departments in Ningxia. They therefore lack sufficient understanding of the long-term, arduous, and complex nature of the struggle to crack down on serious economic crime, and lack a sense of urgency over it. Some comrades set the crack down on economic crime against invigorating the economy, erroneously holding that launching this struggle will hamper the implementation of the party's economic invigoration policy. Some comrades base their actions on individualism and departmentalism; for the sake of the interests of their own area or unit or a small number of people, they pay no heed to the overall situation and do not dare or do not want to grasp the struggle, and even fail to report or investigate cases. Some comrades take a negative attitude of "waiting to see and taking it easy" in investigating and dealing with economic crime cases. In particular, they take an attitude of avoiding dealing with economic criminals who wave the banners of "invigoration," "reform," and "able hands," because they are afraid of being accused of obstructing reform.

Some people fail to uphold the correct principle in employing people, and rashly promote to key economic posts certain "able hands" who are seriously in question and even some with criminal records. Certain leading comrades who have bad work style, abuse their powers, and have been involved in economic crime themselves are afraid of "stirring up a hornets' nest" and "opening a can of worms." Certain people, who indeed act out of "soft-heartedness," do everything possible to protect criminals and get them off the hook. Ideological and political work is very weak in certain units, with the result that some people there "look for money everywhere."

In particular, certain units fail to crack down hard on economic crime and fail to turn over the cases to the political and legal departments, or to institute the proper prosecutions; they impose meaningless punishments instead of severe ones. Thus a number of criminals have been allowed to go free. All these things have helped to inflate the arrogance of economic crime. We must therefore summon up great resolve to carry out in depth the struggle to crack down on serious economic crime, to ensure the correct implementation of the principle of "enlivening the domestic economy and opening up to the world" and the smooth progress of the socialist modernization drive.

Hao Tingzao said that economic crime is even harder than ordinary crime to crack down on; the situations are more complex, and there is a strong sense of policy and law. We must be both resolute and accurate in cracking down on it. Comrade Hao Tingzao pointed out that launching in depth the struggle to crack down on serious economic crime is a job for the whole party. We must fight a "general battle" under the unified leadership of the party committees. We must pay attention to solving the following three problems: 1) The discipline inspection commissions and the political and legal, industrial and commercial, and auditing departments must have clear division of work and also closely cooperate with each other. 2) We must persist in "grasping the systems and having the systems grasp the work." 3) We must follow the mass line in dealing with major and complex cases involving broad areas; that is, we must, to a certain extent, mobilize the masses who know about a situation to expose it.

SHAANXI COMPLETES TRANSFER OF PEOPLE'S ARMED FORCES

HK121528 Xian Shaanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2330 GMT 11 Jun 86

[Text] Our province has successfully completed the work of handing over people's Armed Forces departments to local authorities. By 11 June, 102 county, city, and district People's Armed Forces departments had all been handed over to local authorities. In the course of handing over the People's Armed Forces departments, in coordination with the Army, local CPC committees and governments at all levels did a lot of practical and meticulous work. The provincial CPC Committee and provincial government on many occasions listened to the reports of the hand-over leadership groups and promptly gave guidance to the hand-over work. All counties and districts showed concern for People's Armed Forces department cadres on their own initiative and vigorously resolved practical difficulties in work and livelihood for People's Armed Forces departments.

On the basis of carefully transferring and allocating People's Armed Forces department cadres, in conjunction with party rectification of the People's Armed Forces departments, the Shaanxi Military District and all military subdistricts penetratingly conducted education for the People's Armed Forces department cadres in being subordinate to the overall situation. They also helped the People's Armed Forces departments rectify organs' work style, make an inventory of their property, and train newly transferred cadres. Since the hand-over work, all county, city, and district People's Armed Forces departments have generally improved their housing and work conditions. The problems of arrangements for the work of the great majority of the family members of the People's Armed Forces department cadres newly transferred and the problems of the schooling and nursing of their children have been properly solved. The quality of the ranks of the People's Armed Forces department cadres has generally improved. The average age of the cadres is some 3 years younger than before. The number of cadres who have the cultural level of senior middle school or above is some 26 percent more than before. They fervently cherish the Armed Forces work and their ideology is stable. They have the professional ability to do their job well and have some experience in grass-roots work.

KMT APPOINTS 12-MAN COMMITTEE TO STUDY REFORMS

[By Hsin-hsin Yang]

[Text] Taipei, June 21 (AFP) -- The ruling Kuomintang (KMT) has named 12 top party leaders to put together a package of proposed reforms aimed at liberalizing the regime, a KMT source said Saturday. The source said 12 members of the party policy-making body, the Central Standing Committee, had met Friday to outline a framework for political reform.

They are to coordinate studies and liberalization in six areas, including the country's congress system, local self-government, social security issues and party affairs. They are also to look into national security laws, including martial law, and the formation of civilian groups under a ban on parties, the source said. No further details were immediately available.

It was the first positive response of the KMT, which has been in power since 1949, to demands by liberals and the opposition for a lifting of martial law and the ban on parties, observers said. Liberals and the opposition had also urged the KMT to rejuvenate the congress, which comprises the National Assembly, the Legislative Yuan (Parliament) and the Control Yuan, the country's highest watchdog body, by holding general elections. Some 70 per cent of the congress members were elected in China before 1949 when the KMT was defeated by the communists and retreated to Taiwan.

Friday's move came after a series of actions which reflected President Chiang Ching-kuo's commitment to carry out democracy and to achieve a compromise with the opposition, observers here said. The KMT relaxed its party ban on May 10 by allowing the Tangwai Research Association for Public Policies (TRAPP), a major opposition group, to open branch offices, paving the way for political party.

The authorities also subsequently condoned a demonstration staged by some 200 opposition members against martial law as it entered the 38th year on May 19, and seven street protests launched by three opposition members before they went to jail for libel. Under martial law, the authorities are empowered to disperse any gathering which they deem would endanger social stability.

On Wednesday, President Chiang appointed a civilian, 73-year-old Wang Tao-yaun, to head the Defense Ministry, easing public worries that the military might intervene in the government one day.

President Chiang also named Hsiao Tien-tsan as minister of state in the cabinet, bringing the total number of native Taiwanese to four out of seven. Mr Hsiao is one of the three deputy secretaries of KMT's policy coordination committee who started reconciliation talks with the opposition last month.

REACTION TO NEW TAIWAN APPOINTMENTS REVIEWED

[By Hsin-hsin Yang]

[Text] Taipei, June 21 (AFP) -- President Chiang Ching-kuo's latest appointments reflects a commitment to keeping the military out of government and to the development of democracy in Taiwan analysts here say. Analysts are also debating whether the president might be preparing to pass on power to his younger half-brother by making him secretary general of the National Security Council (NSC), technically the country's highest administrative organ.

On Wednesday the 75-year-old Mr. Chiang named a civilian, 73-year-old NSC Secretary General Wang Tao-yuan, as national defence minister to replace Admiral Soong Chang-chih. Mr. Chiang appointed his 69-year-old half-brother, General Chiang Wego, NSC secretary general to succeed Mr. Wang.

Hsiao Tien-tsan was made minister of state in the cabinet. Mr Hsiao is one of the three deputy secretaries general of the Policy Coordination Committee of the ruling Kuomintang (KMT or National Party), who represented the party at reconciliation talks with the opposition that began last month.

"The three appointments symbolise the government's determination to execute democracy," said an editorial in the UNITED DAILY NEWS on Friday. "Taiwan will not fall victim to military intervention at critical points in its democratic development as people in the country and overseas fear." It added: "We have reason to believe that issues involving national security will be handled with rational and forward-looking views within the framework of democracy and the needs of the country under the new NSC secretary general."

Commented Li Hung-hsi, professor of law at the national Taiwan University: "The message is that the president does not like a military government and he is continuing his efforts to establish a good base for democracy."

Chin Shen-pao, political science professor at National Cheng Chi University, said: "It is obvious the president is putting his words into deeds to east public worries that the military will interfere with government one day."

On December 25, Mr. Chiang said in a Constitution Day message: "Our country is built on a Constitution and our next president will be produced according to the Constitution. That is, members of the National Assembly will have to choose one on behalf of the people. If anyone asks whether there is a possibility the country would be ruled by military, my answer is: There couldn't be and there won't be."

Mr. Chin said that while appointing a civilian defence minister did not mean playing down the importance of the military, it signified less chance of a military takeover of the government. Mr. Chin disputed speculation that the president was grooming his half-brother to succeed him. Nor did he accept the theory that the NSC would function as the heart of a collective leadership to succeed the president.

The NSC comprises all top government figures with the president as chairman. But over the years its function has been limited to reviewing national budgets, with most other major decisions being left to the Parliament. "The NSC has never played any real, significant role in the administration and there have been no signs that it will do so in the future," said Mr. China.

Moderate opposition leader Kang Ning-hsiang contended that the new appointments were a sign the president was arranging a collective leadership in the KMT's Central Standing Committee.

"The real power would be gradually shifted to the committee with the suport of the military under the civilian minister and national security forces commanded by Gen. Chiang," he said.

Opposition legislator Fei Yu-ching said the new appointments were a possible sign of a more relaxed approach to the opposition. He said the military and security branches under Adm. Soong had not been well disposed towards the opposition because "they were trained to be loyal only to the party or certain individuals instead of the nation as a whole."

Mr. Li, the law professor, said: "The dialogue between the KMT and the opposition is expected to continue with the obvious support of the big boss."

COMMENTARY VIEWS PUBLICATION OF CHEN YUN WORKS

OW221002 Taipei International Service in English 0200 GMT 22 Jun 86

[Text] Peking announced on Monday that Volume Three of the Collection of Chen Yun's works has been published for mass circulation on the Chinese mainland. The Communist press played it up as a major event. In a sense, it is a major event.

The publication and distribution of the book is closely related with Red China's current economic reform, and reflects the divergence of views regarding the scope and pace of the reform. The collection includes 56 articles written by the author between 1956 and 1985. Among them, 44 articles were published for the first time. During this long period, Chen Yun held various high posts, mostly, concerning economic development. His articles tell his views on the subject. These articles also reveal some of the inside stories about Peking's power struggle. For example, Chen spoke out in March 1977 for the reinstatement of Teng Hsiao-ping and called for reversing the verdict on the Tien An Men uprising. At the 3d Plenum of the Communist Party 11th Central Committee held in 1978, Chen also demanded the posthumous rehabilitation of Peng Teh-huai. All these indicate that Chen played a pivotal role in reinstating the old guards purged during the Cultural Revolution. The contribution, plus his prestige as Peking's economic czar in the 1950's and early 60's makes him a force to be reckoned with.

Chen is often regarded as a conservative as contrasted with the reformist camp headed by Teng. Acutally Chen was among the first to have advocated reform. The two men also see eye to eye on the need to confine economic reform within the framework of the Communist system. This is reflected in Teng's call for adherence to the four basic principles. However, Chen's idea of economic reform is more orthodox than Teng's. For instance, Chen insisted on central planning as the key feature, with market economy playing a supplementary role in the reform. Chen also is against another great leap forward. Instead, he suggested that economic growth should be sought on the basis of stability. Chen's other article of faith is that food production should remain the key link of economy. He warned that food shortage would result in chaos.

Generally speaking, Chen is more cautious then Teng. Chen favors a smaller cage for the bird of economic reform, whereas Teng wants the cage enlarged. Although Teng and his top aides ignore Chen's objection to the launch of their version of reform, the implementation of the reform has given rise to a host of problems, many of which have been forewarned by Chen. The development has enabled Chen and his followers to say to the Tengists "we told you so." As a result, Peking's economic reform has almost ground to a halt. Naturally, Chen's prestige has soared to a new height as a result. Hence, his works will carry more weight within the ruling hierarchy. That is the main reason behind the publication and distribution of his collected works.

XINHUA OFFICIAL COMMENTS ON DENG XIAOPING RETIREMENT

HK220302 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in Chinese 22 Jun 86 p 4

[Report: "Xu Jiatun Told Reporters Yesterday the Question of Deng Xiaoping's Retirement Will Be Decided by the CPC Central Committee"]

[Excerpts] Xu Jiatun, director of the Hong Kong Branch of XINHUA, spoke to reporters on a public occasion yesterday. On the question of Deng Xiaoping retiring next year, he said that the retirement of Deng Xiaoping is a question that needs to be decided by the CPC Central Committee; at present, it is only Deng Xiaoping's wish.

He said that during the second meeting of the Basic Law Drafting Committee, Chairman Deng Xiaoping did say when receiving his guests that he wanted to retire, but he gave no specific time for this.

He said that Deng Xiaoping's idea is that people should consider retiring as early as possible to allow young people to replace them. However this is only the personal desire of Deng Xiaoping, and we will have to see what the CPC Central Committee thinks about it, and thus whether he will in fact retire or not.

Asked for his personal view, Xu Jiatun said that he personally does not think that Chairman Deng will be able to retire next year.

Asked about his own retirement, Xu Jiatun laughingly said that he does not know; he will retire when higher authority approves. Asked if he has applied to retire, Xu said he has not.

KUANG CHIAO CHING Examines Issue

HK220854 Hong Kong KUANG CHIAO CHING in Chinese No 165, 16 Jun 86 pp 6, 7

["Exclusive Report" by Lu Yi-chun: "Deng Xiaoping Wants To Retire" -- first paragraph is KUANG CHIAO CHING introduction]

[Text] Recently, Deng Xiaoping has twice mentioned his intention to retire. He mentioned it to T.K. Ann and Cha Chi-ming on one occasion. Deng Xiaoping suggested that at his age, he did not know when troubles would come and that it would be better to experience them now than in the future. If Deng retires, other senior statesmen would follow suit. By then, there will be a new situation in China's leading bodies. Thus, the whole world is focusing its attention on this....

"Deng Xiaoping mentioned his intention to retire and has made preparations for his retirement!"

Deng Xiaoping Twice Mentioned His Retirement

On his arrival in Beijing, this reporter's well informed friends immediately told him this important news.

"Really?" The reporter was surprised and he could not believe it.

"Yes! His most recent mention of it was in the presence of several central responsible persons. On another occasion, he mentioned it to several people from Hong Kong!"

"Really? Who were the persons meeting Deng Xiaoping then and which of them heard Deng Xiaoping's mention of this intention to retire?"

"Such Hong Kong celebrities as T.K. Ann and Cha Chi-ming were present. Also present on the occasion were Ji Pengfei, director of the Hong Kong and Macao Affairs Office and Yan Mingfu, director of the CPC Central Committee's United Front Work Department and 'tomorrow's star' described in the previous issue of KUANG CHIAO CHING."

This reporter tried to gather more information on the basis of this news. He called one of the persons present on the occasion and this person confirmed that Deng Xiaoping had mentioned his intention to retire. He said: "You are so well informed! He did say that! And he was really serious!"

Deng's Intention To Retire Suggests That the Situation in China Is Extremely Stable and Normal

Not many people in Beijing know that Deng Xiaoping wants to retire. The news is circulating within very restricted circles.

However, this reporter's friends, who know much, told the reporter: It is only normal that Deng Xiaoping should have this intention. This shows that the current situation in China is very stable and normal and that even if he retires, there would not be trouble or adverse effects. If he retired a few years ago, the situation would have been too dreadful to contemplate.

The End of the Next Term of Office Will See Deng Xiaoping at 88. In That Case, the Leading Body Will Become Even More Aged

Deng Xiaoping, 82, will be 83 next year. The CPC will hold an important meeting, the 6th Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee, in the second half of this year, and its 13th national congress in the coming year (1987). Between now and then, there will be high-level personnel changes. The reforms dictate major personnel and organizational changes. If Deng Xiaoping remains a member of the CPC Political Bureau Standing Committee and the chairman of the Central Advisory Commission at the "13th CPC National Congress," he will be 88 by the end of the term of his office. He will then be too old and there would be unfavorable opinions abroad. This may not produce totally desireable effects. All this can be expected.

President Li Xiannian, 81, is also a member of the CPC Political Bureau Standing Committee. Earlier, he was hospitalized and thus unable to meet the heads of several foreign states. Chen Yun, 82, is as old as Deng Xiaoping. Should they be reelected members, the problem of the aging leadership would become very serious. Also advanced in age are Peng Zhen, 84, Yang Shangkun, 79, Ulanhu, 80, and Hu Qiaomu, 74. If most of them refuse to retire in the next 1 or 2 years, the top CPC leadership will become very aged, the pace of the reforms and the implementation of the opening up policy will slow down, young talent will not be promptly promoted, and people would be less confident and optimistic about China's future.

If Deng Xiaoping takes the opportunity of the "13th CPC National Congress" to step down, he will be playing an exemplary role and those aged and weak senior statesmen would also retire one after another. Should this happen, the members of the Political Bureau and of its Standing Committee will really become younger in average age and they will be able to more successfully implement the opening up policy, carry out reforms, and direct the "four modernizations." In this way, China's long-standing problem of its aging leadership will be smoothly solved.

Deng Xiaoping Said: "It Would Be Better To Experience Troubles Now Than in the Future"

According to my friends, Deng Xiaoping once seriously pointed out that although he was in good health, as an aged man, he did not know when there would be troubles. The whole world is concerned about his whereabouts, his remarks, and his activities and people tend to base their confidence in China's future on his health. He said: Not long ago, newspapers and periodicals in Hong Kong spread rumors about his ill health with the result that the prices of stocks and shares went down significantly on the market. This is very unusual. It seems that his influence is too great. In the event that he is seriously ill or passes away, there would be trouble. "It would be better to experience trouble now than in the future." Thus, he seriously indicated his intention to retire. This is something positive and extremely farsighted.

"In Fact, I Do Very Little Work, I Express My Opinions Only On Important Matters"

Deng Xiaoping has praised several young central leaders for their outstanding performance. In fact, "I do little work. I express my opinions only on important matters."

Reportedly, a certain "new star" in charge of the CPC Central Committee's Secretariat hopes very much that Deng Xiaoping will remain at the helm and continue to lead those newly-emerged gifted people and that there will not be major changes in the next Political Bureau. However, all evidence suggests that Deng Xiaoping has made up his mind and that the members of the leading body will become younger in average age in quite a short time. Not long ago, the foremost CPC authorities introduced a new political star named Wen Jiaboa [3306 1367 1405] to replace Wang Zhaoguo as director of the general office of the CPC Central Committee.

Although He Is Concerned About Reunification, He Is Not Reluctant To Give Up His Position.

Deng Xiaoping hopes to be alive in 1997 and to visit the Hong Kong Special Administrative Region in that year. He is also looking forward to the early reunification of China. Not long ago, Deng Xiaoping was glad that the Taiwan cargo plane incident was smoothly settled through the talks between the "CAAC" [Civil Aviation Administration of China] and "CA" [China Airlines] It is reported that he is still very concerned about the work concerning reunification.

If Deng Xiaoping resolutely steps down, perhaps the topmost CPC authorities would confer the title of an "honorary chairman" on him and would continue to seek his advice on important matters and people will forever remember him by the fact that he gave up the highest position in the country without the slightest reluctance.

Hu Yaobang, the 71-year-old CPC general secretary, is visiting Western Europe. Having paid successful visits to the United Kingdom and the Federal Republic of Germany, he is now visiting France and Italy. Citing comments made by Western diplomats, AFP said: The purpose of Hu Yaobang's visits is to pave the way for his succession of Deng Xiaoping. Now it is necessary for him to show that he had the qualities of a world leader. Another Western diplomat commented: The 13th CPC National Congress is still 16 months away. By then, Deng Xiaoping's successor will be appointed. Now it is time Hu Yaobang began putting on the hat of an international figure.

It seems that in the next few years, Hu Yaobang and Zhao Ziyang will be in charge of the CPC's highest-level personnal arrangements. Hu Yaobang may replace Deng Xiaoping and Yang Shangdkun on the Central Military Commission. By 1988, Zhao Ziyang will have served two terms as premier. According to conventions, he cannot serve a third term. Thus, he may become president. Hu Qili may very soon become a member of the Political Bureau Standing Committee and join Hu and Zhao at the core of CPC leadership. The 6th Plenary Session of the 12th CPC Central Committee" will be held at the end of this year. By then, a clearer picture of the personnel changes will emerge!

TA KUNG PAO REPORTS DENG XIAOPING, LI KA-SHING MEETING

[Special dispatch by correspndent Hou Tung-hai: "Deng Xiaoping Meets Li Ka-shing"]

[Text] Beijing, 20 Jun -- This morning, Deng Xiaoping, chairman of the CPC Central Committee's Advisory Commission, met Li Ka-shing, chairman of the Board of Directors and concurrently general manager of Cheung Kong (Holdings) Ltd, in the Great Hall of the People in Beijing.

During the meeting, Deng Xiaoping praised Li Ka-shing, who donated money to set up Shantou University, for his patriotic spirit. He said to Li Ka-shing: The help you have rendered to the state is practical. I thank you for your contributions to the state.

Li Ka-shing said: What I am most concerned about is the work of Shantou University. The key to whether or not China's four modernizations program can be achieved successfully in the future lies with the issue of qualified personnel. He indicated that while he is still alive, he will devote great energy and efforts to supporting the country's educational and public health undertakings. He hoped Chairman Deng Xiaoping would support Shantou University so that it would be run in a more liberal way.

Deng Xiaoping said: I agree with what you have said, and so does Comrade He Dongchang. The university can be run in a more liberal way and foreign professors can be invited to teach there.

Deng Xiaoping went on to say: Since we have decided to set up Shantou University, it should be made a success. The State Education Commission is encouraged to transfer a number of good teachers from other parts of the country to the university so as to ensure that it can turn out top quality students from the very outset. He said: The quality of a university hinges on the quality of its teachers. A low quality teacher will not be able to teach and turn out good students.

Deng Xiaoping also said to He Dongchang, deputy director of the State Education Commission, who was also present at the meeting: The State Education Commission should give all-out support to the work of Shantou University. He repeatedly stressed the importance of the quality of teachers. He added that appropriate treatment should be given to the teachers of Shantou University and the treatment should not be too poor. This will help attract some high quality teachers.

Li Ka-shing indicated that he had high hopes for the future of Shantou University and is more confident because of the current support of Deng Xiaoping and the State Education Commission.

The State Education Commission promptly made a four-point decision on solving the problem of a dearth of high quality teachers at the university. First, the commission will appoint Professor Yang Yingqun, former president of the Industrial University of Jiangxi, as president of Shantou University. (Yang, 55, graduated in 1959 from Kharkov Polytechnic College in the Soviet Union. During his study there, he was awarded a doctorate.) Second, the commission will choose a group of backbone teachers for Shantou University at the dean level from key universities throughout the country. Third, a number of postgraduates will be trained through the help of returned students now working in various famous institutions of higher learning. They will replenish the ranks of teachers at Shantou University in the future. Fourth, guest professors will be invited from China and abroad to teach at the university of 1 or 2 years. The State Education Commission will send its personnel to Shantou to specifically implement the decision in mid-July.

Li Hou, deputy director of the Hong Kong-Macao Affairs Office of the State Council, and Lu Ping, secretary general of the office, were also present at today's meeting.

Li Ka-shing arrived in Beijing from Hong Kong yesterday. This afternoon, Zhao Ziyang, premier of the State Council, and Ji Pengfei, Director of the Hong Kong-Macao office, also received him separately. In the evening, Li Hou gave a banquet in honor of Li Ka-shing. On the morning of 21 June, Li Ka-shing will leave Beijing for Hong Kong.

DENG WARNS ON USE OF FORCE TO RESOLVE TAIWAN ISSUE

HK220145 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA SUNDAY MORNING POST in English 22 Jun 86 pp 1, 2

[By Max Soliven]

[Excerpts] Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping has repeated his pledge that Hong Kong will remain capitalist for 50 years after 1997. And he has delivered a veiled threat that Beijing might eventually use force to settle the Taiwan question.

Mr Deng expressed disappointment that Taiwan's leaders had not responded to his offer of a "Hong Kong formula" to bring about a reunification with China. "Problems can be postponed but they cannot be ignored forever," Mr Deng said a few days ago to a visiting Philippine delegation. "When patience runs out and peaceful compromise is refused, there is no other way but force."

I was present as a member of the Foreign Policy Council of the Philippines when Mr Deng met with the Philippines vice-president and foreign affairs minister, Mr Salvador Laurel, in the Great Hall of the People in Beijing. The Chinese leader said the return of Taiwain "to the homeland" should be achieved by peaceful negotiation rather than war.

"We have guaranteed them the Hong Kong formula of 50 years continued capitalism when they rejoin us. What more do they want?"

Mr Deng said rather than order the Red Army to march into Hong Kong he had convinced Britain's prime minister, Mrs Margaret Thatcher, to agree to the 1997 transition formula. "We are subscribing to the policy of one country-two systems," he said., "The Kuomintang has turned a deaf ear to Beijing's proposals and are, instead, trying to prevent word of this peaceful proposal getting to their people." Mr Deng shook his head sadly as he spoke of the reaction of the Taiwan leadership.

But for the rest of the 75-minute interview with Mr Laurel and his party he was jovial and vigorous. The discussions ranged widely over international affairs with Mr Deng stressing there were many pressing problems for which solutions must be found. He expressed concern about problems that continue to keep countries divided, citing East and West Germany, North and South Korea and the China-Taiwan situation.

ARTICLE EXPLORES DELAY IN NAMING PRC CULTURE MINISTER

[By Terry Cheng]

[Text] The formal confirmation of writer Wang Meng as China's culture minister has yet to be announced, indicating discord in the hierarchy about his nomination. Although the 51-year-old rehabilitated rightist writer is doing the job of minister, his new position has not been proclaimed officially. Mr Zhu Muzhi, who is said to have been replaced by Mr Wang, is still using the title of culture minister at official functions.

A Culture Ministry spokesman was earlier quoted as saying that Mr Wang had been named as the new minister and his nomination was expected to be announced in the Fourth Session of the Sixth National People's Congress in April.

Despite rubberstamping some government appointments, the session did not include the approval of Mr Wang's nomination on its agenda. However, his elevation is expected to be confirmed later this month as a meeting of the NPC Standing Committee is now under way. Approval of ministers has to be made in the annual sessions of the NPC or meetings of the Standing Committee of the NPC.

Despite the absence of formal approval, Mr Wang has been considered as the de facto new minister, and his associates say he has already started work in the post.

Mr Liu Xinwu, who is the permanent deputy editor of the Chinese literature magazine of which Mr Wang is officially still the chief editor, confirmed that Mr Wang had started work in the Culture Ministry. In a recent interview with a local China-watching magazine, Mr Liu said Mr Wang was busy at work in the Culture Ministry.

However, as recently as June 3 the official NEW CHINA NEWS AGENCY referred to Mr Zhu in a meeting with university graduates as the culture minister.

He also used the title of culture minister in the reception this week for Philippine Vice-President Salvador Laurel.

China's other new agency, CHINA NEWS SERVICE, earlier this week described Mr Wang as vice chairman of the National Writers' Association. Mr Wang was quoted as having told writers in Helongjiang Province that the literary circle was currently livelier than at any time in the past, but there were still many disagreements and there was a long way to go before reaching the goal of geniuinely free and equal discussions.

Some observers believe that there may be a split over Mr Wang's nomination within the hierarchy, which may have delayed the NPC's endorsement. They suggest that reformists wanted to promote him, but the move was opposed by more conservative forces. But their differences may be settled in the current NPC Standing Committee. The culture minister's task is a very sensitive one in China, where art and literature are closely linked to politics. The minister must tread a fine line between satisfying the artists' desire for a relaxed and uninhibited environment and Communist Party demands that their work serve the proper objectives of publicising state policies.

Mr Wang had earlier said he would not accept being nominated as culture minister. However, later he was said to have been "persuaded" to accept the job. Mr Wang is well-known in cultural circles at home and abroad, particularly for his novel "The Newcomer in The Organisation Department," published in 1956 which was critical of Communist China's bureaucracy.

HONG KONG XINHUA PASSES DAYA BAY OBJECTIONS TO BEIJING

HK220147 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA SUNDAY MORNING POST in English 22 Jun 86 p 10

[Excerpts] China's top representative in Hong Kong, Mr Xi Jiatun, has told Beijing of the objections being raised here to the Daya Bay nuclear power plant. Mr Xu, the local head of the NEW CHINA NEWS AGENCY, said yesterday he had passed on the objections to government departments in Beijing which have an interest in the matter. "I personally think local objections are understandable and I believe the State Council will understand them," Mr. Xu said. But he refused to give his own views on the subject.

Meanwhile, a top Chinese nuclear official has reiterated that Beijing will proceed with its nuclear plant construction programme and will endeavour to ensure it is accident-free. The minister for nuclear industry, Mr Jiang Xinxiong, was addressing the current session of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress. According to CHINA NEWS SERVICE, he said China's nuclear plants would use pressurised water reactors. Mr Jiang's remarks came amid increasing concern in Hong Kong over safety aspects of the Daya Bay plant following the Chernobyl disaster in Russia. Waves of protest in Hong Kong have not gone unnoticed in Beijing, which has mounted a strong defensive campaign.

PRC ATTENDS WORLD FOOD COUNCIL MEETING IN ROME

[Text] Rome, June 19 (XINHUA) -- The World Food Council (WFC) ended its four-day annual ministerial conference today with a call for support to the development of African agriculture. The conference noted that the grain war among the major grain producers following a year's glut of food on the world market could undermine the development of farm production in Africa, a continent emerging from deadly drought.

The conference, attended by 140 delegates from 36 WFC member countries and 50 other countries as well as 130 representatives from international organizations, called on all countries to take concrete measures to implement the special U.N. resolution on recovery of African agriculture. Delegates stressed the need to strengthen South-South cooperation in order to achieve the resolution's goals. China sent a delegate to the WFC conference.

[Text] Fuzhou, June 20 (XINHUA) -- China has done a good job controlling its deserts, experts from eight countries and the United Nations have concluded following a seminar here on desert control in Asia and the Pacific regions. Experts and officials from Afghanistan, Bangladesh, China, India, Iran, Malaysia, Nepal, Sri Lanka and Thailand as well as the U.N. Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific inspected a number of desert control projects in northwest China as part of the 15-day seminar, which concluded Thursday.

In remarks released today, seminar participants applauded the coordinated efforts of local governments, scientists and the people at large in China to control deserts, and they applauded the government's decision to prevent soil loss in the 1986-90 period. U.N. officials promised to cooperate with China in the study and control of deserts and in training people to work on the problem.

WORLD CONFERENCE CALLS FOR SANCTIONS ON S. AFRICA

OW211857 Beijing XINHUA in English 1843 GMT 21 Jun 86

[Text] Paris, June 20 (XINHUA) -- A world conference on sanctions against South Africa ended here today with a call on the international community to invoke sweeping, mandatory sanctions against the Pretoria regime. The call was contained in a statement adopted by delegates from 122 countries. The statement said that the called-for sanctions are aimed at halting South Africa's apartheid and its policy of cruel oppression, its occupation of Namibia and its aggressions against independent countries in Africa.

Comprehensive sanctions should be adopted with an aim to isolate the apartheid regime and give all kinds of aid to freedom and peace fighters in southern Africa, it said.

The conference asked the U.N. Security council to adopt mandatory sanctions against South Africa, particularly in the military, nuclear, oil and financial areas, and ensure that all states carry them out, particularly major Western powers which are South Africa's major trading partners. The United States, Britain and Federal Germany did not take part in the five-day meeting.

The conference criticized U.S. President Ronald Reagan's policy of "constructive engagement" toward South Africa, saying it had not contributed to abolishing apartheid but instead strengthened the Pretoria regime. The statement criticized some big powers in the West and their transnational companies for pursuing "active collaboration" with South Africa, which has subsequently enabled the racist regime to reinforce its military and repressive apparatus.

The conference urged the Pretoria regime to release immediately and unconditionally Nelson Mandela and other black South African leaders. The conference invited all governments, organizations and mass media to give active and urgent backing to the statement it has adopted. It also warned against any attempt to turn southern Africa into an arena for East-West conflicts.

The United Nations, the Organization of African Unity, the Non-aligned movement, national liberation movements and other international organizations attended as observers.

XINHUA CRITICIZES U.S., UK STAND ON SOUTH AFRICA

OW201155 Beijing XINHUA in English 0945 GMT 20 Jun 86

["'Refusal To Punish South Africa Betrays Western Countries' Selfishness' by Zhang Jinglie" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Harare, June 19 (XINHUA) -- In the wake of mounting demands for economic sanctions against the apartheid regime in South Africa, some Western countries have strangely argued that such sanctions would hurt the country's underprivileged blacks and neighboring states more than the white government.

It is indeed ture that blacks in South Africa and the neighbouring states with close ties to the South African economy might bear the brunt of the impact of the sanctions. But, these frontline states, as Zimbabwe Prime Minister Robert Mugabe said last week at a mass rally in Harare, are ready for any aciton by the international community to bring apartheid to an end. "If sanctions mean suffering, then we say we prefer them because these sanctions will shorten our suffering," he said.

"What greater harm can be done to the people of South Africa than the death they are enduring every day?" he demanded. The Organization of African Unity, in a document to the ongoing Paris world conference expressing support for sanctions, said the cost of the sanctions to the nine member states of the Southern African Development coordination Conference will be worthwhile if they accelerate the end of apartheid.

According to reports from South Africa, the blacks are already boycotting white businesses despite their own difficulties.

The Reagan administration and the Thatcher cabinet justify their opposition to sanctions by saying "they believe" the sanctions "would not work effectively and would be counter-productive." But, ironically, the two powers are notorious for imposing sanctions against their "enemy states." It is no secret that Britain imposed economic and trade sanctions and an arms embargo against Argentina during the Malvinas war in 1982. The United States has also imposed sanctions against Iran, Nicaragua, Libya and some other countries it has problems with. People can legitmately ask if sanctions really do not work, why are they using them so "generously" against their own adversaries?

Many African leaders believe geopolitical and economic considerations are behind these Western powers' refusal to apply sanctions against the apartheid regime in South Africa. They believe the black control of South Africa means the strategically important region will fall into the Soviet sphere of influence and the West could lose its supply of vital strategic minerals and the cape sea routes through which the oil supply line from the Persian Gulf passes.

According to statistics compiled by Western researchers, in 1985, South Africa owed 24 billion U.S. dollars to nearly 230 Western banks, 80 percent of the debt to Britain, the United States, West Germany and Switzerland.

Sanctions against South Africa are, to them, a boomerang, which will return to hurt them. To safeguard their own interest, they would rather watch the Pretoria regime commit the most inhuman crimes of our times. This is the logic of the Western countries opposing sanctions.

UN GENERAL ASSEMBLY ADOPTS DECISIONS, ADJOURNS

[Text] United Nations, June 20 (XINHUA) -- The General Assembly of the United Nations today resumed its 40th session and later suspended it again after making several decisions. The decisions adopted at the resumed session included postponing an international conference on the relationship between disarmament and development till next year and leaving to its 41st session to decide on the inscription of an item entitled "external debt crisis and development" on its agenda.

According to a decision of the General Assembly last year, the international conference on the relationship between disarmament and development was scheduled to be convened next month in Paris. Last month, France, the host country, asked for the postponement, saying more time was needed to reach consensus on the objectives of the conference, in order to ensure a successful outcome. The preparatory committee for the conference agreed to France's proposal and asked the General Assembly to make a decision on it. The General Assembly today decided to fix specific dates and the venue for the conference at its 41st session beginning in September.

The suggestion of adding the item of "external debt crisis and development" to the agenda of the 41st session beginning in September was originally made by the group of 77.

The 40th session of the General Assembly was first resumed from April 28 to May 9 to consider the financial crisis of the world organization.

U.S. INSTITUTE LAUDS PRC RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

OW220732 Beijing XINHUA in English 0649 GMT 22 Jun 86

[Text] Washington, June 21 (XINHUA) -- By electrifying one-third of its 2,200 rural counties with small hydropower plants, China has implemented the most massive rural electrification program in histoy, the U.S.-based Worldwatch Institute said today. A study released by the institute said China has effectively demonstrated ways to build power systems from the botton up since most of its small hydro projects, planned and built locally with limited government assistance, have gradually been connected to regional power grids.

The electric-generating capacity of the Third World in the mid-1980's, the study said, stood at about 450,000 megawatts, just two thirds of that of the United States alone, which generated 688,000 megawatts in 1985. Per capita electric consumption in the Third World is 120 watts, compared with 2,900 watts in the United States.

Electric consumption in most developing countries, however, is growing at a rapid pace of between 5 and 15 percent annually, the study said. Third World budgets for electrification have grown rapidly since the late 1950's and now approach 50 billion U.S. dollars each year -- about one-quarter of total public capital investments. But less than 10 percent of the Third World's electrical investments go to rural areas, and in many countries the ratio is lower than 5 percent, it said.

The study pointed out that local initiative and involvement are essential to successful rural electrification. Rural areas, towns, and industries can benefit from small-scale power sources, which often can be built at lower cost and more quickly than conventional plants, it observed. Small hydropower, biomass, wind power, and solar power have the potential to supply power to villages without hooking up to a power grid or relying on expensive imported fuels, the study added.

DUBRININ BRINGS REAGAN LETTER FROM GORBACHEV

[Text] Washington, June 23 (XINHUA) -- the White House announced today that President Reagan received a personal letter from Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev, but did not disclose any details. The letter was conveyed to Reagan by the new Soviet Ambassador to the United States Yuriy Dubinin, when he presented his credentials at a White House ceremony. The ambassador has just returned from consultations in Moscow.

A White House statement said that the ceremony lasted for 40 minutes during which time President Reagan and Ambassador Dubinin discussed "a range of issues that affect the United States and the Soviet Union." "The meeting was cordial and businesslike," the statement added.

The United States is expecting a Soviet response to Reagan's recent effort to formally begin summit preparations and to obtain a date for a second summit meeting with Gorbachev. However, a White House official said that there was no mention in Gorbachev's letter of a possible date for the summit.

USSR WARNS U.S. AGAINST SCRAPPING SALT II

["Senior Soviet Officials: Washington Endangers Disarmament Talks" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Moscow, June 20 (XINHUA) -- Senior Soviet Communist Party, military and foreign affairs officials today accused Washington of taking a "dangerous step" in scrapping the SALT II Treaty and asked the U.S. Administration to bear responsibility for the consequences. "An extremely alarming situation is now taking shape in arms limitation and reduction in general...it is therefore exceptionally important the U.S. Government weigh anew all responsibility it is incurring by taking the decision leading to the ruin of the SALT process," said Anatoliy Dobrynin, a top foreign policy expert to the Soviet leadership.

Speaking at a joint session of the foreign affairs commissions of two parliamentarian chambers, Dobrynin said the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT) agreements are not to the liking of the more "hawkish" forces in Washington, because they are based on the principle of equality and equal security, and formalize strategic parity and constitute an obstacle to large-scale U.S. military build-up programs, according to the Soviet news agency TASS. Dobrynin, former ambassador to the United States and newly appointed chairman of the foreign commission of the Soviet of nationalities, was referring to U.S. President Ronald Reagan's decision to stop observing the 1979 Soviet-U.S. SALT II accord because of alleged Soviet violations.

Chairing the meeting, Yegor Ligachev, a party Politburo member, said the Soviet Union "has been consistently standing for the strict observance" of arms control agreements and dismissed allegations that the Soviet Union has violated these accords, TASS said. Ligachev accused Washington of attempting to drag the Soviet Union into a new arms race, so as to "exhaust us economically, detract from our influence on the cause of peace and social progress and regain their lost positions."

Saying the United States is subverting the very process of disarmament, the senior party leader warned if Washington continues to do so, the 1972 anti-ballistic missile treaty could become the next victim of "American militarism." "If this happens, strategic stability in the world would be further impaired and the risk of the outbreak of nuclear war would grow by many times," Ligachev said.

At the meeting, Sergey Akhromeyev, chief of the general staff of the Soviet Armed Forces, denounced Washington as a violator of arms control agreements. He said the U.S. Administration has presented the 'gravest danger' by its "star wars" project, officially known as the Strategic Defense initiative, which aims to build an anti-missile shield in outer space.

Participants appealed to the U.S. Congress to make the Reagan administration abandon its decision on the SALT II Treaty. They are sending a copy of the resolution adopted at the meeting to both the U.S. Government and Congress.

TASS VIEWS REAGAN'S 'LIP SERVICE' TO DISARMAMENT

[Text] Moscow, June 21 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union today accused U.S. President Ronald Reagan of paying "lip service" to disarmament and said his latest speech on arms control was intended to justify his decision to scrap the SALT-II Treaty.

In the first Soviet reaction to Reagan's speech delivered at a high school in Glassboro, New Jersey, on June 19, the official news agency TASS said the President's remarks were "full of anti-Soviet cliches". The speech was an attempt to dilute the impact of "the concern and protest in the United States, Western Europe and the world as whole" over the U.S. decision to stop observing the U.S.-Soviet 1979 SALT II Treaty, TASS commented.

However, in his Thursday's address, Reagan, for the first time in his five years in office, said the Soviet Union has begun "to make a serious effort" in arms control. Reagan said that though he cannot accept recent Soviet disarmament proposals without change, it appears that Moscow has begun to make "a serious effort," which could represent "a turning point" in arms control. Reagan was referring to a recent Soviet proposal which called for a reduction in the two superpowers' strategic nuclear weapons as well as for Washington to limit its "star wars" project to laboratory testing and both sides to abide by the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty for another 15 years.

Accusing Reagan of only paying "lip service" to arms reduction, TASS said the U.S. Administration continues "taking steps leading to a heightening of international tension and the threat of war." TASS also denounced the U.S. allegation that Moscow has violated the 1979 Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT II).

As the United States is engaged in a massive rearmament program, it needs "a propaganda coverup," TASS said. "Washington intends to continue following a dangerous course aimed at breaking the existing regime of limitation of armaments and at attaining military superiority," it concluded.

SUPREME SOVIET MAKES MORE LEADERSHIP CHANGES

[Text] Moscow, June 19 (XINHUA) -- The Supreme Soviet today made more leadership changes naming both Gennadiy Vedernikov and Vladimir Gusev vice chairmen of the Council of Ministers while removing Yakov Ryabov as one of the council's deputy chiefs. According to the Soviet news agency TASS, the changes were made at the fifth session of the 11th Supreme Soviet.

TASS did not mention Ryabov's new job. The 58-year-old former vice chairman has been deputy chairman since September 1984. Ryabov was a first vice chairman of the country's Gosplan from 1979 to 1983 and a member of the Soviet Communist Party Central Committee Secretariat from 1976 to 1979. Gusev was party chief of the Saratov region for nine years before becoming the first vice chairman of the Council of Ministers in the Republic of Russia in 1985.

Today's move is one in a series of leadership changes within the Soviet state and government organs since the 27th Communist Party Congress last February. Earlier today, the Supreme Soviet elected Soviet Culture Minister Petr Demichev as first vice president of its Presidium, replacing 85-year-old Vasiliy Kuznetsov, who has retired for health reasons.

Meanwhile, Anatoliy Dobrynin, secretary of the Party's Central Committee, succeeded Boris Ponomarev as chairman of the Foreign Commission of the Soviet of Nationalities, while Viktor Grishin and Lev Zaykov were replaced by Yeltsin, Moscow party chief, and Yuriy Solovyev, Leningrad party chief, as members of the Presidium of the Supreme Soviet.

SUPREME SOVIET ADOPTS NEW ECONOMIC PLAN

[Excerpt] Moscow, June 19 (XINHUA) -- The Supreme Soviet ended its two-day session today by adopting a new five-year plan. The Economic and Social Development Plan for 1986-1990 will ensure "enhancing the effectiveness" of the country's economic performance and "a further rise in people's living standards," the official news agency TASS said.

The Soviet Union plans to double its national income and industrial production by the end of the century. "The current five-year plan period is to play a special role in the realization of the strategy," TASS said. The planned goals of the Soviet 12th Five-Year Plan include a 19 to 22 percent increase in national income, a 21 to 24 percent growth in industrial production and a 20 to 23 percent rise in labor productivity.

GORBACHEV CRITICIZES SKEPTICS OF ECONOMIC REFORMS

[Text] Moscow, June 16 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev today warned that Soviet economic reforms are being impeded by "inertia, stereotypes and ossification." Gorbachev told a plenum of the Soviet Communist Party that the national economy has been gathering steam. But, he complained, skepticism among some people about the reforms is slowing progress.

In a report to the plenum on the 1986-1990 Five-Year Plan, the Soviet leader "vigorously criticized those who continue to work in the old way, who clutch onto the least efficient methods, TASS news agency reported. Gorbachev said the party must maintain its fight against "irresponsibility, bureaucracy and other negative phenomena" which stand in the way of reforms.

He said in the 1970s and early 1980s, the Soviet economy lost much of its dynamism, largely because of the failure to intensify development and introduce up-to-date technologies. The past mistakes should not be repeated, he stressed. Gorbachev said implementation of the current five-year economic blueprint is decisive for the party's economic strategy and success of the plan lies partly in continued improvement of economic management. He urged enterprises to introduce the latest technologies and raise the quality of products, and promised measures to ensure greater autonomy to them.

Gorbachev expressed optimism over the latest economic indicators, saying that industrial output registered a 5.7 percent growth in the first five months of this year compared with the same period in 1985.

The plenary session of the Central Committee, installed at the party congress in march, approved the party's draft five-year plan for 1986-1990 and recommended that it be submitted for consideration to the Supreme Soviet, the Soviet Parliament, which is scheduled to meet Wednesday, TASS said.

The one-day plenum also discussed personnel matters, an indication that some leadership changes are on the cards. The committee also approved a resolution on the outcome of the Warsaw Pact summit held in Budapest, Hungary, on Tuesday and Wednesday, which tabled a major East-West troop reduction proposal.

DPRK DECLARES TOTAL BAN ON NUCLEAR WEAPONS

[Text] Pyongyang, June 23 (XINHUA) -- The government of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK) today announced a complete prohibition of nuclear weapons within its boundaries. In a statement read at a press conference here, the DPRK Government declared that it will refrain from testing and production, stockpiling and introduction of nuclear weapons and will allow neither the establishment of any foreign military bases including nuclear bases, nor the passage of foreign nuclear weapons through its land, air space and territorial waters.

The statement demanded that the United States stop introducing new nuclear arms into South Korea, phase out the already-introduced ones, and rescind all operational plans to use nuclear arms in the peninsula.

Noting that the danger of a nuclear war in Korea is threatening peace and security in Asia and in the world at large, the statement again called for turning the peninsula into a peace zone free of nuclear arms and bases -- a proposal the DPRK Government has repeatedly put forward recently. In this respect, the statement said, the DPRK Government is willing to negotiate with the United States and the South Korean authorities at any time and irrespective of its formality, should they consider it necessary.

The statement said that the Korean people love peace and under any circumstances they do not want to see a new world war or a nuclear war because of the Korean problem. The statement also called for international support for the Korean people's efforts to turn the peninsula into a nuclear-free peace zone.

[Text] Paris, June 20 (XINHUA) -- An international peace conference on a nuclear-free Korean peninsula will be held in Pyongyang on September 6-8, a high-ranking official of an international organization in support of Korea's peaceful unification announced here today. Guy Dupre, secretary-general of the International Liaison Committee for the Independent and Peaceful Reunification of Korea, told a press conference that the establishment of a nuclear-free zone on the peninsula is a decisive step towards detente, which will create an atmosphere favorable to the peaceful unification of Korea. "We are convinced that it will contribute greatly to world peace and we are willing to help create conditions for the realization of the goal," he said.

DPRK COMMUNIQUE URGES NONALIGNED UNITY

[Text] Pyongyang, June 21 (XINHUA) -- Korea today asked all peace-loving peoples, particularly those of the non-aligned countries, to close ranks in the struggle for the right of self-determination and against imperialism. A communique adopted at a joint meeting of the Central Political Bureau of the Korean Workers' Party and the Central Committee of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea held yesterday, appealed to non-aligned nations to make positive efforts to halt the arms race and to destroy all nuclear weapons.

Non-aligned countries should also demand foreign military pullout from their territories and reject foreign requests for military bases in their lands, the communique said. The communique asked non-aligned countries to promote South-South cooperation and economic self-reliance. In addition, the communique also called for political negotiations instead of military confrontation to settle disputes among non-aligned nations.

RENMIN RIBAO ON JAPANESE TEXTBOOK ISSUE

OW231138 Beijing in Japanese to Japan 2130 GMT 22 Jun 86

[Text] The 22 June issue of RENMIN RIBAO carries in its international section a fairly long news analysis entitled "What Is the Japanese Textbook Issue?" In discussing the issue concerning a high school textbook prepared by the National Council for the Defense of Japan, the analysis points out the fact that the Japanese Government issued a statement in 1982, stating that in screening texxtbooks, it would respect the spirit of the China-Japan joint statement. Moreover, the analysis criticizes the textbook prepared by the council for attempting to deny historical facts about the aggressive war in many respects as well as to mislead education in history, and it also notes that the textbook has been strongly denounced by various circles in Japan.

In conclusion, the analysis points out that in dealing with the denunciation both at home and abroad, the Japanese authorities concerned have explained that the textbook is still in the process of screening and it has not obtained the final stamp of approval. Reportedly, the Japanese authorities concerned have recently stated that the final version of the rewritten textbook will comply with the statement issued by the chief cabinet secretary in 1982. The analysis then states that, at any rate, we hope the textbook will deal with history fairly and objectively, draw a useful lesson from history, and be useful in promoting everlasting friendship between Japan and its Asian neighbors and in bringing about well-being for future Japanese generations.

JAPAN TO SUPPORT CGDK EIGHT-POINT PROPOSAL

OW201237 Beijing XINHUA in English 1149 GMT 20 Jun 86

[Excerpt] Tokyo, June 20 (XINHUA) -- Japan is set to throw its weight behind an eight-point proposal put forward by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea (CGDK), according to local press reports today. Government officials were quoted as saying that at the forthcoming enlarged meeting of the foreign ministers of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations in Manila, Foreign Minister Shintaro Abe will express the Japanese Government's support for the eight-pointd proposal to settle the Kampuchean issue. In addition, the foreign minister will call for Vietnamese pullout from Kampuchea and reiterate Japan's support for the CGDK.

ASEAN FOREIGN MINISTERS MEET IN MANILA 23 JUNE

Urges SRV To Acccept CGDK Proposal

OW231608 Beijing XINHUA in English 1451 GMT 23 Jun 86

[Text] Manila, June 23 (XINHUA) -- Foreign ministers of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) today strongly urged Vietnam to accept an eight-point proposal offered by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea.

The ministers emphasized that the Kampuchean issue continued to be the principal barrier to regional peace, and that Vietnam must withdraw all its troops from Kampuchea.

Addressing the opening session of the 19th ASEAN foreign ministers' meeting here this morning, all leaders of the delegations from the six ASEAN member countries of Brunei, Indonesia, Malaysia, Singapore, the Philippines and Thailand, as well as those from Papua New Guinea, dwelt on the main political topic for discussion -- the Kampuchean problem.

The eight-point proposal of the U.N.-recognized tripartite Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea (CGDK), made public in March of this year, called for the phased withdrawal of the Vietnam troops from Kampuchea and the setting up of a four-party coalition government composed of the three resistance factions and the Heng Samrin regime.

Singapore Foreign Minister S. Dhanabalan addressed the meeting that the CGDK has taken a diplomatic initiative with its eight-point proposal, which has enough important elements to form part of the framework for a political settlement.

Salvador Laurel, Philippine vice-president and foreign minister pointed out that the situation in Kampuchea continued to be the most urgent problem. He said "our collective efforts in rallying more countries in support of the United Nations resolution on Kampuchea have continued to pay off." He called for more persevering efforts to enlist more support for ASEAN's resolution on Kampuchea. He emphasized, "insistent international condemnation of armed Vietnamese intervention in Kampuchea can only serve to hasten the resolution of the conflict and restore peace and stability in our part of the world."

Malaysian Foreign Minister Tengku Ahmad Rithauddeen said that despite ASEAN's reasonableness and seriousness in the efforts to find a political solution, the Kampuchean problem remains the preoccupation of the region. "ASEAN is earnest in its efforts to find a political solution to the Kampuchean problem and has taken several initiatives. Asean supports CGDK's eight points proposal as it reaffirms ASEAN resolve that the Kampuchean people must solve the Kampuchean problem. We are firmly convinced of its validity as a positive and contructive framework for a political settlement," he pointed out. However, he said that no substantial progress has been achieved because of Vietnamese inseriousness to resole the Kampuchean problem through a political solution.

Reviewing the development of the situation in Kampuchea, Thailand Deputy Foreign Minister Alun Panupong summed up briefly: Vietnam's military occupation of Kampuchea remained a constant threat to the regional peace and security that ASEAN had striven to preserve.

He said the eight-point proposal "is comprehensive, flexible and reasonable." He urged Vietnam to reconsider its rejection of this proposal. He emphasized that the resistance fighters in Kampuchea have never been more determined to wage a united struggle to secure freedom and independence. "The destiny of Kampuchea must ultimately be decided by the Kampuchean people themselves," he added.

Indonesian Foreign Minister Mokhtar Kusumaatmaja said that the Kampuchean problem continued to be "the principal source of tension and instability and a major obstacle to our larger objective of ensuring a future of peace, genuine independence and prosperity for Southeast Asia." He contined that the CGDK "has also shown its readiness to consider any viable approach that would lead to the withdrawal of foreign forces, achieve national reconciliation, establish a government of the people's own choice and assure Kampuchean's independence, non-aligned and neutral status in the region and beyond."

Prince Mohamed Bolkiah, Brunei foreign minister, said that the problem in Kampuchea remained unresolved. It continued to be the principal barrier to regional peace and stability. As ASEAN resolutely continued to exert its efforts to find a solution, so too, Vietnam continues to be intransigent. He said, "We should try to strive and gather our collective strength and ability to ensure the attainment of the larger objective -- to make Southeast Asia a region of peace, freedom, progress and prosperity."

Papua New Guinean Foreign Minister Leguvagi, who is attending the meeting as an observer, said the eight-point proposal "has merits and can serve as a basis for a settlement." "But the initiative can only succeed if Vietnamese troops withdraw," he stressed. He expressed his country's support for the active role played by ASEAN on the Kampuchean issue.

Condemn South Africa

OW231913 Beijing XINHUA in English 1900 GMT 23 Jun 86

[Text] Manila, June 23 (XINHUA) -- Foreign ministers from the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) today condemned the Pretoria regime in South Africa for its racist repressive policies and practices.

A declaration, issued this afternoon by the ASEAN foreign ministers, said that the escalating strife and tensions in South Africa pose a serious threat to regional and international peace and security.

The foreign ministers, who are here for the 19th ASEAN ministerial meeting, also reaffirmed their solidarity and support for the legitimate struggle of the South African people against apartheid. They specifically called for the immediate revocation of the state of emergency, an end to the repressive measures and the unconditional release of all political prisoners and detainees.

"In the face of Pretoria's intransigence, the foreign ministers were convinced of the compelling need to bring worldwide pressure to bear on South Africa through the application of comprehensive and mandatory sanctions in accordance with the Charter of the United Nations," the declaration said.

The foreign ministers also reiterated their condemnation of the act of defiance by the racist Pretoria regime in continuing its illegal occupation of Namibia. They said the act is in "complete disregard of the right of self-determination of the Namibian people and in United Nations regulations."

The foreign ministers reaffirmed their commitment to the U.N. efforts to bring about, as early as possible, genuine independence to the Namibian people in a united Namibia.

The ASEAN foreign ministers also called upon the international community to maintain relentless pressure on South African authorities and to extend greater support to the just struggle of the Namibian people under the leadership of the Southwest African People's Organization (SWAPO). They also believed that the forthcoming international conference for the immediate independence of Namibia in Vienna will be another significant step toward the realization of the Namibian independence "on the basis of Security Council Resolution 435 of 1978."

PRC DELEGATION ADDRESSES ESCAP MEETING IN BANGKOK

[Text] Bangkok, June 16 (XINHUA) -- The deterioration of external environment is the principal factor for the sharp decline in economic growth rate of the developing countries in the Asian and Pacific region since 1985. This was stated by Wang Pingqing, head of the Chinese delegation to the meeting of ministers of trade of the United Nations Economic and Social Commission for Asia and the Pacific (ESCAP) region which opened here this morning.

The three-day meeting attended by trade ministers and representatives from 20 developing countries in the Asian and Pacific region has the task of assessing trade performance and prospects in the region and working out specific measures for facilitating intra-regional trade expansion.

Wang explained that the ever-intensifying protectionism of developed countries, the continued fall in prices of primary products, reduction in official development assistance and turbulence in international monetary practices and finance -- all these factors have led to sharp contraction of export markets for developing countries of the region. "Such a situation is not only deterimental to the regional economic and trade development, but also to the revitalization of the world economy," he said.

Trade cooperation, he stressed, constitutes a major component and an important form of economic and technological cooperation of the region. He believed that to strengthen the regional trade and economic cooperation is an essential means to maintain economic development in the region. "Self-reliance and international cooperation are the two essential elements for development," he added.

He concluded by saying that the relevant existing Research and Training Institute on International Trade in China is ready to provide certain host facilities for implementing regional projects on trade research and training.

[Text] Singapore, June 18 (XINHUA) -- Tourist department of China and Singapore have agreed to mount a joint promotional campaign to sell both countries as a tourist package. This is the first step to boost tourism in both countries in the spirit of an accord signed in February this year.

A four-member team from the China International Travel Servce (CITS) has discussed with the Singapore Tourist Promotion Board (STPB) the possible ways or marketing the package tours. The Chinese team concluded its 10-day visit here today.

With the marketing of the joint tourist destinations, Singapore becomes the second gate-way to China, apart from Hong Kong, which has an advantage of proximity and cheap air fares. Singapore could attract tourist from the U.S., Australia, New Zealand and Western Europe to China. By jointly packaging the destination, new tourists may also be drawn to come through Singapore.

The CITS and the STPB have tentatively budgeted for a campaign of filmlets, posters and brochures to sell the joint destination idea to both tour operators and travellers. A meeting of a joint committee of cooperation in tourism, civil aviation and exhibitions of the two countries will convene in Beijing from June 24 to 28 to discuss further details about the package.

PAKISTAN'S FORMER FOREIGN MINISTER ON PRC

[Text] Islamabad, June 19 (XINHUA) -- Agha Shahi, former foreign minister of Pakistan, said here today that it should be a matter of deep satisfaction to the Pakistan people that China is committed to the support of Pakistan in safeguarding its sovereignty. He said this while speaking at a one-day seminar held in celebration of the 35th anniversary of the establishment of diplomatic relations between Pakistan and China.

He said the relationship between Pakistan and China was a basic feature of the foreign policies of both countries. He noted that the late Chinese Premier Zhou Enlai had said when visiting Pakistan in 1964 that the relations between the two countries were in the fundamental interests of the peoples of Pakistan and China and therefore could not be broken. He said successive authorities in both Pakistan and China had nurtured and nourished the Sino-Pakistan friendship and cooperation to their mutual benefit over the last 35 years.

Five academic reports written by Pakistan and Chinese scholars were read at the seminar, in which the scholars expounded various aspects of the Pak-China friendly relations. They maintained that the development of the relations between the two countries coincides with the interests of the two peoples and is beneficial to peace and stability in the region.

PAKISTANI LEADERS CRITICIZE SOLARZ PROPOSAL

[Text] Islamabad, June 17 (XINHUA) -- Members of the National Assembly (MNA) and leaders of politial parties here have described a recent statement by U.S. Congressman Stephen Solarz favoring mid-term elections in Pakistan as "blatant interference" in Pakistan's internal affairs. Expressing "profound concern" and "utmost astonishment" at Solarz' remarks in a recent BBC interview, several National Assembly members said the American congressman should bear in mind that the Pakistani people did not at all subscribe to his views.

The holding of general elections in the country, they said, is purely an internal matter. Solarz has no right to speak about Pakistan's internal affairs. National Assembly member Mohammad Siddiq Kanju described the statement as insulting and said the present elected government does not need any guidance or interference from abroad as it only respects the will of the Pakistani people.

Ghulam Mohammad Chishti, also an assembly member, severely condemned the statement and proposed that the matter be taken up at the diplomatic level by the government. Iqbal Haider, secretary general of Qaumi Mohaz-e Azadi (National Forum of Freeodom), who is a member of the opposition alliance "Movement for Restoration of Democracy" (MRD), also described Solarz' statement as "a crude interference in Pakistan's internal affairs." He said his party favors mid-term polls yet insists that the statement is "interference in our internal matters."

In the BBC interview June 14, Solarz said that "the political stability in Pakistan can best be achieved by further progress towards democracy through an agreement between the government and the opposition on a date for new elections on party basis." Solarz, during a recent visit to Pakistan, met with Pakistan President Mohammad Ziaul Haq and also with co-chairperson of the Pakistan People's Party Benazir Bhutto, daughter of the executed Prime Minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto.

PAKISTANI PREMIER ON PEACEFUL NUCLEAR PROGRAM

OW0221755 Beijing XINHUA in English 1746 GMT 22 Jun 86

[Text] Islamabad, June 22 (XINHUA) -- Prime Minister Mohammad Khan Junejo said today that Pakistan's nuclear program was entirely peaceful in nature and was solely aimed at meeting the demands of socio-economic development. He said this while speaking at the inauguration of the 11th International Summer College on Physics and Contemporary Needs organized by the Pakistan Atomic Energy Commission.

The prime minister said Pakistan was seeking the technology of nuclear power generation. "We are desperately short of energy and our over-reliance on a single resource, hydro-electricity, creates problems with seasonal changes in water availability and rainfall," he said.

He said this adversely affected industry and agriculture, which can't depend on Pakistan's limited gas resources. And Pakistan doesn't want to import more oil. Instead, Junejo said, the country should diversify its energy sources. For this reason, nuclear power will play a vital role. Junejo said Pakistan believes in non-proliferation of nuclear weapons both at the international and regional level.

Because economic and social development is the country's first priority, and because such development requires peace, Pakistan is genuinely interested in the denuclearization of South Asia and has repeatedly proposed the creation of a nuclear weapon-free zone in this region, he said. Junejo remarked on the role of the Pakistan Atomic Energy Commission, saying it had helped Pakistan acquire advanced technology, produce better crops and it had introduced nuclear medicine and radio-therapy to the country.

PRC-VATICAN CONTACTS POSSIBLE AT CONFERENCE

[By Pierre-Antoine Donnet]

[Text] Beijing, June 24 (AFP) -- A week-long meeting of the World Conference on Peace and Religion opening here Wednesday will provide an opportunity for informal contacts between China and the Vatican, the secretary-general of the Holy See said Tuesday.

Dr. John Taylor told reporters that Vatican authorities were very happy about the conference, which will bring together 140 religious figures from 30 countries under United Nations auspices.

"They regard this as one step among many other steps of informal contacts with different religious leaders in China," he said. "There is a great deal of good will on the part of the Vatican about the meeting." China broke off relations with the Vatican in 1957 and created the "China Patriotic Catholic Association" for the country's three million Catholics. The group is totally independent of the Vatican and names its own prelates.

Some of the 30 countries invited to the conference, including Israel, South Korea and South Africa, have no diplomatic relations with China.

Dr. Taylor said that an archbishop and two bishops from the Vatican would attend the conference and visit churches and Catholic institutions in Beijing. The Vatican secretary-general said that delegates to the conference would also hold private informal discussions with their Chinese counterparts on violations of human rights in China. In particular, he said, they would raise the subject of Catholic priests imprisoned in China and Tibet, annexed by China in 1951.

According to Amnesty International, about 10 Catholic priests, most of whom are over 70 years old, are jailed in China for maintaining relations with the Vatican.

Despite the official inflexible position towards the Vatican, which Beijing has accused of meddling in its internal affairs, China has recently made several conciliatory gestures, observers said. They cited the July 1985 release of the former Bishop of Shanghai, Ignatius Gong Pinmei, who has spent more than 30 years in Chinese prisons.

Dr. Taylor also said that he had recently met the Dalai Lama, the Tibetan spiritual leader who has been in exile in India since a failed anti-Chinese uprising in 1959. His Chinese hosts were aware of the meeting, he said.

Dr. Taylor said that since the end of the Cultural Revolution (1976-1976), Chinese authorities have recognized the social value of religion and have allowed for greater religious freedom.

The World Conference on Peace and Religion, a non-governmental organization attached to the United Nations, was created in Kyoto, Japan, in 1970. Its members include Christians, Moslems, Buddhists, Hindus and Jews. Han Wenzao, secretary-general of the Chinese organizing committee, said that officials from Catholic, Protestant, Buddhist and Taoist organizations in China would attend the conference.

The conference opening in Beijing this week is the first to be held by the organization in a communist country. "By meeting in China, we are recognizing the importance of China on the world scene as an actual and potential peacemaker," Dr. Taylor said.

He praised Chinese leaders for making positive criticisms of the arms race between the United States and the Soviet Union.

Beijing held its first international conference on peace and disarmament in June 1985, and has since sent representatives to similar meetings held around the world. For several years, Chinese authorities have also allowed delegations from countries with which Beijing does not have diplomatic relations to attend conferences held in China under the auspices of international bodies.

FURTHER REPORTAGE ON VISIT OF MALIAN PRESIDENT

Holds Talks With Deng Xiaoping

OW211016 Beijing XINHUA in English 0932 GMT 21 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 21 (XINHUA) -- China will stick with socialism after it develops, and will not forget its poorer friends in the Third World, senior Chinese leader Deng Xiaoping said here today. Deng, chairman of the Communist Party Central Advisory Commission was speaking at a meeting with visiting Malian President Moussa Traore, at which they discussed the prospects of China's development and its significance.

The Chinese leader forecast that China's total national income would exceed 1,000 billion U.S. dollars a year by the end of the century, and would catch up with developed countries in 30 to 50 years after that. He said: "China is a force to safeguard world peace, and it will be stronger by that time. This means that the forces of opposing hegemonism and safeguarding world peace will be much stronger. "China's influence plus other peaceful forces in the world -- especially the development of the Third World -- will provide favorable conditions for the prevention of war."

Deng said that China's development meant that one-fifth of the human race was escaping poverty. This was an important contribution to humanity. As an ancient country, China had made outstanding historical contributions to human civilization, but feudalism had arrested its progress for a long time. This had resulted in China being bullied by imperialism, and the country had been left in a state of poverty and backwardness. He said: "China will continue to belong to the Third World when it has become developed. This is very important, and is the foundation of our national policy. We will teach our future generations always to regard China as a Third World country, and not to forget all the poorer friends in the world."

President Traore wished China even greater successes on the road to development.

Deng praised policies pursued by Mali, and said: "China and Mali are both going through a period of development, and our experiences have shown that it is important to work out policies in accordance with practical conditions. Only by applying domestic and foreign policies to suit a country's needs can difficulties be overcome."

HU QILI ADDRESSES SCIENCE CONGRESS OPENING

[By reporters Zhu Weixin and Wu Ming]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 23 Jun (XINHUA) -- The third national congress of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology opened with grandeur this afternoon in Beijing. Comrade Hu Qili, who was present on this occasion, paid high respects and extended heartfelt thanks to the scientific and technological workers throughout the country on behalf of the party Central Committee and the State Council.

Other leading comrades, including Fang Yi, Tian Jiyun, Hao Jianxiu, Wang Zhaoguo, and Song Jian, were also present at the opening ceremony and extended warm greetings to the representatives from the science and technology circles.

Comrade Hu Qili addressed the opening ceremony. He said: The Chinese Association for Science and Technology is the link whereby our party and government keep in contact with scientific and technological workers. It also assists the party and government in developing the work of science and technology of our country. In recent years, the Chinese Association for Science and Technology has, on its own initiative, supported the orientation of combining science and technology with economic construction, organized the broad masses of scientists and technicians to conduct extensive academic exchanges and establish lateral ties at home and abroad, gone all out to popularize the knowledge of science and technology, and made energetic efforts to offer consultation service and facilitate the contacts between scientific and technological workers and the party and government. It has thus played a significant role in building the socialist material and spiritual civilizations.

He pointed out: Our country has made rapid progress in economic construction over the past few years. This is partly due to the work of the science and technology circles. Our progress is, indeed, linked with the enthusiasm and painstaking efforts of the vast numbers of scientists and technicians. Now we are in an important historical period. Confronted with new circumstances and demands, we hope that those on the scientific and technological front will work hard in three areas:

First, go all out to reform the management system of science and technology, unswervingly gear the work to economic construction, and take it as a main task of science and technology to help achieve the goal of quadrupling the gross annual value of industrial and agricultural production by the end of this century. To gear the work of science and technology to economic construction, it is necessary, first of all, to apply new scientific research results to various sectors of the national economy, especially to those trades and economic sectors that have great bearings on our economic construction and social development, such as energy production, transportation, telecommunication, and raw and semifinished materials industries. Meanwhile, great attention must be paid to gearing the work to the needs in rural areas. The "sparking plan," being carried out in the countryside, is a good way for science and technology to serve the needs of the rural economy. In addition, it is imperative to pay great attention to promoting basic scientific research, catching up with the development of high technology, and being prepared scientifically and technologically for our progress in the next century.

Second, give full play to the role of science and technology in building spiritual civilization and fight against ignorance, superstition, and backwardness. The level of development of science and technology is one of the significant hallmarks showing a nation's quality and civilization. It is, therefore, a major task in building spiritual civilization to spread the knowledge of science, technology, and culture among the people and to make ceaseless efforts to raise their level in this regard.

Third, keep to the policy of letting a hundred schools of thought contend, carry forward democracy, strengthen unity, and develop extensive academic exchange both at home and abroad. In scientific research and academic study, we should not only encourage the free discussions of different academic views and the emergence of outstanding persons, but also encourage and support scientists and technicians to put forward their views and suggestions on major questions concerning economic construction, the technological work policy, and social development. It is imperative to knock down the barriers between higher and lower levels and between different regions, departments, and localities and to oppose sectarianism and the practice of blockading each other. Instead, the practice of closing ranks to cooperate, working in concert, and making joint efforts to solve key problems should be promoted.

Hu Qili continued: To play its role still better, the Chinese Association for Science and Technology should persist in promoting reforms. It should serve the needs of making reforms and opening to the outside world. In addition, it should work in a democratic way, enthusiastically serve the needs of scientific and technological workers, let the party and government know their opinions and requirements, and safeguard their legitimate rights and interests so as to preserve its characteristics as a mass organization.

Referring to the need for scientific and technological workers to enhance their unity, he stressed that at present it is necessary to promote the practice of "respecting knowledge and competent persons" among scientists and technicians just as in other communities. Intellectuals and scientific and technological workers should learn from each other and support and respect each other, he said.

Concluding his speech, Hu Qili emphasized that party committees and governments at all levels should attach importance and give support to the work of associations of science and technology and make every effort to create favorable conditions for these associations to unite the vast numbers of scientific and technological works so that they will make still greater contributions to building the socialist material and spiritual civilizations.

At today's session, Yan Jici, vice chairman of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology, made an opening speech after Wang Ganchang, another vice chairman of the association, declared the congress open.

Speeches were also given by Luo Gan, vice president of the All-China Federation of Trade Unions; Song Defu, first secretary of the CYL Central Committee,; Wang Shuxian, member of the Secretariat of the All-China Women's Federation; Zhang Guoji, president of the All-China Federation of Returned Overseas Chinese; Zhou Wenyuan, deputy director of the General Political Department of the Chinese PLA. Zhou Peiyuan, chairman of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology, delivered a work report, entitled "Work Hard in Unity and Contribute Our Expertise and Wisdom to the Fulfillment of the Seventh 5-Year Plan."

Among the noted scientists and leading members of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology attending today's session and sitting at the front row on the rostrum were Mao Yisheng, Qian Xuesen, Pei Lisheng, Zhang Wei, Lin Lanying, Yang Xiandong, Qian Sanqiang, Jin Shanbao, and Wang Shuntong.

Stresses '100 Schools' Policy

OW231416 Beijing XINHUA in English 1353 GMT 23 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 23 (XINHUA) -- China must further resolutely and unswervingly implement the policy of letting 100 schools of thought contend, a Chinese Communist Party leader said here today.

The country must develop democracy in order to create a good environment and atmosphere for bold exploration and free contention among different academic schools, said Hu Qili, member of the Political Bureau and Secretariat of the Communist Party Central Committee.

He was speaking at the third national congress of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology which opened today. It will last for five days.

The aim of creating such an environment and atmosphere, Hu said, is to boost China's science and technology, train more competent people and to tap their potential to the full.

He said: "In scientific research and academic study, we should encourage not only free discussions of different academic views among outstanding thinkers, but also encourage scientists and technicians to put forward their views and suggestions about the country's economic construction and policies concerning technical and social development."

Decision-making bodies should make sure that scientists and technicians took part in the investigation, discussions and the drawing up of policies, and should listen to their views. They should continue to listen to differing views and new suggestions and earnestly study them even after decisions were made.

He said: "Even if some of the views and concepts are wrong as proved in practice, we should adopt a good attitude, and convince people by reasoning.

"We must never repeat the erroneous methods of forcing people to accept different academic views and ideas, and of imposing various political labels on them."

The training of competent people and the progress of science and technology depended on the development of democracy and the improvement of the democratic system.

He added: "The party's policy of letting 100 schools of thought contend is the concrete manifestation of socialist democracy in the field of science and technology, and whether we should adhere to this policy or not is in essence whether or not we should develop and improve socialist democracy."

Developing Technology Urged

OW231428 Beijing XINHUA in English 1409 GMT 23 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 23 (XINHUA) -- China's economic success and modernization will depend on the development and use of sophisticated technology, Hu Qili, member of the Political Bureau and Secretariat of the Communist Party Central committee, said today.

Speaking at the third national congress here of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology, Hu said: "We must approach the level of economically-advanced countries and strive to catch up with them scientifically in the next century.

"Whether we can accomplish the goal in betweeen 30 and 50 years depends on our technical reserves."

He noted that competition between countries focused on economic power, and that economic competition is, to a great extent, scientific and technical competition.

Hu called on scientific workers to study the development of sophisticated technology closely and to absorb advanced foreign science and technology.

Modern science and technology is the most active and decisive factor in the new social productive force. It will boost the commercial economy, enliven enterprises and raise economic efficiency and productivity, he said.

Science must serve economic development, and new scientific results must be put into use in the national economic development, especially in the development of energy and raw materials, transport and telecommunications.

The rural economic reforms and the change in the agricultural and industrial structures have also presented a challenge to scientists.

Hu added: "We must acquire a scientific outlook, and break economic barriers between regions and departments to promote co-operation."

LIAOWANG ON IMPLEMENTING 'DOUBLE HUNDRED' POLICY

HK230419 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 24, 16 Jun 86 p 1

["Letter from Beijing" by Bao Xin: "A Re-Understanding of the 'Double-Hundred' Policy"]

[Text] Dear Brother:

Recently, newspapers in the capital have repeatedly carried articles on the policy of "letting a hundred flowers blossom and letting a hundred schools of thought contend." From different angles people have been discussing the experience of the "double-hundred" policy and forecasting its future. There has been a fairly heated discussion.

In appearance, these articles have been written to mark the 30th anniversary of the formulation of the "double-hundred" policy.

In fact, this is because we have been provided with the necessary conditions to regard it as a basic national policy for bringing prosperity to the academic, artistic, ideological, and cultural fields, so that people are in a good frame of mind to talk about its "history." If that is not the case, why was there nobody mentioning it at its 10th and 20th anniversaries?

After a long pregnancy, the "double-hundred" policy was born in 1956, a year in which glorious successes were scored in both economic and cultural construction. However, having suffered many a setback, it met with misfortune at its first anniversary. Because class struggle was unrealistically stresssed, matters in the ideological, academic, literature, and art fields were again and again repudiated and struggled with as political issues. During the 10 years of the Cultural Revolution, a situation marked by "10,000 horses standing mute" appeared. At its 20th anniversary, the "double-hundred" policy existed in name only. That a good policy should have failed to yield satisfactory results made Lu Dingyi, Yu Guangyuan, and other historical witnesses of the "double-hundred" policy sigh with emotion in retrospect.

The "double-hundred" policy was born in a fourishing age and it has revived in a flourishing age, too. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, with the rectification of the guiding ideology, the "double-hundred" policy has stood up again like a phoenix rising from the ashes. Moreover, China, which is carrying out reforms, has planted a luxuriant Chinese parasol so that the phoenix can perch upon the tree, flapping its wings and singing.

The tree trunk is the political line of the CPC. The people have discarded the theory of "taking clas struggle as a key link" and replaced it with unity. They are engaging in the four modernizations program with one heart and one mind and are trying to reunify the motherland with the concept of "one country, two systems." Erroneously attacking our own people as the enemy can be regarded as the most profound lesson the people of the whole country have learned from the "leftist " line. In Shanghai, Hu Qili recently reaffirmed: "We shall neither launch mass movements, bludgeon people, stick political labels on them, nor make them the targets of criticism or attack." "We should uphold the 'double-hundred' policy, convice people by giving them guidance, and encourage them to give voice to their innermost feelings." Facts over the past 7-8 years have shown that these words have been matched with deeds. The slogans "creative freedom" and "academic freedom" have been earnestly presented and are being conscientiously put into practice.

Moreover, fundamental changes have taken place in people's views toward intellectuals. When the "leftist" line prevailed, intellectuals were regarded as an alien force called the "stinking ninth category." Now, intellectuals are a component part of the working class. Knowledge and intellectuals should be respected and cadres should master intellectual work. An important cause for our failure to satisfactorily implement the "double-hundred" policy in the past was the erroneous views toward intellectuals. This situation no longer exists.

In implementing the "double-hundred" policy, there is also a question of method, namely, how to approach differing views and how to correctly handle contradictions among the people.

Naturally, people will not discuss the "double-hundred" policy with robbers and swindlers who have violated the law. This policy largely involves contradictions among the people. Since Hu Yaobang put forward the policy of "persuasion," CPC leaders at all levels have made notable progress in this respect. Hu Yaobang, Zhu Houze, and other leaders recently stressed the need to protect people airing differing opinions and views. They also said that differing views can be settled through discussion and that we should not stick such labels as liberalism and an ossified way of thinking on people in an oversimplified way. Problems in the spiritual world can only be solved by democratic means and people should be encouraged to conduct experiments and to explore new ground. A leader recently said: The best method for handling contradictions is to handle them slowly in the manner of "a slow rate of flow at low velocity, a mild rain, or a gentle breeze."

After 3 decades of practice, many lessons, both positive and negative, have enabled people to gain a clearer understanding of the importance of implementing the "double-hundred" policy. By listening to Li Siguang's unorthodox speech at the geological institute China has today become the world's sixth largest oil producer; by rejecting Ma Yinchu's theory on population control China lost control over its population. In the stage of conducting reforms, China precisely needs the "double-hundred" policy to extensively adopt popular views. A leader recently said: The period of reform is one of which opinions vary and people carry on endless discussions. We should encourage cadres in their hundreds of thousands and the people in their hundreds of millions to be bold in conducting experiments, forging ahead, and blazing new trials.

The environment in which people forge ahead and blaze new trails is also one of the endless discussions. It is impossible for people to make experiments in complete silence. We should get used to living and working in an environment of endless discussions and learn to give correct guidance and to choose and follow what is good in the course of such discussions. Party work style, social conduct, and study style should become more mature in the course of implementing the "double-hundred" policy.

Obviously, the "double-hundred" policy will have good fortune in the future.

Sincerely yours,
Bao Xin

WANG MENG ON ASPECTS OF LITERATURE IN NEW ERA

HK210616 Beijing WENYI BAO in Chinese 14 Jun 86 p 1

[Article by Wang Meng: "On 'Excitement'"]

[Text] The literature in the 10 years of the new era will go down in history. It has been so lively, so changeable, and so enthusiastic, and has had so many readers and writers, new writers in particular. Exactly because of this these brilliant achievements have been highly spoken of by people. As I write this article, a fantastic idea suddenly occurs to me: Should I write something this time about the "shortcomings?" (Maybe I would be taking some risks by doing so.)

The new era has been full of exciting and excited literature. The emancipation of the mind is, in fact, the emancipation of the soul. The emancipation has greatly excited the souls of the writers and readers of literature. They excitedly break through the "forbidden zones," excitedly make explorations and draw lessons from the new methods of expression; excitedly issue awards, receive awards, and make criticism and countercriticism; excitedly put forward various ideas and banners, excitedly run journals and organize contingents; excitedly open up to the outside world, make exchanges with the foreign countries, and go abroad; excitedly aim toward international awards; and excitedly glibly talk about the need for "solitude," and so on.

Literature needs excitement and yet does not need excitement, and is similar to sports in this aspect. Artistic creation is arduous and protracted, and it is often difficult to immediately reap results and just. It needs a long-standing accumulation of living experiences, thoughts, and feelings, in-depth study and research, and concentrated and wholehearted labor. If someone makes impassioned and vehement speeches one day and the next day is deeply moved to tears by other speeches; if someone amazes the world one day with a single brilliant feat and becomes famous and on the next day becomes a controversial person and a center of public attention; if someone one day is encouraged, well-received, and exceptionally promoted and on the next day is helped, taught, and persuaded; if someone one day visits Jiuzhai Ridge and on the next day goes to Jiangou Hotel; if someone one day spreads news and on the next day tries to discover the "spirit"; and if someone on one day puts forward a banner and on the other day raises a proposition, then could he possibly concentrate on writing?

Literature is a very serious cause. At present, with so many journals and periodicals and such talented contracting editors who are able to buy articles by greenhorns, take the risk of damaging themselves to win the confidence of writers, steal others' articles midway, flagrantly snatch others' articles, and so on, no editor dare to offer any suggestions for improvement on a basically successful article by a certain instantly famous writer. If you dare to suggest that a writer "polish" a certain part of his article, some capable people waiting in the wings will surely seize the opportunity and promise that "not a single word in this article will be changed. We are going to carry it on the front page and pay you handsome contribution fees."

Recently we have often heard high-sounding and inappropriate opinions, including some literary criticism.

Some people tend to give a certain writer, viewpoint, or school (if it has almost taken such a shape) the pills of strength on one day, but feed the same writer or viewpoint or another writer or viewpoint with purgatives. Can't they "exercise some moderation?"

Some people propose that to have "stunning works" we should first of all have "stunning literary criticism." Some people say that writers are created by "favorable comments." When all the works and criticism are stunning, won't the readers be stunned? Some localities have proposed working out plans for reaching set levels in a certain number of years. Regarding these opinions and ideas, I respect them yet am doubtful.

There is also the issue of writers' maneuvers and trends. In order to publish a work or receive an award or to be a councillor or because of a literary review or a chance to visit foreign countries, some writers maneuver among various political groupings, looking for patrons and establishing relationships. Shouldn't they avoid this unnecessary expense of energy?

There are often various eloquent debates over the conditions and social standing of writers. It is a fact that there are still a considerable number of writers in our country who have very low social standing (in some localities writers are not even recognized as intellectuals in determining their technical titles) and very poor living and working conditions. Leaders at all levels should have undeniable responsibility for providing better conditions for the writers' creative labor and improving their present conditions.

Viewing both Chinese and foreign literature, we can see that it is also a fact that the condition and social standing of a writer do not have a direct or immediate bearing on his work achievements. I think that it is not necessary to cite examples.

It is, of course, a gratifying phenomenon of ideological liveliness to renew various concepts and propose various slogans. However, a new concept, method, or slogan can at best only provide an additional choice or a possibility of choosing a new path in our scaling the heights of literature and art but can absolutely not replace the protracted and arduous work of scaling itself. It can replace neither particular living experiences and knowledge, accumulation of culture, distinctive and valuable thoughts and considerations, unique and ingenious expression, nor the distinctive, noble, and great personality which cannot be easily achieved or imitated by writers. Whether Kafka, Garcia, Marx, Zhuang Zi, or a piece of ancient painted pottery, the three new theories [xin san lun 2450 0005 6158] or the additional three new theories [xin xin san lun 2450 2450 0005 6158], they can all gives us inspiration for work and creation. However, they can not provide us with patterns of modernization nor make us take a sudden new look and claim "breakthroughs." Therefore, we'd better say that a really great and outstanding work can be hardly created in a boisterous and bustling atmosphere. Viewing both Chinese and foreign literary histories and phenomena, we can see that neither Tolstoy, Cao Xueqin, Li Bao, Du Fu, nor Pushkin created works in an "overheated" atmosphere.

Literature is now becoming a social and popular undertaking. We should make a kind of relatively calm or stable situation.

In particular, no matter how flourishing or bad the situation is, we writers should try our best to remain calm and be wholly absorbed in our creative work. As "people would feel cool as long as they stay calm," we can thus create works, enhance our immunity, and resist any unhealthy tendencies in the literature and art circles.

I once said that the golden age of literature has come. This is because the conditions for the work of literature are such better than in any time before. Nevertheless, it does not mean that every literary work created in this golden age is glittering gold. The overheated temperature, raucous boisterousness, arbitrary and impracticable directions, or overinflated literature can produce a large number of fakes which are no better than brass of yellow tiles. In order to create works in this golden age which are worthy of the golden age, it is necessary for us to stay more calm and be more absorbed in our lives, study, and work.

BO YIBO ARTICLE STRESSES COMMUNIST IDEALS

[Article by Bo Yibo: "Party Character, Ideals, and Integrity of a Communist"]

[Text] Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our country has entered the new period of socialist development. The main task in this period is to energetically develop social productivity, realize modernization, keenly develop socialist material civilization and spiritual civilization, and turn our country into a rich, powerful, democratic, and civilized socialist state. A series of major policy decisions by the party, such as opening up to the outside world, enlivening the domestic economy, and reforming the economic system, are exactly designed to serve the realization of this main task and the building of socialism with Chinese characteristics. Reform means the socialist system improving and perfecting itself, and is a revolution to further emancipate our country's socialist productive forces. There is no precedent for it that can be followed. It calls for our realistically exploring things in practice and blazing a new trail through brambles. In the great struggle to realize the party's main task in the new period and in the great practice of reform, how a communist should lead the way in accordance with the party's instructions and really give full play to his own exemplary vanguard role is a new problem for every party member that must be seriously pondered, seriously approached, and solemnly answered.

In the past few years, there have emerged on various fronts many fine party members who bravely fight and give creditable performances for the cause of reform and modernization. They have correctly answered this problem with their own actual actions. The People's Publishing House of Shanghai has compiled news messages and reports reflecting the deeds of some fine party members in a book entitled "Party Character, Ideals, and Integrity." I believe that the publication of this book will have a stimulating effect on education in party character, ideals, and discipline and the work of rectifying party style being carried out by the whole party and on party building in the new period.

A communist's party character is a comprehensive embodiment of the progressive nature of the working class in such fields as ideology, politics, style, organization, discipline, and so forth.

Its core calls for serving the people wholeheartedly. In judging the strength of a party member's party character, the determining factor is, in the final analysis, whether he acts in accordance with the party's fundamental goal in a faithful and exemplary manner. In the whole historical process of the party fighting for the realization of communism, we must at any time firmly and unswervingly uphold this goal. Of course, in different periods of history, there are different historical requirements and concrete demands in serving the people. In the new period of today, there are three most fundamental things that we must achieve in wholeheartedly serving the people. First, we must use the power vested in us by the party and the people to serve the interests of the overwhelming majority of people. Second, we must be the first to suffer and the last to seek enjoyment, place others before ourselves and public interests before private ones, and consciously subordinate individual interests to those of the party and the people. Third, we must show the work spirit of being cautions and conscientious and fighting amidst hardships, and keep leading the masses in creating a new situation in work. We cannot become "people who seek only to 'enjoy' the advantages of being party members in power and are unwilling to serve communism selflessly." Just as an ancient saying goes, "The secret of government lies in overcoming selfishness. Without overcoming selfishness, there cannot be fairness"; "We must first overcome selfishness before we can play fair and square in directing public affairs." There is another saying: "Do not bestow small favors in disregard of principle. Do not use seeking fairness as an excuse to serve private ends." These words are well justified. We communists "set up the party to serve public interests" and "run the government to serve the people." Every Communist Party member and every Communist Party cadre should have a deep understanding of these principles and must really set personal examples. "As oarsmen, we should help the travelers." Anytime, anywhere, and in any post, we must be the people's hardworking "oarsmen."

A communist's loftiest ideal is to realize communism. As Comrade Deng Xiaoping said well: "In the past, our party always had great combat capability no matter how small it was and no matter what difficulties it encountered. This was because we had our faith in Marxism and communism . Once we have a common ideal, we will also have iron discipline. In the past, present, and future, this was, is, and will always be our real advantage." At no time should we ever throw away this real advantage, and we should always regard adhering to the communist ideal as our essential spiritual pillar and the impetus to urge us to forge ahead. Over the past more than half a century, a CPC has carried out extremely arduous struggle for the realization of this ideal. Through 28 years of bloody struggle, it has won the greatest victory in its democratic revolution. Through another 37 years of steadfast efforts, it has won the great victory of its socialist revolution and scored tremendous achievements in its socialist construction. It was precisely because we had our lift ideal of communism and we had millions of CPC members who fought consciously for the realization of this ideal that we were able to score all these achievements. It is a basic guarantee for the vigorous and ever incessant development of our party's undertakings. Our communist ideal is not an empty word, but has substantial contents.

The structural reform and four modernizations program we are now carrying out and the policies our party has adopted in this new practice to carry them out are all aimed at developing our socialist economy and the entire socialist cause and are all closely and historically related to the final transition to communism. Therefore, every communist should not only keep always in mind the lofty goal of communism, but should also be good at unifying this goal with our actual current tasks; in other words, he should be good at unifying his lofty ideal with the spirit of doing his work practically. The party member comrades whose stories are given in this book and many other fine party members have been doing just this.

A communist's integrity is shown in a concentrated manner in his undaunted struggle to pursue and adhere to truth. This is an important aspect of the virtue of party spirit. In the years of revolutionary wars in the past, many party members shed blood and died on battlefields and enemy's execution grounds and would rather die than yield. This fully displayed communists' magnificent uprightness. Today, in a peaceful environment of socialist construction, our party members should even more constantly pay attention to consciously resisting the erosion and impact of various decadent thoughts and be brave in fighting against all unhealthy practice and trends that harm the party's and people's interests and against all words and deeds that do not conform to the four basic principles. The vast number of party members and cadres on all fronts should all carry on this integrity and set examples in observing law and discipline and adhering to principles. "A magnificent integrity spreads a thousand li away like the wind." As long as we have this revolutionary integrity, we will become the strongest on the road of revolution, will be able to press forward with indomitable will and inspire awe by upholding justice, and will not be brought down by unhealthy trends.

The practice of our entire party has once more shown that for the most part, our party ranks are pure and our party has a powerful combat capability. The experience gained by various areas in carrying out party spirit education has also proved that conscientiously publicizing advanced people's deeds in a truth-seeking manner, encouraging people to learn from advanced people and thus heightening party members' party spirit, is a very practical way to improve the quality of our party ranks. Grasping this work well will certainly play an important role in continuing to implement the spirit of the national conference of party delegates, intensifying the construction of our socialist spiritual civilization and promoting the work to bring a radical turn for the better to our party work style and general mood of society.

We should always pay attention to an important historical experience: A person who has been cited as a fine party member or advanced person should be able to stand the test of time, be modest and prudent, guard against arrogance and rashness, be brave in blazing new trails, and forge ahead incessantly. It is not hard for one to do a bit of good. What is hard is to do good all one's life and never do anything bad. At any time, all party members and cadres should maintain the inherent qualities of the working class' vanguard and live up to their glorious title of Communist Party member.

PUBLICATION OF SELECTED CHEN YUN WORKER VIEWED

[Text] Beijing, June 14 (XINHUA) -- The third volume of the "Selected Works of Chen Yun", compiled by the Research Office of the Secretariat of the Communist Party Central Committee, has been published by the People's publishing house.

To date, all his major works, 157 in all written during the 60 years between 1926 and 1986, have been published. The first two volumes in the series, which consist of Chen's works between 1926 and 1956, were both published in 1984.

Chen Yun, 81, now serves as a member of the Standing Committee of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee and first secretary of the CPC Commission for Discipline Inspection.

Incorporated in the third volume are 56 of Chen Yun's major works during the period from September, 1956, and September, 1985, a period in which China experienced many twists and turns, including economic setbacks, the 10-year "Cultural Revolution" and the introduction of major economic reforms. Most of them have never been published before.

A new collection of four works written between 1935 and 1949 have been added at the end.

During these 30 years, said an official from the Research Office of the CPC Central Committee Secretariat, the author persisted in the stand of seeking truth from facts and contributed many correct views and suggestions to assist economic construction, party consolidation and other major political tasks, and summed up the country's experiences in his works. They are still of great practical significance as guides to action, the official said.

NPC GROUPS DISCUSS FINAL STATE ACCOUNTS

[Excerpts] Beijing, 23 Jun (XINHUA) -- Members of the 6th NPC Standing Committee attending its 16th meeting began on 21 June to hold group discussions on a report on the final state accounts for 1985 and a report on auditing work for the same year. Members of the NPC Standing Committee held: Our country's revenues and expenditures were balanced in 1985, and this shows that our financial situation took a further turn for the better. In the second half of this year, all regions and departments should adopt effective measures to bring in revenue and to keep spending under strict control in order to successfully implement this year's budget, to continue striking a balance between revenue and expenditure, and to ensure the smooth development of the economic structural reform.

Song Shaowen, member of the NPC Standing Committee, said: Implementation of the 1985 state budget was good, but there were still quite a few problems in this regard -- this is a realistic appraisal. Zhang Xianyue, another member of the NPC Standing Committee, said: The improved financial situation in 1985 was a result of the correct leadership exercised by the party Central Committee and the State Council and the conscientious efforts made by the Ministry of Finance.

Qian Min, member of the NPC Standing Committee, said: Investments in capital construction were controlled to some extent last year, but they still considerably surpassed the planned target. The state should continue to keep extrabudgetary projects under control. Seypidin Aizezi, vice chairman of the NPC Standing Committee, said: The expenditures for the development of education, science, culture, and public health during the Seventh 5-Year Plan will increase to some extent over the period of the Sixth 5-Year Plan, and those for this year have also increased over last year. Generally speaking, however, this cannot satisfy the needs in these respects. The state should cut down the funds for capital construction so that some of these funds can be used for the development of education, science, culture, and public health. Hu Jiwei, member of the NPC Standing Committee, said: Although the outlay for education has increased considerably, it is still far from meeting the actual needs. And the outlay for cultural undertakings is also inadequate. On auditing work, Wang Guoquan and other members of the NPC Standing Committee held: There were more cases in which administrative expenditures exceeded the budget, and the auditing organs should exercise strict supervision in this regard. They suggested that auditing organs be strengthened, and their work be stepped up, regularized, and institutionalized.

ARTICLE, GROUPS DISCUSS DRAFT BANKRUPTCY LAW

Law Improves Management

OW201427 Beijing XINHUA in English 1223 GMT 20 Jun 86

[Text] Shenyang, June 20 (XINHUA) -- A national meeting to discuss the theory and practice of enterprise bankruptcy ended on Thursday in this capital of Liaoning Province.

More than 200 legal and management experts and officials who attended the meeting agreed that the enterprise bankruptcy draft law, which had been put into trial practice in three industrial cities, Shenyang, Wuhan and Chongqing, had helped improve company management. The three cities began the experiment last year. Three collective-owned factories in Shenyang which were in the red were warned by city authorities that they faced bankruptcy unless they improved results.

The meeting was told that two had made up deficits and recorded profits by improving management. The third is likely to become bankrupt this year. The Shenyang explosion-proof instrument plant has fixed assets of 260,000 yuan, but over 10 years it has run up debts of 500,000 yuan, and has not apppeared able to recover. The discussion was arranged by the enterprise bankruptcy law drafting team, Liaoning Academy of Social Sciences and Shenyang City Council.

Poll Views Questions on Law

[Article by Cao Siyuan: "An Investigation of the Questions Concerning the Enterprise Bankruptcy Law"]

[Text] On 2 April this year, the work report of the NPC delivered at the Fourth Session of the Sixth NPC proposed: In order to conform to the needs of economic structural reform and the socialist modernizations, we must actively, as well as in a responsible way, expedite the pace of economic legislation in connection with the importance, urgency, as well as actual conditions of the cases.

The relevant departments are now working on the formulation of several important economic and administrative laws, including the bankruptcy law.

Recently, we carried out the work in two different forms in Chongqing and Shanghai, and solicited opinions from the masses only after the system was publicized. The first one was introducing it in a special forum sponsored by the Chongqing City People's Congress Standing Committee, Shanghai City Society of Law, and the research society of economic law. The forum introduced the basic contents of the draft bankruptcy law and answered questions of particular interest raised by the participants. Later, the participants were asked to express their views by answering a questionnaire. The second one was summarizing the draft bankruptcy law and the bankruptcy relief producers in a 1,000-character text as well as, together with an article entitled "Economic Reforms Badly Need an Enterprise Bankruptcy Law," publishing and distributing them to the investigation targets, who were asked to answer the attached questionnaire. The people in these cities returned 924 questionnaires. Among them, 20 percent were workers; 71 percent were cadres of economic administrative organs, government and judicial organs,, as well as enterprises; and 9 percent were teachers and scientific and technological personnel. According to the effective answers to the questionnaire's 20 questions, they expresed their views in the following percentages:

1. 85 percent held that China economic situation has improved over the past 5 years; 1 percent held that it gradually became worse; 5 percent held that it made no remarkable changes; and 9 percent held that it became good at one time and bad at another.

2. 77 percent held that compared to the situation before reforms, enterprises now have some more decision-making power; 14 percent held that the enterprises now have much more decision-making power; and 9 percent held that there has been no change in the decision-making power.

3. 4 percent held that the state should subsidize enterprises that suffer from long-term losses and are unable to repay heavy debts; 67 percent held that the state should first consolidate these enterprises and then, after providing that consolidation does not work, let them go bankrupt; 17 percent held that the financial subsidies should be integrated with the bankruptcy system; and 12 percent held that we should make them switch over to other lines of products, merge with others, suspend their operations, and close down.

4. 68 percent held that it is necessary for China to establish a bankruptcy system; 28 percent held that the system is worth consideration; and 4 percent held that the system is not necessary.

5. 84 percent agreed that the "enterprise bankruptcy law" should be promulgated as soon as possible; 9 percent disagreed with this; and 7 percent declined to comment.

6. 7 percent held that the enterprise bankruptcy system is a capitalist system; 6 percent held that it is a socialist system; 83 percent held that it is a necessary condition for the commodity economy: and 4 percent said that they were not clear about this point.

7. 96 percent agreed with the statement that "compared to enterprises that only bring profits but undertake no risk, enterprises that bring profits and undertake risks and are more vigorous"; 4 percent disagreed with the statement.

8. 83 percent held that the practice of transferring workers to other trades after an enterprise goes bankrupt is reasonable; 17 percent thought it unreasonable.

9. 93 percent held that it is also reasonable to transfer cadres to other trades after an enterprise goes bankrupt; 7 percent thought it unreasonable.

10. On the issue that by basing on the average of worker's last 2 years' monthly wages, the worker should receive between the 1st and the 12th month of unemployment 75 percent of his wages as the unemployment benefit, should receive between the 13th and 24th month of unemployment 50 percent of his wages as the unemployment benefit, and should receive no unemployment benefit beginning from the 25th month of unemployment and that those who meet the requirements of receiving social welfare should go through relevant procedures, 81 percent held that it is reasonable and 19 percent held that it is not reasonable.

11. 88 percent held that it is practical that following the promulgation of the bankruptcy law, all enterprises should base on the total standard wages and monthly deliver 1 percent of the total to the authorities as the premium of workers' unemployment insurance; 12 percent held that it is impractical.

12. 10 percent held that following the promulgation of the bankruptcy law, most loss-incurred enterprises will collapse; 85 percent held that they will become vigorous and turn losses into profits; and 5 percent held that they will be subjected to the will of heaven.

13. 72 percent held that following the promulgation of the bankruptcy law, profit-making enterprises will also be greatly affected; 8 percent held that these enterprises will not be affected; and 20 percent held that these enterpries will be affected but not on a large scale.

14. 75 percent agreed with the statement that "following the promulgation of the bankruptcy law, enterprise workers will be concerned more than before about their enterprise's destiny, as well as actively exercise and safeguard their democratic administrative rights"; 1 percent disagreed with the statement; and 24 percent said that it is difficult to tell.

15. 95 percent held that the implementation of the bankruptcy system can help enterprises more actively and consciously understand the market information and can help them flexibly readjust the variety and specifications of products; 5 percent held that it is difficult to project the result.

16. 92 percent held that implementation of the bankruptcy system and market competition, which strengthens relationships among enterprises, will make enterprises improve product quality; 2 percent held that this will not happen; and 6 percent held that this is not certain.

17. 14 percent held that following promulgation of the bankruptcy law, and enterprise will hike prices when responding to changes in its product price; 79 percent held that they will strive to cut the cost so as to maintain a stable price; and 7 percent held that the situation will remain the same.

18. 86 percent held that following implementation of the bankruptcy law, an enterprises will consciously cut its consumption expenditure and increase its investment in technological transformation and equipment; 3 percent held that this will not happen; and 11 percent held that the result is difficult to predict.

19. 90 percent held that the bankruptcy system will promote enterprises to strive to expedite capital circulation and will consciously utilize bank loans in an economical way; 1 percent held that this will not take place; and 9 percent held that it is hard to predict.

20. 93 percent held that following implementation of the bankruptcy system, enterprises will further expand and safeguard the decision-making power concerning their operations and will resist irrational administrative interference; 2 percent held that this will not happen; and 5 percent held that it is difficult to predict.

The people being asked generally held a positive attitude, as 84 percent of them agreed on promulgating the bankruptcy law as soon as possible. Some 85 percent held that China's economic situation has improved over the past 5 years. This shows that they agreed on promulgating the bankruptcy law by basing on the ideological foundation which they established through recent years' practice of economic reforms.

At the same time, we must also acknowledge the role that propaganda and explanation work played before our investigation. Under the circumstances of not clearly understanding the situation, many people mistook the bankruptcy law as a capitalist thing. After the introduction to the basic knowledge of the bankruptcy law, however, 89 percent of them understood that the bankruptcy system is a necessary condition for the commodity economy, or understood that the system should also exist in the socialist society. Based on this foundation, people therefore accepted such sensitive issues as this. Though the number of cadres asked was greater thought that cadres of bankrupted enterprises should be regarded as unemployed. This fact differs greatly from the result envisaged by some people at a recent forum, at which they complained that whether or not we propagated the draft law, the result would be the same. Therefore, there are reasons that we must continue to do well in our propaganda work that is based on persuasive facts. We must dispel people's various worries and make them become determined and bold in carrying out the enterprise bankruptcy law.

In a certain sense, our propaganda work on the present economic structural reform plays an important part in promoting a successful reform. Some comrades said that the issue concerning the bankruptcy law was so complicated that it could easily make people become confused, and therefore should not be publicized too early. In think that the easier an issue make people become confused, the sooner we propagate and discuss it so that the people and public opinion are well prepared. Only thus can we heighten the understanding of the cadres and masses, can they realize the long-term benefits brought by reforms, and can reforms become a conscious move of everyone.

Need for System Stressed

[Text] Beijing, 21 Jun (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) -- Whether China should set up an enterprise bankruptcy system has become a controversy in economic circles here. JINGJI CANKAO carried a signed article today in its "Discussion and Deliberation" column which held that the establishment of an enterprise bankruptcy system is the objective demand of a transformation from a highly centralized product economy to a planned commodity economy and also the inevitable trend of the deepgoing development of the reform of the economic structure. It is bound to bring about profound changes in China's economic life.

The article said that extending the decision-making power of enterprises is an important step taken in the reform of China's economic structure. However, practice over the years has proved that extending the decision-making power of enterprises alone cannot ensure the rationalization of enterprise behavior. While restrictions on enterprises are lifted, they are still being protected; and while power is delegated to enterprises, they do not have to undertake any risk. As a result, certain enterprises abuse their power and deviate from the target of reform. The excessive increase in consumption funds and the too-large scale of investment in fixed assets during the period of reform are more or less related to this issue. Only by setting up an enterprise bankruptcy system can we combine power with responsibility and perfect the enterprise behavior mechanism.

The article said that benefits and risks are the source of enterprise motivation and the necessary conditions for invigorating enterprises. The enterprise behavior mechanism can be perfected only by giving full play to the role of benefits and risks. The establishment of a bankruptcy system is an indispensable condition for perfecting the system of motivation of enterprises. It is also a necessary form for combining benefits with risks.

The article pointed out that the economic means adopted to exercise macrocontrol and the economic levers applied to readjust economic operation are the external factors for rationalizing enterprise behavior, while the establishment of a bankruptcy system is the internal factor that conditions enterprise behavior and enhances self-restraint by enterprises. Only by combining external with internal conditions can we ensure rationalization of enterprise behavior and resolve the recent problems concerning the demand and supply in consumption and enterprise investment.

It has been reported that the enterprise bankruptcy law (draft) has been submitted to the 16th Plenary Session of the 6th NPC Standing Committee, which is now being held in Beijing, for examination.

RENMIN RIBAO ON PAY COMMENSURATE WITH POSITION

[Commentator's article: "Treatment Should Be Commensurate With Jobs"]

[Text] Since institutional reform was initiated, a large number of young cadres, imbued with vitality, have taken up leading posts at all levels. They have been getting more and more politically mature and their revolutionary spirit and achievements have been acclaimed by the party and the masses.

Meanwhile, there have been in fact a small number of comrades who have proved incompetent for their present posts after several years' work and thus have to be removed in accordance with the principle that cadres can be promoted and be demoted as well. Should then the remuneration level these cadres currently enjoy be adjusted accordingly if they are demoted? The answer is affirmative. A person assuming a post of a certain grade should enjoy the remuneration corresponding to that grade and receive the pay corresponding to that position; this is a reform of the cadre system and the very key to further breaking down the system of life tenure for leading positions.

The remuneration for leading cadres at different levels should only vary with their duties, contributions, and the conditions of their work. This should be made a basic principle to be followed in the administration over cadres. In view of the actual circumstances in our party and country, we agreed to grant the original pay and benefits to those retired cadres who had made contributions to the founding of the PRC and those old comrades who had voluntarily offered their posts to outstanding young successors, when we began to take action to abolish the system of life tenure for leading posts. This is a correct and reasonable measure which has been supported by most cadres and the masses. However, the old notion that cadres cannot be demoted but only promoted and that one's remuneration must not be lowered even if one is transferred to a new post must be discarded, and this old method which is obviously no longer in keeping with the needs of the reform should of course be given up in appointing new cadres.

The life tenure regarding the positions and remuneration for leading cadres is a feudal and decadent concept which goes against the lofty ideal of communists who devote themselves to service to the people and do their utmost to make contributions without giving any thought to personal gains or losses. It also goes counter to the socialist principle of distribution according to work. Now that we have already been practicing the wage structure with the basic salary as its leading factor, it is necessary to fix a new rule to be observed by all the cadres currently holding posts in party and government organs and their subordinate service units throughout the country, namely, one who undertakes a certain post should be rewarded with the basic salary and benefits commensurate to that post, and one's remuneration should be changed as soon as one is transferred to a new post. To bring this rule into effect, we are likely to encounter some difficulties at the very beginning. However, we should fully anticipate people's reaction to this reform, and should not hesitate and thus let slip a golden opportunity when the situation requires us to enforce the reform boldly and resolutely. In fact, some localities and departments have made effective and valuable attempts in this field. It appears that although there is a gap between the tentative idea and the practice of some comrades, most comrades have already realized that in order to promote and demote leading cadres according to actual needs, it is necessary to adhere to the principle of remuneration commensurate to the job and to take a bold step in the reform. Even though this step may have relatively extensive influence, we must still depend on those comrades who are brave enough to play an exemplary role in the reform, inspire with their help those comrades who have not yet come round to the idea of the reform to keep up with the situation, and thus push the reform of the cadre system ahead. Otherwise, we will hardly be able to make any new progress in abolishing the system of life tenure for leading positions and in implementing the principle that cadres can be promoted and demoted as well.

For some cadres, although the change in their positions has been effected according to normal procedure, they may still have doubts about the move or even nurse grievances. Our party organizations at all levels should do meticulous ideological and political work to cope with this case, helping these cadres to dismiss their doubts, to adopt the new notion that cadres can be promoted and be demoted as well, to correctly handle the contradiction between personal interests on the one hand and the interests of the party and the state on the other, to happily accept the arrangements made by their organizations to submit themselves to the needs of the people's cause, and to do a good job in their new positions.

The key to the implementation of the principle of remuneration commensurate to position lies in the determination of the leadership at all levels. The leading comrades of some units and departments are only willing to promote their subordinates and to raise the latter's pay but hesitate to demote those incompetent cadres when necessary. In some cases, cadres are simply transferred to other units to take up new posts with equal grades -- these leading cadres who have done a lousy job in their units may be transferred to other units to assume new leading positions. In other cases, cadres retain their leading positions in the original units despite poor performance, or have their remuneration remain unchanged although they may have been demoted. These practices show that those people in charge have spared the feelings of their subordinates at the expense of principle, or have been biased by their personal feelings in appointing cadres. Neither case consists with our party's principle governing the employment of cadres and both tendencies must be resolutely overcome. Of course, we must be very careful in assessing a cadre's performance at this present post and in adjusting the positions of those incompetent cadres. We can never take rash action without considering the actual situation. Those cadres who have been proved to be truly incompetent in their present posts should still be appointed to other appropriate posts in light of their personal situation those who are specialized in certain fields but have been proved unsuitable for leadership and administration after having assumed leading posts for a time should be transferred to other posts that will bring their strong points into play. Those who are not qualified and do not have the potential to assume overall leadership should be demoted to less important positions. Those whose moral integrity and ability do not qualify them for their present positions should be demoted to other positions that fit their moral integrity and ability. And those who have shown unhealthy thinking and work style, sought ease and comfort, and failed to properly perform their duties should be removed from their present positions and be employed otherwise. We must be aware that it is a reform to implement the principle of remuneration commensurate to position and to seek unity of remuneration and position. This reform, closely relating to our policy, calls for thorough consideration and overall study. We must adhere to principle on the one hand and, on the other, make specific analyses. Here the point that needs to be emphasized is, in the course of readjusting cadres' positions and remuneration, we definitely must bravely uphold the criteria on appointment of cadres for the new period laid down by the party, adhere to the principle of "four transformations" for cadres, act in accordance with the principle of party spirit, give full play to the fine tradition of fair play and righteousness, and withhold from giving some people preferential treatment which will instigate them to seek personal fame and gain. The system under which cadres can be promoted and demoted as well and their remuneration is commensurate to their positions surely must be established. All our comrades who are determined to carry on the reform must pluck up their courage to remove all obstacles, to do away with the old conventions, and to set up the new system.

FURTHER ON NATIONAL SOCIOECONOMIC SYMPOSIUM

[Report by Shen Peijun: "The 33d Symposium on the Strategy for China's Economic and Social Development Held in Beijing"]

[Text] The 33d symposium on China's socioeconomic development strategy was held in Beijing on 26 May. The symposium was jointly sponsored by the State Commission for Structural Reforms and the National Federation of Economic Organizations. The subject of the symposium was "the issue of the Socialist Fund market."

Developing a Socialist Fund Market in China Is an Inevitable Economic Tendency

Since the state strengthened macroeconomic control and tightened the monetary policy in 1985, production development has been affected by the shortage of funds, and all parties concerned have begun to pay attention to the issue of funds. Comrades who attended the symposium generally held: The key to overcoming the shortage of funds lies in the introduction of market mechanisms, which will help reasonably redistribute funds and facilitate the movement of funds. A socialist commodity economy must be developed on the basis of a sound market system. In present economic construction, on the one hand many enterprises are short of working funds, on the other hand there are large amounts of idle funds in society. Therefore, promoting the reform of the monetary system, establishing a fund market, and substituting the means of direct control over monetary affairs with the means of indirect control have become an inevitable tendency in China's economic development.

Some Questions That Must Be Solved in the Course of Creating Conditions for the Establishment of a Socialist Fund Market

Most comrades at the symposium held that it will take a fairly long time to form a sound fund market in our country. In the course of forming this market, some questions must be properly solved:

1. The specialized banks should be turned into real enterprises. The banks should have full decision-making power in handling their own business and should function as independent economic entities which have self-development ability. In the present banking system, the specialized banks are managed as state institutions. This has seriously hindered their development, and this system must be reformed.

2. The control over the overall monetary situation should be turned into an indirect pattern. The pattern of using administrative means to control money supply and currency circulation should be gradually changed, and such economic means as interest rates, discount rates, and deposit reserves should be used more and more to flexibly and effectively regulate the overall monetary situation. Interest rates should reflect the relationship between money supply and demand and act as the "price for money." At present, as funds are generally in short supply, we should raise the interest rates so as to regulate the relationship between money supply and demand. Legal measures should be taken to ensure that the Central Bank can have the power to independently control the supply of money, and unnecessary administrative intervention should be avoided.

3. The banking and financial institutions should be diversified. A necessary condition for the forming of a fund market is competition. The present situation in which several specialized banks respectively monopolize the business of supplying funds in different trades is obviously unfavorable to the development of the commodity economy. We should allow other non-bank financial institutions to develop too, and should promote the competition between the banking and financial institutions. We should also allow collectives and individuals to take part in monetary transactions.

4. The means of financing should also be diversified. We should actively develop both direct and indirect credit. The vertical distribution of funds should be gradually replaced with the horizontal movement of funds. At present, we may first develop an interbank market and a market for negotiating bills so as to meet the short-term financial needs. When conditions are ripe, we may go ahead to develop a capital market which can help solve the issue of long-term financial demands.

The Characteristics of the Socialist Fund Market in China

Some experts held that the fund market in our country should have four characteristics: 1) it should function as a means of fulfilling the credit plan; 2) it should serve the purpose of developing the national economy; 3) the state bank should act as the regulator of this fund market and 4) it should have relations with the international money markets and should at the same time maintain its independence.

SICHUAN OFFICIAL STRESSES PRACTICING OPEN POLICY

HK230617 Chengdu SICHUAN RIBAO in Chinese 3 Jun 86 p 2

[Article by Xu Shiqun, member of Standing Committee of Sichuan Provincial CPC Committee and director of provincial foreign affairs office: "Practicing the Open Policy and Invigorating Sichuan's Economy"]

[Text] Opening up to the outside world is a modern historical trend and is the only way to build a modern country. Marx and Englels pointed out in the "Manifesto of the Communist Party" that with the development of modern industry, "the old local and national seclusion and self-sufficiency have been replaced by intercourse in every direction and by universal interdependence of nations." More than 100 years after they made this remark, their scientific viewpoint has been further proved to be true by practice.

I

Our country has drawn a profound lesson from its past experience on the issue of opening up. In ancient times, the "silk road" was well known to the whole world; and Zheng He's overseas missions also brought a good reputation to China. After the 15th century, the feudal rulers of China blindly exlcuded foreign things and pursued a policy of national seclusion. This finally resulted in reducing our country to a semicolonial and semifeudal society. For more than 100 years, from the 19th to the 20th centuries, China sufferd untold national disasters and humiliation. During the 10 year "Cultural Revolution," which was, in fact, a catastrophe, the "gang of four" denounced the policy of opening up to the outside world as "national betrayal" and "slavish comprador philosophy" and pursued the national seclusion policy to the extreme. As a result, our national economy was brought to the brink of collapse.

At the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our party central leadership profoundly summed up this painful historical experience and decided to carry out the policy of opening up. The "Decision of the CPC Central Committe on Reform of the Economic Structure" pointed out: It is necesary to "actively expand foreign economic cooperation and technological exchange on the basis of independence, self-reliance, equality, mutual benefit, and mutual good faith"; and "we must take the policy of opening up to the outside world as our long-term, basic national policy."

Under the guidance of this major strategic policy, our country has adopted a series of measures in recent years to develop foreign economic relations. This has not only enabled us to obtain funds that we badly need in our construction, but has also brought in advanced technology and management expertise from abroad, thus promoting our modernization process and expanding our exchanges with various countries in the world and our influence in the world.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, our province has been firmly carrying out the party's policy of opening up to the outside world. We have actively developed foreign economic relations through various channels and have achieved marked results. So far, the whole province has made use of a total of $170 million of foreign funds (according to the contracts which have been implemented), and has set up 22 Chinese-foreign joint ventures (six of them having begun to do business).

By making use of our technological advantages and in the forms of setting up joint ventures or exporting labor services, our provicne has run 28 enterprises in foreign countries and overseas regions and signed 152 contracts with more than 30 countries to undertake construction and to offer labor services. The total value of these contracts has reached some $156 million.

By the end of last year, this province had established economic cooperation and trade relations with more than 180 countries and regions in the world. The total annual volume of exports reached $244 million, and the total volume of imports amounted to some $109 million. This province has also established friendship relations with 13 cities, states, and prefectures in 7 countries, namely, the United States, Japan, France, Austria, Korea, Yugoslavia, and Canada, and carried out economic, technological, and cultural exchanges and cooperation with them. This forms an important channel for this province to pursue the open policy.

In addition, the international tourist industry in this province has also developed rapidly. Last year, more than 100,000 foreigners and Overseas Chinese came to Sichuan to tour or to visit relatives. This enabled the province to earn foreign exchange income of more than 35 million yuan. The number of foreign poeple coming to Sichuan for the purposes of doing business, giving lectures, and making inspections and visits increased by an average of 1,000 people a year. More and more foreign government heads, party leaders, and celebrities in all circles have visited Sichuan. In this province, the world of foreign affairs has expanded from a small number of large cities, such as Chengdu and Chongqing, to all cities, prefectures, and some counties. The handling of foreign affairs has become an important part of this province's work.

II

In the course of opeining up to the outside world, this province has sent more than 2,100 groups, totalling more than 11,000 people, to visit foreign countries in accordance with the needs of our socialist modernization and reform. This has played an important role in developing this province's economy and technology and in promoting reform.

However, we lacked experience and did not manage things in this regard strictly; many organs were authorized to approve plans for overseas visits and localities and departments approved the going abroad of too many groups and personnel, while we did not effectively exert necessary overall control and coordination. As a result, there was some confusion and unhealthy tendencies in this field.

The problems pointed out by the central authorities, such as sending duplicate inspection groups, allowing people to go abroad many times, using power to vie for opportunities for making foreign trips, allowing too many groups and people to go abroad, allowing too many nonprofessional people to go abroad, allowing people to stay abroad for too long a time, and some people demeaning personal and national dignity, all existed to differing extents in our province.

Although these problems did not represent the mainstream of things, we must not underestimate their harmful influence. They not only disrupted the implementation of the open policy and affected the reputation of the party and the state, but also corrupted the minds of some cadres and aroused the resentment of the masses,thus affecting our modernization process. After the party central ledership and the State Council issued the circular on checking the sending of groups and personnel to visit foreign countries in a reckless way, the provincial foreign affairs department seriously examined the work of sending people abroad in this province and summed up the experience in the previous stage.

In accordance with the relevant central instructions, the provincial CPC Committee set up a foreign affairs leading group to exercise unified leadership over the province's foreign affairs work and to approve the plans for sending groups and personnel abroad. In accordance with the actual situation in our province, we formulated the "Detailed Regulations on Approving Plans for Sending Personnel Abroad and Inviting Foreign People." The regulations have been carried out by all localities and departments in Sichuan Province to strictly control the number and quality of groups and people being sent abroad.

At the same time, we have also strengthened the political and ideological work among people given approval to make foreign trips. We have conducted education on patriotism and internationalism among them and required them to consciously protect the good reputation and dignity of the motherland. After they returned home, we examined the fulfillment of their tasks during the foreign trips. At present, the situation in sending groups and personnel abroad in our province has markedly improved. This has played an important role in straightening out party style and in correctly implementing the party's open policy.

Some comrades may ask: Since opening up to the outside world is our long-term basic national policy, why do we still have to control the number of groups and people being sent abroad? As we all know, the purpose of our open policy is to expand our overseas economic and technological exchanges and cooperation and to learn from advanced foreign technologies and management methods to promote our own construction. This is also the purpose of sending a large number of people to make foreign inspections. However, a small number of people with no knowledge of technology and who have no professional knowledge also vie with each other in seeking opportunities to go abroad. Therefore, we should strictly oversee the qualifications of the personnel who are sent abroad. This is also the demand of the masses. Moreover, the number of people being sent abroad does not reflect the implementation of the policy of opening up. It is certainly good to send more people who can play a positive role to visit foreign countries, but we prevent those who merely try to seek selfish gains in going abroad in the name of making inspections from going. This will better ensure the implementation of the open policy.

III

Recently, Comrade Jiang Minkuan pointed out in his Government Work Report to the provincial People's Congress: "During the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must further open the door of this province, and must make efforts to expand foreign trade, increase the export of labor services, and develop the tourist industry to earn more foreign exchange and to raise our foreign economic activities, technological exchanges, and trade to a new level." This is the blueprint for opening up in this province during the Seventh 5-Year Plan, and is also a new objective for our efforts.

Sichuan is a big province with a population of 100 million people and encompasses a large area. The climate in this province is congenial, and the province is rich in all sorts of products. The production of grain, oil-bearing crops, silkworm cocoons, and live pigs, rank first in the country. This province also abounds in mineral resources. More than 130 kinds of mineral resources have been discovered, and of the more than 70 kinds for which reserves have been proved, 20 rank first in the country. Through construction in the past 30 years and more, this province has built up an integrated industrial system which includes a variety of trades and industrial departments.

The fixed assets of industrial enterprises in this province total more than 40 billion yuan, ranking second in the country. In this province, there are more than 400 large and medium-sized enterprises which have substantial production capacity and sophisticated technologies and which can produce a wide range of products, as well as tens of thousands of small enterprises.

The metallurgical, machine-building, electronics, chemical, and military industries in Sichuan hold an important position in the country. Railroad, highway, water, and air transportation have also developed rapidly, and there is a well-established transport network in this province leading to all parts of the country. In addition, this province has many favorable conditions for developing tourism. These all constitute advantages of this province in carrying out the open policy and in advancing the modernization process.

In recent years, as we are seriously carrying out the policy of "opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy," our province has scored remarkable achievements in developing industrial and agricultural production and in developing and utilizing natural resources. However, we should notice that our province is located in the interior, so we are not as conveniently situated as the coastal provinces in getting information and carrying out foreign activities.

In addition, we began opening up to the outside world later than the coastal areas and our foundation for foreign economic activities is still rather weak. Our work of making use of foreign funds, importing advanced technologies, and developing foreign economic cooperation remains at the beginning stage. The potential for export in our province is far from being tapped, because we have developed and utilized merely a small part of our rich natural resources. Most industries in our province remain at the technological level of the fifties. This situation has restricted, to a considerable degree, the speed of construction and technological development in this province, and is a problem that must be solved quickly in our socialist modernization efforts. Of course, our construction should mainly rely on our own efforts and our own resources.

Developing foreign economic and technological cooperation and expanding foreign trade, and making use of foreign funds, advanced technologies, and management skills for our own purposes will strengthen our province's capacity for self-reliance and will speed up our province's economic and technological development. So it is a matter of great significance.

In the future, after our economy and technology have greatly developed, we will still need to continue to renew our equipment and technology and to exchange what we have for what we do not have with foreign countries. So opening up will continue to be a major policy that we must carry out.

At present, our province's situation in opening up is very good. Our work in industry, agriculture, science, technology, education, and culture is developing smoothly and rapidly. By further carrying out the policy of reform, opening up, and enlivening the economy, the economy of our province will certainly develop more remarkably.

SICHUAN TRAINS YOUNG PEOPLE FOR 'SPARKING PLAN'

OW180732 Beijing XINHUA in English 0602 GMT 18 Jun 86

[Text] Chengdu, June 18 (XINHUA) -- Sichuan, one of the leading grain producing provinces, plans to help 200,000 youths and cadres at the grass-roots level to master one or two quick money-making skills.

As the first step, a group of farmers and cadres of rural enterprises are attending a training course in economic management and technical transformation in this capital of Sichuan, China's most populous province. These people will play a leading role in spreading science and technology in the countryside, a provincial official said.

This is part of China's effort to train one million young people, which is included in the country's "sparking plan", aimed at developing practical technology to spur China's rural economy. The "sparking plan", created by the State Science and Technology Commission, covers 24 major fields including the development of mountainous areas, aquatic production, livestock farming, and processing of farming and sideline products.

Sichuan also plans to develop 12 businesses suitable for rural areas, including the raising of lean pigs, poultry and aquatic products, the growing of oranges and rapeseed, and the production of soft drinks, leather, silk, and construction materials.

The province will establish in the next five years 200 demonstration enterprises, setting examples for mid-sized and small enterprises of incorporating natural resources, industry and commerce, said an official from the provincial science and technology commission.

Also included in the plan is the development of two areas in the northeast and southwest that are rich in natural resources but underdeveloped. "We hope the development of the two areas will show the importance of science and technology in building up prosperity," the official said.

To carry out the "sparking plan", the universities in Sichuan have done scientific research and will popularize their findings in the countryside. This year, the provincial government will invest 35 percent more for science and technology than last year.

LIAOWANG EXPLAINS TAIWAN FEARS ON UNITED FRONT 'SCHEMES'

HK220229 Hong Kong LIAOWANG OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese No 24, 16 Jun 86 p 22

[Article by Zeng Wei: "A Simple and Plain Review of the Taiwan Authorities' 'Stereotypical Theories About United Front'"]

[Text] The KMT authorities in Taiwan have always referred to the CPC policy regarding the peaceful reunification of the country and its proposals for talks betweens the two parties as equals and for alleviating the tension between the two sides as "united front schemes" or "united front traps."

These "stereotypical theories about the united front" appear in various forms and various disguises in Taiwan. For example, the "letter to Taiwan compatriots" written by the NPC Standing Committee in 1979, Chairman Ye Jianying's "9-point proposal," Chairman Deng Xiaoping's 6-point proposal, and the idea of "one country, two systems" are all referred to as "political united front policy." The mainland's call for"contacts in three areas" prior to peaceful reunification is regarded by the Taiwan authorities as "psychological warfare." The mainland government's policy regarding religious freedom is referred to by the Taiwan authorities as "a religious united front." Not long ago, the Taiwan authorities introduced another new step by calling for vigilance against the mainland's "trade united front policy."

Actually, "contacts in three areas" between the two sides are reasonable and supported by the people. Although the Taiwan authorities sternly forbid these contacts and intimidate people through recourse to the "united front" panic, they have failed to achieve the results they desire. Many Taiwan compatriots have managed to use various opportunities to visit their relatives and friends in the mainland and the number of Taiwan compatriots who want to visit their relatives and friends on the mainland is increasing. Concerning those Taiwan compatriots who return to the mainland to visit their relatives and friends or who only make sight-seeing trips to the mainland, the mainland government's policy is that they are free to come and leave.

Some Taiwan compatriots have settled on the mainland. They have done so not because they have fallen victims to the mainland's "united front schemes" and "united front traps." They have done so either becuase they want to have a look at the mainland and improve their understanding of it or because they miss their hometowns and relatives so much that they want to return to where they belong. Not long ago, Mr Huang Shun-hsing [7806 7311 5281], an ex-councillor of Taiwan's "Legislative Yuan," returned from Taiwan to settle on the mainland. According to his daughter Huang Ni-na [7806 1200 1226], Huang "has, for a long time, not participated in any political activities." Taiwan's PA-SHIH NIEN-TAI [THE EIGHTIES] weekly once said: "One cannot say that whoever visits the mainland has fallen a victims to united front schemes."

The "theory of trade united front" introduced by the Taiwan authorities is also sheer fabrication. According to this theory, China's foreign trade is nothing other than the export of political poison and, as far as Taiwan is concerned, it is a means by which united front policy is implemented. People in Taiwan do not accept this theory. According to a research report recently published in CHING-CHI CHI-KAN [ECONOMIC QUARTERLY], which is the mouthpiece of an official research institute named the "China Economic Research Institute," the present indirect trade between the mainland and Taiwan basically involves no political motives.

"For example, mainland purchases from Taiwan in 1984 were obviously of a commercial nature. The main purpose of buying goods from Taiwan, or from Hong Kong and Japan, was to meet the growing needs resulting from its pursuit of an opening up policy." Many businessmen and indusrialists in Taiwan call for trade with the mainland, hoping that they can buy cheap raw materials from the latter. Some manufacturers in those "declining industries" even place much hope on the mainland market. Paying no heed to the Taiwan authorities' warnings and seeing that there is no need to be on guard against "united front traps," they strongly urge the Taiwan authorities to lift restrictions and to conduct trade with the mainland.

Without mincing words, an article in Taiwan's ZHAN-WANG [LOOKING INTO THE FUTURE] monthly says: "Today, we should properly study the issue of our entrepot and direct trade with the mainland. We can profitably use their cotton and coal. Why can we not earn the mainland's money." People involved in economic activities in Taiwan realize that trade between the two shores of the strait is important and extremely beneficial to Taiwan. there is a plentiful supply of cheap raw materials on the mainland. Since the mainland is conveniently located, transportation cost is low. In addition, the mainland market is a factor that cannot be overlooked in Taiwan's economic development and its importance to Taiwan's trade is steadily increasing. People with breadth of vision can see that the trade between the two shores of the strait is more important to Taiwan's economic development. This is why despite the restrictions imposed by the Taiwan authorities and despite their "trade united front theory," the trade between the two shores is rapidly expanding.

Obviously, the Taiwan authorities' "united front theories" are inconsistent with the facts. But why do they not discard these theories? Perhaps they will have "fears."

TAIWAN ATTEMPTS TO DEVELOP TRADE WITH WESTERN EUROPE

HK240223 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO OVERSEAS EDITION in Chinese 21 Jun 86 p 5

[Article by reporter Xu Wei: "Taiwan and Western Europe on 'Trade Honeymoon'"]

[Text] In order to extricate itself from the predicament of being under the control of others, Taiwan, which suffered from the trade barrier erected by the United States, is now trying with great care to open its trade gate to Western Europe. On 11 June this year, a Taiwan economic and trade official excitedly announced an "achievement": The volume of trade between Taiwan and Western Europe from January to April this year increased remarkably by 42 percent over the corresponding period of 1985.

In the past, Taiwan's economic and trade authorities regarded the United States as the "most reliable trade partner." But before long this "partner" could not bear the huge trade deficits, so it erected a merciless trade barrier to the steady flow of Taiwan products. Owing to its dependence on the United States which resulted from fearfulness, Taiwan had to "restrain itself" and try to open an overseas market other than with the United States.

When Taiwan discovered that the volume of its trade with the EEC, which could match its economic strength with the United States, was less than one-fifth of its trade with the United States, it presumed that a shortcut was found to extricate itself from the foreign trade predicament. Since the beginning of this year, Taiwan's economic and trade authorities repreatedly urged the entrepreneurs on the island to increase their exports to Western Europe. Furthermore, the "Foreign trade Association" regarded 1986 as the "year of action in developing trade with Europe."

In order to alleviate the saturated market competition and reduce unemployment, the West European countries intended to promote the sale of their goods to Taiwan. In order to enjoy the use of good and cheap consumer goods, they also wanted to import goods from Taiwan. Conversely, Taiwan attempted to import advanced science and technology and precision equipment from Western Europe to update its industrial structure. On the basis of mutual benefit, trade between Taiwan and Western Europe developed extraordinarily within a short period.

Some people on the island said that Taiwan and Western Europe are now on a "trade honeymoon." However, trade frictions cast shadows on the "honeymoon." Some people in Western Europe's commercial circles blamed Taiwan for giving too much preferential treatment to the United States. Large purchases made by Taiwan are actually U.S. products decided secretly by the authorities. Enterprises from Europe do not even have the opportunity to enter the bid. For this reason, some people warned that if such unfair trade continues, development of trade between the two sides will be adversely affected.

The discontent of Western Europe is actually the sore point of Taiwan authorities. After all, Taiwan cannot extricate itself from the U.S. market. In addition, it needs political and military "shelter" from the United State. After reaping profits, Taiwan cannot but let the United States have a share. Now that the Europeans demand "equal opportunities," it is a stern challenge to Taiwan's economic and trade strategy, which leans on the United States.

Perhaps Taiwan can adopt a relatively balanced economic policy to reduce its trade frictions with Western Europe. However, Taiwan's suffering from tariff barriers, due to lack of "international dignity," is a predicament from which Taiwan cannot extricate itself. As Taiwan does not have diplomatic relations with Western European countries, it cannot sign agreements based on equality and mutual benefit. Taiwan's exports to Europe cannot enjoy the treatment of the Generalized System of Preferences. Moreover, Taiwan also cannot conclude other economic, trade, or technological agreements. It is extremely difficult for Taiwan to compete with others, because in tariffs alone there is a difference of 10 percent.

An official of Taiwan's "Society for Promoting Sino-European Trade" said with a sigh: "International law originated in Europe. All contacts between countries are carried out according to law. Without diplomatic relations, we have to suffer from being inferior to others in our exports to Europe." Indeed, these remarks voice the painful feelings of large numbers of entrepreneurs on the island.

EDITORIAL CRITICIZES PRC ARMS SUPPLY TO THIRD WORLD

OW230621 Taipei CHINA POST in English 18 Jun 86 p 4

[Editorial: "Peking's Arms Sales to Third World"]

[Text] While Peking is attempting to get modern and sophisticated arms and weapons from the United States and other Western nations on the pretext of countering the Soviet threat, it has been engaged in supplying Third World nations with lethal arms and weapons indiscriminately to stir up trouble around the world.

U.S. Senator Barry Goldwater, Republican of Arizona and chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, inserted a statement to that effect in the Congressional Record stating that Red China is selling arms on the international arms market "without regard to who buys the arms of what damage is done to peace and stability in areas of vital importance to the United States."

Goldwater noted that the confirmation of these disruptive arms dealings by Communist China appeared this month in the authoritative annual military study published by the International Institute of Strategic Studies in London. According to its study, the Peking regime has sold U.S. $1.6 billion worth of arms to the radical government of Iran alone. On the other hand, Peking has also sold weapons to Iraq, thus Peking has become a weapon monger in the Iran-Iraq war.

Senator Goldwater revealed at the same time that Peking is also supplying arms to Marxist regimes in Africa as well as stiring up an arms race in South America. He declared that "Red China is selling arms to one of our worst enemies and kindling arms races in places where the powder keg is already smoldering....Communist China is manipulating the misfortunes of others at the risk of creating greater international disturbances."

Needless to say that Peking's provocative behavior is in line around the world so that communism may triumph and rule the world. Teng Hsiao-ping is following the Mao tactics to the letter without deviation.

Although Senator Goldwater suggested for the U.S. Government to "insist that Peking stop supplying arms to terrorist nations and adversaries of the United States before we allow the sale or transfer of any American arms for Red China to go forward," it is doubtful whether his suggestions would be heeded. The U.S. Congress has so far failed to reject the Reagan administration's proposal to sell Peking U.S. $550 million worth of avionics and spare parts, and it is too much to expect that the Reagan administration will reverse itself in this regard in the future.

The Reagan administration should realize that the Peking regime is not a genuine partner for peace but a genuine warmonger which has been amply proven by the latest revelation of Senator Goldwater. It should change its Peking appeasement police before it is too late.

EDITORIAL URGES U.S. TO REVERSE ARMS SALES DENIAL

OW230631 Taipei CHINA POST in English 21 Jun 86 p 4

[Editorial: "U.S. Arms Sales to ROC"]

[Text] Senator Phil Gramm's urging Thursday for the U.S. Government to allow the Republic of China [ROC] to purchase F-20 jet fighters represents another reflection of U.S. Congressional demands in this respect.

The Republican senator from Texas told a forum Thursday sponsored by the American Defense Foundation that the Republic of China must be sold U.S. arms it requires for its defense. He said that allowing the ROC to purchase the F-20 fighters it seeks is "the perfect solution," because the plan was developed without U.S. Government research funds and Northrop Aviation should be allowed to sell it to "anyone they want to."

Gramm also referred to the sales of U.S. $550 million in avionics equipment to Peking and said although the transfaction "by and large will not menace Taiwan, it must be monitored closely."

Senator Gramm's remarks are in line with Senator Barry Goldwater's viewing urging last January in Taipei the sale of F-20 fighters for the ROC Air Force to upgrade its defense capabilities in accordance with the Taiwan Relations Act.

Yet the Reagan administration remains unmoved by the repeated appeals by many senators and congressmen as well as many scholars while it continues to appease the Peking regime with arms sales and other measures detrimental to the interests of the Republic of China. In this way, the United States is betraying its objective of anti-communism and its long-lasting friend, the Republic of China.

COMMENTARY SPECULATES ON FATE OF PRC NATIONALS IN ROK

OW220041 Taipei International Service in English 0200 GMT 21 Jun 86

[Station commentary: "Another Bid for Freedom"]

[Text] Nineteen Chinese on a small wooden boat reached Korean waters Tuesday [17 June], 30 hours after they sailed from Shantung. Reports from Seoul about the 19 are not in agreement, because the Korean Government has kept an official silence about the details. The one thing certain is that they did not drift into Korean waters. All indications point to the obvious, that is, they are freedom-seekers.

The ASSOCIATED PRESS quoted a Korean official as saying that they fled Mainland China to seek political asylum in the Republic of China on Taiwan. Earlier reports indicated that the new arrivals were from the south China province of Kwangtung. Another report said that they were from the Kwangsi Autonomous Region, which is also in south China. One report said the boat people left their hometown in two batches and converged on the coastal city of Chingtao before they pooled their money to purchase the 4.5-ton motorized junk for the voyage. The freedom-seekers were reportedly militamen. Others said they are civilians. They include three government officals, four peasants, two welders, two sheet metal workers, one cook, one printer, three merchants, and three drivers.

The composition of the group indicates that they are probably members of a militia unit. There could be no other motive for them to travel together so far away from home except for the purpose of seeking freedom outside. They had to act together because none of them could afford to buy the boat alone. It also made good sense that they should choose the Republic of China as their final destination with South Korea as the midway station. The mainland coast facing Taiwan is too closedly guarded and patrolled to be safe for them to sail directly for free China. The next question is: Will the Korean Government allow them to come to Taiwan? Under normal circumstances the question does not exist, as a civilized country always respects the free choice of political refugees. However, Seoul has been wooing Red China in hope of ending Peking's support for North Korea and of seeking Peking's cooperation for the upcoming Asian Games and the 1988 Summer Olympics.

In March last year the Korean Government turned over a Chinese Communist torpedo boat and its 13 crew members to Peking even though 2 of them had asked for political asylum. All the returned sailors were executed by the Communist authorities. Nonetheless, the Korean Government had followed international practice in handling a series of defections from Communist China by allowing the freedom-seekers to proceed to Taiwan as they requested. The last such case occurred earlier this year. In the present case, the Korean Maritime Police said the 19 defectors would be handled in accordance with Korean domestic law and international practice. That means the fate of the 19 defectors remain very uncertain. It much depends on the Korean interpretation of the incident. If the Korean authorities acknowledge the fact that the 19 Chinese are freedom-seekers, they would be no other course except sending them to Taiwan. The outcome could be quite different if the fact were twisted for political reasons.

EDITORIAL SUPPORTS U.S., UK STAND ON SOUTH AFRICA

OW230401 Taipei CNA in English 0317 GMT 23 Jun 86

[Text] Taipei, June 22 (CNA) -- The United States' and Britain's refusing to impose economic sanctions against South Africa for its recently instituted state of emergency indicate that South Africa's efforts to improve its racial policy have been recognized by the two major countries, a Taipei newspaper said over the weekend.

The extraodinary action taken by the government of South Africa to safeguard its national security in spite of foreign intervention, the CHINA DAILY NEWS said editorially, fully demonstrates the courage of a responsible government to do what has to be done.

Although international economic sanctions have not affected South Africa substantially, South Africa's racial segregation policy, apartheid, has made it vulnerable to unfair trials in the court of international public opinion, the editorial said.

U.S. President Ronald Reagan said he believes that South Africa is in a civil war which is not simply a situation of blacks confronting whites, and British Premier Margaret Thatcher holds a view like that of President Reagan, the editorial said.

The editorial also pointed out that the U.S. and Britain have understood South Africa's policy of apartheid. This attitude will no doubt help the U.S. and Britain normalize their relations with South Africa.

PLA EMPHASIZES SCIENTIFIC MANAGEMENT IN MILITARY TRAINING

HK230700 Hong Kong MING PAO in Chinese 21 Jun 86 p 5

["Special dispatch from Beijing": "All-Army Study of Military Training Advocates Strengthening Scientific Management"]

[Text] According to the All-Army Forum on Modern Management of Military Training, a pressing task in present day military training is to strengthen modern, scientific management and to improve training results in order to meet the needs resulting from the Army's structural reform.

The forum, which ended on 10 June, was held in Jinan by the General Staff Headquarters' Military Training Departments. It has been the first all-Army forum on the scientific management of training since the CPC assumed power. During the forum, thanks to the lectures delivered by various experts and researchers, the viewing of microcomputer software developed by the Jinan Military Region to administer training and its performance, the exchange of experience, and the discussions, the minds of the senior officers of the military training departments under various military regions, the Navy, the Air Force, the PLA Second Artillery, and various combined arms armies were broadened and enlightened.

According to those who attended the forum, in recent years, the whole Army has been paying attention to introducing modern management theories to training and has done much and achieved a lot in target-based management, the formulation of rules and regulations, the establishment of norms and standards; and the application of the computer and management has improved and developed. However, present management of military training still falls short of the requirements merited by the situation. At present, there is an urgent need to rationally exploit and make the best use of various training resources by various effective management methods in order to achieve various training objectives.

Those who attended the forum pointed out the need to pay special attention to four problems concerning modern, scientific management:

1. Leaders at all levels must renew and update their ideas. It is necessary to make decision-making more scientific, to discard the practice of "giving vague, general directives at all levels, the practice of simultaneously involving leaders at different levels in training at a particular level, and the practice of emphasizing the numbers of meters, rings, and seconds": at the expense of other things in examining training results, and to extensively develop and apply new branches of technology, such as the systems theory, information theory, control theory, and the computer.

2. It is important to stress results. A major characteristic of modern management is its emphasis on results. It is necessarsy to combine quality with quantity, training results with economic results, and partial improvements with overall, systematic improvements, to tap the potential of the departments responsible for training, and to achieve the best training results with the least consumption of materials and time.

3. It is imperative to exercise decentralized management. At present, management over military training is not clearly defined.

The activities that should be managed are not properly managed, while those that should not be managed are managed elaborately. This has resulted in dampening the enthusiasm of the lower level units. In light of the basic principles of modern management, it is necessary to clearly define the duties of the training units at various levels and exercise decentralized management so that each unit can systematically lay particular emphasis on training work.

4. It is essential to strengthen legislative work in the training field. On the one hand, the question of legislation should be solved and regulations should be drafted for military training; and on the other hand, it is necessary to abide by the laws and regulations and to bring training into the orbit of regularization.

SINO-AFRICAN RELATIONS STRAINED BY STUDENT CONFLICT

[By Chris Yeung: "Recently in Beijing"]

[Text] Colourful banners flew along the Beijing boulevards and soldiers of the People's Liberation Army lined up in front of the Great Hall of the People together with Beijing leaders last week to welcome two leaders of the Third World -- Philippine Vice-President Salvador Laurel and Mali President General Moussa Traore.

But casting a shadow over the cordial atmosphere in the sunny Chinese capital was a recent conflict between Chinese and black African students at Tianjin University.

At issue is not only the fate of the 15 or so Africans who were still hanging around in Beijing but the "separation policy" between foreign and Chinese inside and outside the campus.

This is despite so many moves by the Chinese Government to open its door to the outside world since Mr Deng Xiaoping assumed top leadership in 1979.

Mr Deng's consistent open-door policy in recent years has lured a growing number of foreign businessmen to explore lucrative markets, tourists to travel the vast continent and students to sample the daily life of the world's most populous country.

At present there are about 3,500 foreign students, mainly from Third World countries, studying in China. About 1,600 of them are Africans.

Cultural differences have, in the past, been blamed for sporadic conflicts between foreign students and the Chinese but the latest incident in Tianjin, involving the largest number of students so far, has seriously strained relations between China and African nations. Beijing education officials described it as an "isolated incident" and the Chinese press made no comment. Instead the BEIJING DAILY last Wednesday quoted two students, a Moroccan and a Japanese, who were recently assaulted by five Chinese, as saying the Chinese Government has protected the legal rights and benefits of foreigners in the country.

They maintained the overwhelming majority of Chinese were friendly and that they have never been discriminated against racially. Their remarks have raised eyebrows among observers and correspondents in Beijing.

Some Africans have indicated they wish to return home -- a move which would embarrass China. Joined by African students in Beijing, the blacks took their grievances to the streets in front of the Language Institute in northwest Beijing early this month. "We want the Chinese Government to know our grievances," a Togolese student told the SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST.

African students have long complained they are the victims of abuse and prejudice in China. Other foreign students have received better treatment. But they said they were all virtually separated from the Chinese community.

Students told the POST that there has been a desperate lack of contact between African students and Chinese from all walks of life, let alone the student community. Black Africans said they were sometimes harassed by Chinese in the street. Inside the campus, many Chinese were afraid to get involved with the foreign community. Chinese students were often questioned in detail by university authorities after chatting with or telephoning foreigners, who have separate dormitories and canteens. The Chinese also have to register if they want to visit the dormitories of foreign students.

Africans feel humiliated when they are called heigui, or black devils, though many Chinese do not mean to be malicious.

The Tianjin incident has promoted nine African ambassadors to join together for talks with the State Education Commission and numerous meetings were held last week. Ambassadors were trying to persuade their student nationals to return to Tianjin to continue their studies.

SHENZHEN MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT TO UNDERGO RESHUFFLE

HK220832 Hong Kong SUNDAY STANDARD in English 22 Jun 86 p 2

[Text] There will be a major reshuffle in the Shenzhen municipal government later this month involving several deputy mayors and deputy secretary-generals. Seven deputy majors and top officials of the municipal party committee will step down while five members of the party standing committee will be replaced. Some of them will be offered key posts in the municipal People's Congress. Those involved include Deputy Mayor Zhou Ding, who will become the chairman of the Standing Committee of the Shenzhen People's Congress.

SHENZHEN REJECTS INFERIOR QUALITY IMPORTS

[Report: "Quality of Commodities Imported by Shenzhen Is Inferior" -- ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE headline]

[Text] Hong Kong, 19 Jun (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) -- According to a report from Guangzhou, Chen Teye, deputy director of Shenzhen's import and export commodity inspection bureau, recently said at a meeting that his bureau has discovered many inferior, old, broken, and false goods and goods given short measure in the commodities imported by Shenzhen.

According to Shenzhen City import and export commodity inspection bureau statistics, of the 11,000 kinds of commodities imported last year, quality problems were discovered in 660 batches of these goods. The inspection bureau claimed damages and retrieved more than $1.4 million. Goods worth $3.7 million were replaced because they were not up to specifications. More than 26 million pieces of sets of parts were delivered again by the suppliers.

In July last year, a hotel in Shenzhen placed an order with a Hong Kong company to import six sets of bowling equipment from the United States. The purchase was worth 1.4 million Hong Kong dollars. The purchase contract specified that the equipment must be new. But after the equipment was installed early this year, it was discovered that the mechanical part was renovated; and the electrical part was old; and some machines were broken and did not work at all. The hotel showed the test report of the commodity inspection bureau to the supplier and the supplier agreeed to change the goods and replace them with new equipment.

In April this year, a company in Shenzhen imported a batch of cameras from Hong Kong and the goods were worth some 200,000 Hong Kong dollars. Through sample inspection, the commodity inspection bureau found that this batch of goods were of inferior quality and that only 25 percent of the goods were up to standard. So the commodity inspection bureau issued a certificate to the Shenzhen company for them to claim damages.

GUANGDONG TO OPEN JOINT VENTURE SECURITIES FIRM

[By Paul Sham] Guangdon International Trust and Investment corp [GITIC] will today officially announce the establishment of a joint venture securities firm in Hong Kong. It will be the first such firm set up in the territory by a Chinese province and the third with mainland Chinese links. The first securities firm, Chung Mao Security Ltd, was formed by the Bank of China group and a local company. The second was New Century Securities Co. The new firm, Guang Lee Security Ltd, has been set up by Linton Chu and Co of Hong Kong and Guang Xin Enterprise Ltd, a wholly-owned subsidiary of GITIC.

Mr Linton Chu, chairman of the new company and of Linton Chu, said Guang Lee will initially concentrate on share trading, fund management, sub-underwriting and debt financing through the issue of commercial paper. He said the company will also arrange public listings in Hong Kong for China-backed local enterprises and China's domestic companies.

Mr Chu said the new firm's establishment signifies a growing awareness among China-linked companies of the important role played by the stock market in raising investment funds. He said it marks a departure from their over-dependence on banking institutions as in the past.

Negotiations for the joint venture took about two years, he added.

Mr Chu said Guang Lee will officially open for business in about two months, after its application for membership of the Stock Exchange of Hong Kong is approved. For the time being, the firm will channel its business through Linton Chu and Co Ltd.

Stock market observers said in light of the closer links with financial operations in Hong Kong, there is an increasing trend for China-backed companies to get directly involved in the local securities market. They said under China's decentralisation policy and the responsibility system, which give China-backed companies more freedom and incentives, more such regional chinese establishments are expected to engage in the securities business.

PRC TO EASE RESTRICTIONS ON SEZ DEVELOPMENT FUNDS

[By Eva To]

[Text] The squeeze of development funds to China's economic zones may be relaxed soon, acording to Vice-Governor of Guangdong Province, Mr Kuang Ji. He said some measures are being planned to relax the flow of funds from other provinces of China into the four special economic zones, but the form of relaxation is not likely to be uniform for all four. He added that such a financing arrangement is likely to be handled by the Bank of China, the country's foreign exchange specialised bank.

Meanwhile, China sources said similar relaxation in financing funds is also being prepared for the Pearl Delta Region.

Under this plan financing by foreign banks will be allowed despite the general policy of the country to tone down the over-dependence of foreign funds after a period of over-expansion in 1984.

Sources said this renewed activation of foreign banks' role in the economic zones may take the form of some sort of "development fund" similar to the one operated by a Japanese bank in Shenzhen.

On the economic performance of the province, Mr Kuang said that Guangdong has experienced its best year since the founding of the People's Republic in 1949. Production of industrial goods, including the economic zones, recorded a 25.6 percent growth in 1985, while the consolidated growth for the general economy of the province was up 17 percent, he said. For the first five months of 1986, Mr Kuang noted the growth rate is 9.2 percent compared with more than 30 percent growth for the same period last year.

He stressed that this year's figure should not be taken as a bad turn because it is based upon a very high rate of the unusual growth in 1985.

China experienced a relatively uncoordinated economic expansion in 1984, which has caused a certain setback in its economic development as a whole. Inflation has stabilised while export has out-performed the original plan by more than 10 percent, Mr Kuang said.

TAIWAN SUCCESSION REASON FOR CHIANG WEGO APPOINTMENT

[By Terry Cheng]

[Text] Legacy of the Chiang family is still very much a political asset in Taiwan and the appointment of General Chiang Wego as head of the National Security Council (NSC) is an appeal of this legacy. [as published] in case there is the need.

President Chiang Ching-kuo, aged 76, must have the succession problem in heart when recommending his 69-year-old brother for the crucial position.

General Chiang was in political disgrace in 1964 after one of his subordinates staged an abortive mutiny against his father, Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek. Since then he has only held unimportant military appointments, even after his brother assumed full-power in 1978.

Last Wednesday in a weekly meeting of the Kuomintang's (KMT) policy-making Central Standing Committee, President Chiang made the recommandations concerning his brother and that Mr Wang Tao-yuan, aged 72, the former chief of NSC, become the defence minister.

Since an important meeting of the KMT in late March, a clearer line of succession has emerged. But this is more of a nominal nature and no apparent heir has emerged. Vice-President Lee Teng-hui has moved up higher in the party's hierarchy as a result of the meeting. According to Taiwan's Constitution, he will succeed in case the president cannot perform the duties. However, the president is not necessarily the centre of power in Taiwan. To many observers, Mr Lee does not have the broad power base to have effective control over all the sectors.

Other leaders, such as Premier Yu Kuo-hwa and the education minister, Mr Li Huan, who has held considerable political strength and was recently elected a member of the Central Standing Committee, cannot inherit the full power from President Chiang. Collective leadership is an option after President Chiang, but given the situation and Chinese tradition in Taiwan, a person who is a rallying point of all political sectors is needed in the transition.

Here is where the Chiang legacy appeals. Since the KMT retreated to Taiwan in 1949, the regime and the party have been under the rule of Chiangs. Generalissimo Chiang enjoyed the unchallenged power until his death in 1975 and was succeeded by his son three years ago. The transition saw Mr C. K. Yen as the head of the state, but the centre of power rested with the younger Chiang, who was then the premier.

At present, all the high-ranking officials in the party, government and Army used to be close aides to the Chiang father and the son. For example, Premier Yu, who is said to have a family tie with Chiang, once served in the Office of the President. Must senior military leaders, such as the just-replaced defence minister, Admiral Soong Chang-chih, aged 70, and the chief of the General Staff, General Hau Pei-tsun, also once worked directly under the Chiangs.

Gen Chiang Wego has never enjoyed the same authority of his father and brother. But since he is a member of the top family, he can be a political rallying point. His close ties with the military, which can play an important role in the succession, will definitely help him function as a stabilising force. Being the head of the NSC, Gen Chiang also supervises all the security agencies of the regime.

After the murder of American-Chinese writer Henry Liu in October 1984, the security agencies have been subdued considerably. But they are still a force to be reckoned with.

The security forces, who are loyal to Generalissimo Chiang and President Chiang, will most likely continue to support another member of the family.

The influential CHINA TIMES of Taiwan said judging from the special function of the NSC and the background of Gen Chiang, he can play a special role when the situation demands. The paper commented that the appointment has cast doubts about President Chiang's earlier pledge that no member from his family would become the head-of-state after him. By appointing his brother to head the NSC does not necessarily mean that the president wants Gen Chiang to succeed him.

There is no question that the succession of the president will not proceed according to the Constitution. But given the situation in Taiwan, a smooth presidential succession does not guarantee a smooth succession of power. That is why President Chiang has to appeal to the legacy of his own family and appoint his brother to head the NSC.

FOREIGN MINISTRY WEEKLY BRIEFING HAILS DPRK PROPOSAL

OW250738 Beijing XINHUA in English 0728 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 25 (XINHUA) -- The Korean Government June 23rd statement proposing the establishment of a nuclear-free peace zone on the Korean peninsula is "in the fundamental interest of the whole Korean people".

This statement was made by a Foreign Ministry spokesman at the weekly news briefing here this afternoon. The spokesman said that the Korean Government statement "demonstrates the sincere aspiration of the Korean people for relaxing the tension on the Korean peninsula and bringing about lasting peace there."

He said, "We have always maintained that the United States should withdraw all its troops stationed there and its military equipment including nuclear weapons from South Korea." "We hope that the U.S. Government and the South Korean authorities will give serious consideration to the peaceful initiative by the Korean Government so as to ease the tension on the Korean peninsula," he added.

NEW INTERNATIONAL RELATIONSHIPS EXAMINED

HK240301 Shanghai SHIJIE JINGJI DAOBAO in Chinese 2 Jun 86 p 6

[Article by Feng Shaolei: "World Peace Will Be Maintained in a New International Pattern"]

[Text] Two eye-catching items of information from the CPSU 27th National Congress have shown that a new pattern has emerged in world politics, which is different from the bipolar system during the cold war period of the 1940's and the 1950's as well as the multi-pole system in the period of detente between the 1960's and 1970's. It is a new international bipolar system with overlapping, intersecting mutual effects and restrictions of multiple poles. [end abstract]

The 27th CPSU National Congress was convened in an atmosphere in which the Soviet Union was ready to implement "thorough reform" at home, and at the same time, under the new international pattern formed since the 1980's, in which the Soviet Union was to initiate important planning for its foreign policy strategy. Several things were rather eye-catching during the session of the 27th CPSU National Congress. One was the portion on foreign relations in Gorbachev's political report submitted to the 27th CPSU National Congress, in which the greatest part was devoted to U.S.-Soviet relations. Unlike the political reports delivered at CPSU National Congresses by his predecessors, Gorbachev's political report did not list all Soviet policies regarding every region in the world, with only a few exceptions. The concrete discussion on the U.S.-Soviet relations and the brief generalization of its relations with other regions in the world was a sharp contrast. Therefore, Western observers believe that this arrangement shows that the Soviet Union will focus its attention all the more on the relations between the superpowers.

The second items was that in the final election of the CPSU Central Committee Secretariat, A.P. Dobrynin was elected secretary of the CPSU Central Committee Secretariat.

Dobrynin has been USSR Ambassador to the United States for as long as 25 years, and he has dealt with many U.S. presidents and secretaries of state between the Eisenhower and Reagan administrations. The significance of promoting Dobrynin lies not only in stressing U.S.-Soviet relations, but possibly the prolonged significance of promoting U.S.-Soviet talks.

Thus, we can see whether by the programmatic discussion on foreign policy in the political report or the appointment of some key figure in its personnel, it has demonstrated that Gorbachev has proposed a strategic principle with U.S.-Soviet relations as the focus of the entire Soviet foreign relations. Does this show signs of a new international pattern in the 1980's characteristic of a retreat from a multiple pole system to a bipolar system as in the 1960's and 1970's? In order to explore this question, it is necessary to undertake some retrospection and analysis on the U.S.-Soviet rivalry in the international pattern since the 1980's

Reaffirming U.S. Global Interests

There are two characteristics in the U.S.-Soviet rivalry since the 1980's. One is the tension in the U.S.-Soviet rivalry which has surpassed any period since detente. Some people in the Soviet Union as well as in the West believe that the tension in the situation in the first few years of 1980 exceeded the cold war years between the late 1940's and the early 1950's

In order to deal with the pressing Soviet global offensive of the latter half of the 1970's, the Reagan administration made all-round readjustment of its foreign policy with the slogan of "rejuvenating the United States and reestablishing U.S. prestige", as soon as it got rid of its serious economic crisis in the first 2 years of the 1980's. Reagan has gone along with the rising tide of conservative forces at home, returning to the concept of a "bipolar" world, while giving up the "five pole" concept of Nixon's times. In U.S. foreign policy, the Reagan administration has stressed antagonism against the Soviet Union as the key, and changed the trend of Carter's times which attached importance to the North-South rather than the East-West relations. In the arms race, the Reagan administration is no longer satisifed with just recovering and maintaining a "balance in power," but explicitly seeks "superiority," and is attempting to overcome the Soviet Union with its "star wars" initiative nuclear arms drive. In economic relations, Reagan does not simply rely on the "network of interests" to induce an evolution inside the Soviet Union, but attaches attention to such things as the arms and "sanctions," in an attempt to defeat the Soviet Union economically. In politics, it is no longer satisfied with containing the Soviet Union in its existing spheres of influence, but openly asserts that the United States, "will by no means acknowledge the legalization of the status quo of Europe and its being severed." In all hot-spot areas, the United States has sent its troops for direct intervention, but does not tolerate Soviet intervention, and openly proclaims that U.S. interests are global, asserting that the United States will consolidate, return to, and seize back every important strategic place in the world. The U.S. attack on Libya in April this year has served as an obvious sign of such intentions.

Despite the fact that the Soviet Union has witnessed a drastic fall in its economy in consecutive years since the 1980's, while internationally it has had to face the Afghan and Polish issues, the Soviet leaders have repeatedly made explicit that the Soviet Union would never allow the United States to acquire military superiority, even if it means the Soviet Union tightening its belt.

Therefore, when the United States deployed the Pershing I missiles and cruise missiles successively in the United Kingdom, Italy and the FRG on schedule, the Soviet Union immediately increased longer-range intermediate-range tactical missiles in its homeland, as well as the GDR and Czechoslovakia. When the United States sent its aircraft carrier for an exercise in the area of a Soviet Far East military base, the Soviet Union sent its submarines for the first time cruising in the waters of the east coast of the United States. In space weaponry, the United States succeeded in testing its air-launched anti-satellite missiles and ground based ballistic missiles in 1984, and the Soviet Union scored new successes in its manned Skylab project. The tension of the U.S.-Soviet confrontation reached a new height in 1983 and 1984 since detente in the late 1960's.

The Formation of a New Pattern in the 1980's

Second, in the U.S.-Soviet competition since the 1980's the trend of mutual confrontation in the form of alliances have reappeared.

As a result of its weakening status in the world in the decade between the late 1960's and the late 1970's, the U.S. Government relaxed its relations with its alliances, and developed partnerships in order to reduce the responsibility of U.S. leadership in achieving a strategic contraction. A decade later, when Reagan came into power, the United States once again stressed its "leading" role in the West, as well as the role of military alliance in the confrontation with the Soviet Union, while doing its best to keep its alliance and all other forces on the track of U.S.-Soviet rivalry. As the conservatives have come into power in the major West European countries since the 1980's, some left-wing leaders have also turned right; and they have moved closer to the United States on the Western collective defense issue. Since Reagan's "star wars" initiative was made public, the United Kingdom, West Germany, France and Japan have successively expressed their wish to participate in the project, even when disputes in their own countries remain. Therefore, the momentum of the West in uniting to contend with the Soviet Union has reached an unprecedented height since the detente of the late 1960's.

Meanwhile, the 10 CEMA nations Science and Technology Progress Program Before the year 2000, with Gorbachev's promotion, came into being in late 1985. The emergence of this so-called "Eureka Project" of the East has in essence reflected the efforts of the Soviet Union, Eastern Europe, and other CEMA nations in stepping up their plan for unification, and their aim to unfold the manifolded competition with West in military affairs, economy, science and technology. In this sense, the Soviet Union and other CEMA nations are unprecedently bound to the same chariot.

The emergence of the above-mentioned new situation has in essence indicated that the development of the international pattern in the 1980's, has changed from multi-polarization, which has been the trend since detente, to the development of a reversal of the poles. This is different from the two pole system in the period of detente between the 1960's and the 1970's. It is a new international bipolar pattern with overlapping intersecting mutual effects and restrictions of the multiple poles.

Worthy of our pondering is the question of why history has not simply repeated, in the 1980's, the situation of the unitary bipolar confrontation during the cold war period, but brought about the emergence of a new complex two poles of a multi-pole structure. That is because the anti-hegemony and peace forces developed in the 1970's would inevitably push forward the momentum of the multiple poles as a means to contend with the two hegemonies.

Therefore, the international situation since the 1980's, can only be result in multi-pole development against the background of the confrontation and rivalry of the two hegemonies under the restriction of pluralism.

The Peace Forces Transcending Ideologies

How do the world's peace forces push forward the momentum of the mutiple poles in restricting the rivalry between the two hegemonies? Primarily, a developing trend, transcending ideologies and group boundaries, has emerged in the world's social antihegemony peace forces.

Europe is the region where the confrontation of the two hegemonies is tensest, and the ideological conflict the severest. The development of the peace forces transcending ideologies, push forward the East-West detentes of the 1970's. The trend of developing international relations transcending ideology and group boundaries has reached a new level both in depth and breadth since the beginning of the 1980's. In a background in which the United States has given up detente and pursued a new policy of containment against the Soviet Union since the 1980's, West European countries have done their best to urge the U.S.-Soviet to talk about an accord on disarmament, so that Europe may relaize a "low-level balance of power." They advocate the West continuing its economic and trade relations with the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe, while the West gets real benefits. At the same time, they have proposed holding bilateral negotiations to solve the conflicts in such hot spot areas as the Middle East with the participation of the Soviet Union. Of late, some people even proposed implementing a "second policy for the East," in order to push forward detente between Eastern and Western Europe.

At the same time, an unprecedented trend of Eastern Europe demanding closer relations with West European countries has emerged since the 1980's under the situation in which the Soviet Union has strengthened its alliances in its confrontation with the United States. In order to realize the exchange of visits between the heads of the GDR and the FRG, and GDR had an open dispute with the Soviet Union in spring 1984. The U.S.-Soviet confrontation has almost developed the momentum of the cold war years over the past 2 or 3 years. However, the frequency of the mutual visits between government heads of East and West European countries has been unprecedented since the end of World War II. The heads of States of premiers of the United Kingdom, West Germany, Italy, Belgium and the United States have consecutively visited Hungary, while Kadar's tour of Western Europe was the talk of the town in Europe for a time. Despite the fact that Honecker failed to make his trip to the FRG, exchange visits between the GDR and Finland, Sweden, Greece, and Italy were carried out. Besides, Yugoslavia, Romania, Bulgaria and Poland have also begun active diplomatic activities with West European countries. This has fully demonstrated that small and medium European countries are doing their best to push forward East-West talks, and that their aim is to safeguard European security and stability.

Besides, the role of the Third World countries as the principle force in the struggle for world peace has been continuously strengthened. Today, where there is crisis in the world, where there is a hot spot, there are Third World countries going there in a liaison and mediation role. In order to conclude the turbulent situation in Central and South America, the Contadora Group has in recent years proposed that "a Latin American solution should be adopted in pursuing a course to solve the conflicts in Central and South America." The ASEAN countries have made unremitting efforts to ease the tense situation in Southeast Asia. Arabian countries such as Egypt are adopting measures to seek new united action in solving the Middle East issue.

Summing up, we can see that the bipolar, multi-pole pattern is likely to exist for a considerably long period on the condition that the U.S.-Soviet balance of strength remains intact. The U.S.-Soviet confrontation may be further impeded, and world peace may possibly maintained for a comparably long period because of manifold restrictions and limits on their military power. This conclusion is the real significance in the analysis and comparison of the bipolar-multi-pole international system.

SOCIALIST INTERNATIONAL ADOPTS RESOLUTIONS

[Text] Lima, June 23 (XINHUA) -- The 17th Congress of the Socialist International ended here today after adopting resolutions calling for more international aid to the developing countries, a halt to the arms race in outer space and an end to the U.S. intervention in Central America.

One resolution, called the "Lima Declaration", said that most of the external debts of the poor countries, especially the drought-striken African countries, should be exempted and payment of remainder of the debts should be postponed for 30 years. The resolution also said that the payment of a debt by a developing country should be no more than 20 percent of its income from exports. The document called for maintaining the bank interest rates at a level acceptable to the developing countries, offering these countries more access to the markets of the developed countries and the stabilization of the prices of raw materials.

The economic policy committee of the Socialist International also proposed setting up of an international organization to call conferences between creditors and debtors in order to solve the debt issue.

On the disarmament issue, the "Lima Declaration" urged the superpowers to carry out their promises of reducing their nuclear arsenals by 50 percent and demanded that they stop developing either ground or outer space based anti-missile and anti-satellite systems. The declaration also opposed the improvement and deployment of chemical weapons.

Another resolution passed by the four-day congress criticized the U.S. Government for imposing economic sanctions against Nicaragua and offering military aid to Nicaraguan rebels and charged that the U.S. policies are creating instability in the region. The resolution also called for an end to military exercises in Central America, the withdrawal of foreign military advisors from the region and the signing of a regional peace treaty. It added that the Nicaraguan Government should carry out its promise of nonalignment, pluralized ideology and mixed economy.

Willy Brandt, chairman of the Federal German Social Democratic Party and the country's former chancellor, was reelected as chairman of the Socialist International.

WORLD BANK TO AID PRC'S RURAL HEALTH PROJECT

OW240932 Beijing XINHUA in English 0637 GMT 24 Jun 86

[Text] Washington, June 23 (XINHUA) -- The World Bank and its affiliate, the International Development Association (IDA), will help China improve health services to some 300 million farmers in five provinces, according to a World Bank news release today.

Health services will be expanded and improved in 50 rural counties in five provinces -- Gansu, Hubei, Jilin, Sichuan and Ningxia Hui Autonomous Region. Funds will be provided to strengthen the monitoring and control of diseases, to upgrade immunization efforts, and to improve the managment of epidemic prevention stations.

Three national centers will be built and rehabilitated to produce vaccines that meet international standards. The Chinese Ministry of Public Health will be assisted in monitoring the quality and safety of domestic and imported drugs and in evaluating the contents and possible adverse effects of new drugs.

New approaches to rural health insurance will be tested and the results will form the basis of a national policy on health care financing in the rural areas. The total cost of the project will be 177.4 million U.S. dollars. A 15 million dollar World Bank loan and an IDA credit of 65 million dollars will be provided.

FOREIGN EXPERTISE ASSISTS MODERNIZATION PROGRAM

[Text] Beijing, June 24 (XINHUA) -- Foreigners have contributed to the modernization program throughout China, particularly in enterprise managment and urban construction, according to an official of the China International Association for Personnel Exchange. The country first invited individual foreigners to work on basic industiral and managerial problems in 1979, under the policy of opening to the outside world. Eleven foreign experts from Japan and the Federal Republic of Germany have done consulting work on the China's development and reform plans for its automobile industry.

Their suggestions have been "valuable," the official told XINHUA today. "The foreign experts studied the situation carefully and have given our automotive people useful ideas on upgrading technology and developing new products." In addition, he said, "They've helped develop a strategy for finding the money to do these things." Foreign experts have also done consulting work on key building projects, helping cut costs and speed up construction. At the Mawei shipyard in east China's Fujian Province, two Japanese consultants suggested managment reforms and technological upgrading that cut the lead time for building a 15,000-ton freighter to six months instead of three years.

China's four special economic zones, where foreign investors enjoy tax reductions and other preferential treatment, have also invited technicians and managerial staff from Hong Kong, Macao and overseas to work, the official said. The Shenzhen Zone in Guangdong Province alone has invited more than 500 such people since 1980.

REAGAN 'ENCOURAGED' BY SOVIET ARMS CONTROL PLAN

[Text] Washington June 23 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan said today he was "encouraged" by the latest Soviet arms control proposal and might be able to accept it "in principle." In an interview with the LOS ANGELES TIMES, Reagan said this was the first time that the Soviets "are proposing actual reductions (in nuclear arms) and have even announced their desire that these lead to an eventual elimination of such weapons." He said the United States is still in the process of studying the Soviet proposal.

But he added, "The principle of starting meaningful reductions of weapons and with the ultimate goal of eliminating them entirely -- yes, I agree wholeheartedly with that." The Soviet Union reportedly proposed a significant cut in the strategic nuclear weapons of the two superpowers in exchange for a U.S. agreement to abide by the 1972 Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty for at least 15 years. The treaty bans the development, testing and deployment of space defense systems.

Asked if his Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI), known as the "star wars" program, could also be part of U.S.-Soviet Arms control negotiations generally, Reagan replied, "That's right." "We have some ideas about that (SDI) too, which we think will be forthcoming when we start responding to their latest proposal," he added.

PETROVSKIY SAYS NO PROGRESS IN DISARMAMENT TALKS

OW250132 Beijing XINHUA in English 0034 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Text] Geneva, June 24 (XINHUA) -- U.S.-Soviet negotiations on nuclear disarmament and space weapons have thus far shown "no progress", Soviet Vice-Minister of Foreign Affairs Vladimir Petrovskiy said at a press conference here today.

"We have tabled a whole series of proposals but have received no response," Petrovskiy said. Any agreement between the two sides limiting nuclear arms or calling for at least a move in that direction, Petrovskiy said, would "serve as a base" for a second Reagan-Gorbachev summit. U.S. President Ronald Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev met for the first time in Geneva last November.

During the press conference the Soviet vice-minister also addressed the issue of nuclear testing saying that a treaty on the issue is of utmost priority. The Soviet Union has put a moratorium on all nuclear tests. However, the United States has yet to follow suit.

Concerning an eventual treaty on a chemical weapons ban, Petrovskiy said the recent NATO decision to continue the manufacture of such weapons "leaves serious doubts about the intentions of the other side." The security of states cannot indefinitely depend on the fear of reprisals and "neither the arms race nor a nuclear war can ever be won," Petrovskiy said.

U.S., USSR TO DISCUSS MIDEAST IN STOCKHOLM

OW201131 Beijing XINHUA in English 0714 GMT 20 Jun 86

[Text] Washington, June 19 (XINHUA) -- The United States and the Soviet Union have agreed to meet in Stockholm, Sweden, next week to exchange views at the experts level on the Middle East, the U.S. State Department said today. State Department spokesman Bernard Kalb said the U.S. team will be headed by Richard Murphy, assistant secretary of state for Near East and South Asia affairs.

"These discussions will be held within the framework of exchanges with the Soviet Union on a whole range of regional issues," said Kalb. They are a continuation of the Mideast experts discussions conducted in Vienna in February last year, he added. He said this is an exchange of views, adding, "We don't intend to negotiate any agreements, nor do we anticipate any joint U.S.-Soviet actions to emerge from this kind of discussions." The spokesman declined to say whether the peace conference proposed by the Arab countries would be one of the topics discussed at the Stockholm meeting. An exchange of views can be beneficial, he said.

HU YAOBANG COMMENTS ON USSR TIES NOTED

OW240641 Beijing in Russian to the USSR 1800 GMT 22 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Hu Yaobang, General Secretary of the CPC Central Committee, who is on a visit to Italy, told a press conference in Rome on the morning on 21 June that his present visit to Italy will further promote development of friendship and cooperation between China and Italy.

Speaking on PRC-USSR relations, Hu Yaobang said: The Chinese side hopes for a normalization of relations between both countries in the political sphere. Unfortunately, however, no significant progress [sushchestvennyy sdvig] has been achieved. The new leaders of the Soviet Union have worked out some new political directions and they hope to animate their country's economy. This is a good cause and China wishes them success. In the foreign policy area, they have also proposed a number of initiatives. We hope that they will conduct a sincere dialogue with the United States.

USSR TO IMPROVE TRADE RELATIONS WITH WEST

[Text] Moscow, June 19 (XINHUA) -- The Soviet Union will further participate in international labor division and improve foreign trade relations, including those with Western countries, in order to realize the general principle ascribed by the 27th Congress of the Soviet Communist Party. Nikolay Ryzhkov, chairman of the Soviet Council of Ministers, made the remarks at a meeting with representatives of commerce and industry from the West and Soviet departments.

Ryzhkov said the Soviet Union's new five-year plan has provided the possibility for enlarging economic and technical cooperation with the West while demanding to "remove obstacles in international trade." He said that some Western blocs should give up the policy of exerting pressure on foreign economic relations.

The two-day meeting, which started today, is sponsored by the Soviet Chamber of Commerce and Industry and the International Chamber of Commerce. On the agenda are discussions on economy, trade, science and technology prospects between the Soviet Union and industrialized countries in the West before 1990.

TRADE, TOURISM ENLIVEN PRC-USSR BORDER TOWN

OW201417 Beijing XINHUA in English 1129 GMT 20 Jun 86

["News feature: Trade, Tourism Make Sino-Soviet Border Town Come Alive" -- XINHUA headline]

[Excerpts] Urumqi, June 20 (XINHUA) -- The boom is on for the people of Horgos, a village of 500 on the Sino-Soviet border in northwest China's Xinjiang Uygur Autonomous Region. Only three years ago so inconspicuous mapmakers seemd to pass it by without a thought, Horgos has been reborn as a boisterous way station following the reopening of its ancient pass to the Soviet Union. [sentence as received]

Heavy-duty trucks noisily lumber through its once quiet streets, shuttling back and forth to Soviet towns. They roll into China with steel, cement and machines and return stuffed with cotton, cloth, wool, fur and produce. Tourists from throughout the world prowl the village's alleys, where no foreigner walked for decades. Reopened to outsiders in November 1983, Horgos quickly became a major attraction on the ancient silk road, which linked China with Europe for a thousand years from 200 B.C.

Before the reopening, the village's only buildings were shabby bungalows with a total floor space of less than 2,000 square meters, local officials say. Now, modern buildings with 8,000 square meters of floor space house a bank, a post office, a hotel, a restaurant, a store, and customs, quarantine, transport and trade offices. A school, a clinic, a modern hotel for foreigners with an attached recreation center, a restaurant, a cinema and a dance hall are being built. To make their village more attractive, residents have planted trees to shade roads and flowers and ornamental plants to dot streets and courtyards.

Local officials say they expect the growing town to become one of the region's major trade and tourism centers. In 1985, nearly 2,000 people entered or left China to visit their relatives through Horgos. Another 10,000 tourists came to sightsee. And even more are coming this year, local officials say.

ASEAN FOREIGN MINISTERS' MEETING WRAP-UP

[Text] Manila, June 24 (XINHUA) -- The 19th foreign ministers' meeting of the Association of Southeast Asian Nations (ASEAN) concluded here this afternoon after two days' intensive discussions. During the two-day meeting, the Kampuchean issue remained a major concern among the six ASEAN member countries. The participants at the meeting said the Vietnamese occupation of Kampuchea poses an obstacle to regional peace and stability and denies freedom to the Kampuchean people.

They condemned Vietnam's intransigent attitude in rejecting the eight-point proposal offered by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea (CGDK). They considered the proposal reasonable, flexible and comprehensive and able to serve as a constructive framework for a just solution to the Kampuchean problem, especially to the ending of Hanoi's seven-year occupation Kampuchea.

In a joint communique adopted at the closing session, the ASEAN foreign ministers expressed support for the CGDK eight-point proposal. They pressed for the phased withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Kampuchea and self-determination by the Kampuchean people, and reaffirmed their continuing support for the CGDK in their struggle to rid their country of foreign oppression and domination.

The communique also urged ASEAN countries to have closer economic cooperation among themselves.

ASEAN groups Brunei, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand. Though ASEAN countries have grown steadily since the founding of the association 20 years ago, they are now facing difficulties in their economies due to the influence of the world economic situation.

ASEAN representatives in the deliberations called for closer regional cooperation in the economic fields, citing falling commodity prices and trade protectionism of the developed countries which they said no longer favor separate growth of individual ASEAN economy. They urged ASEAN member countries to take new initiatives to boost economic growth within ASEAN.

At the closing ceremony, the six ASEAN member countries signed two agreements, one on energy cooperation and another on petroleum security, hoping these agreements would result in the further advancement of energy-related cooperation in the ASEAN region.

The foreign ministers agreed that the third ASEAN summit would be held in Manila in the middle of 1987. The meeting also decided to hold the next ASEAN foreign ministers' meeting in Singapore in 1987.

The foreign ministers appointed Rederick Yong Ying Fatt of Brunei the next secretary general of the ASEAN Secretariat for the next three years.

The ASEAN ministerial meeting will be followed by a ministerial dialogue conference on Jun 26-27 between ASEAN and the United States, Japan, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and European Economic Community. The ASEAN delegates are expected to reiterate ASEAN's firm position against protectionism, and urge their dialogue partners to ease protectionist barriers and intensify cooperation with ASEAN.

NEW TRADE CONTRACTS SIGNED WITH PHILIPPINES

[Text] Manila, June 24 (XINHUA) -- China and the Philippines have signed a new package of import-export contracts valued at 47 million U.S. dollars in the past two weeks. Of the total transactions concluded, China's imports from the Philippines are valued at 40 million U.S. dollars while its exports to the country are worth seven million U.S. dollars.

This was announced by Ye Lingyun, head of the Chinese trade delegation, at Manila airport today upon departure for home after a fortnight's visit. Ye told XINHUA that China showed great concern over the imbalance of trade with the Philippines in the last few years. "My delegation, consisting of 28 members from a dozen Chinese trading corporations, has been tasked to buy more than we sell here to help alleviate the trade deficits of the Philippine side, so as to further the trade relations and friendship between the two countries," she added.

The commodities China has contracted to import from the Philippines include copper products, compound fertilizer, phosphatic fertilizer, banana, coconut oil and plywood. China's exports cover soybean meal, canned food, polyester fiber, metals and machinery. It was learned that the total volume of trade between China and the Philippines last year reached 270 million U.S. dollars, of which China's exports to the Philippines accounted to 210 million U.S. dollars.

PALAU PRESIDENT ON GAINING PARTIAL INDEPENDENCE

[Text] Canberra, June 17 (XINHUA) -- President of the Pacific state of Palau Lazarus Salii said that the United States has promised to his country a partial independent status despite Soviet threats of a veto in the U.N. Security Council.

According to reports reaching here today from Koror, capital of the Palau Islands, President Lazarus Salii said that he has asked the U.S. Administration to speed up a "compact of free association with the United States." Under the "compact", Palau will be a partially independent state gaining one billion U.S. dollars in economic assistance, while the United States will retain its responsibility for defense.

"PACIFIC ISLANDS MONTHLY" reported, Palauans voted for the "compact" at a plebiscite on February 24 this year. The U.N. Trusteeship Council approved it on May 28, with the Soviet Union casting the only dissenting vote.

It was reported that Moscow believed the agreement was a disguised attempt by Washington to annex the strategically located Palau Islands which stretch 644 kilometers across the Pacific.

President Salii, who visited Washington last month, dismissed the Soviet threat and said that the United States might move unilaterally to terminate trusteeship without going to the Security Council. With a population of about 14,000, Palau comprises 200 islands in the Western Pacific. She is fertile and well-wooded, producing many kinds of tropical fruits and vegetables.

INDONESIAN CONSUL ON SUSPENSION OF TRADE WITH PRC

HK240231 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE in Chinese 1210 GMT 23 Jun 86

[Text] 23 Jun -- Commercial Consul (Sudarja) of the Indonesian Consulate in Hong Kong told this reporter today that Indonesia's direct trade with China had recently been suspended. He disclosed that the relevant departments on both sides have maintained contacts to find a solution.

According to Indonesian regulations (Sudarja) said, all goods to be transported to Indonesia should be examined by SGS and inspection reports should be provided. However, this was not accepted by China. In light of the agreement reached between SGS and China's Import and Export Commodity Inspection Bureau in Jakarta in January 1985, China's Import and Export Commodity Inspection Bureau will be responsible for examining goods and will issue inspection reports under the name of SGS. (Sudarja) said that the agreement was not confirmed by the Indonesian authorities. In my opinion, (Sudarja) continued, the decision made by the Indonesian Trade Minister in February this year that China's Import and Export Commodity Inspection Bureau cannot examine the goods on behalf of SGS does not run counter to Order No 4 issued by the Indonesian president.

So far as I know, (Sudarja) said, both Indonesia and China insist on their own view regarding commodity inspection, but I believe that both sides will be able to find a solution.

BANK OF CHINA GROUP EXPANDS IN HONG KONG

OW211523 Beijing XINHUA in English 1451 GMT 21 June 86

[Text] Hong Kong, June 21 (XINHUA) -- The Bank of China group has become the second largest in Hong Kong next only to the Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation.

According to a release by the banking group, its total amount of loans and deposits in the first five months of this year is 30 percent higher than the same period of last year. The issuance of industrial loans, an important aspect of the group's business which started in 1983, totalled 20,000 by April this year, involving more than six billion Hong Kong dollars (769 million U.S. dollars). Meanwhile, the group also raises loans for department projects in the mainland. It provided more than five million Hong Kong dollars (641 U.S. dollars) over past four months.

Apart from the Beijing-based Bank of China, the 13 other banks in the group are incorporated either in Hong Kong or the mainland; and with Hong kong and Macao as its base, the group has expanded business overseas. The eight banks in the group that are incorporated in the mainland have recently increased their capital by 50-66 percent.

HU'S EUROPE TOUR CONTRIBUTED TO WORLD PEACE

OW240855 Beijing XINHUA in English 0607 GMT 24 Jun 86

[Text] Turin, Italy, June 23 (XINHUA) -- Hu Yaobang, general secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of China (CPC), today successfully wound up his half-month West European tour intended to promote mutual understanding, friendship, and cooperation and to contribute to world peace.

Public opinion in Western Europe in general described his first official visit to the four countries -- Britain, Federal Germany, France and Italy -- as an "event of historic significance" that will advance the interests of world peace and common progress.

Despite their geographic separation and cultural differences, China and Western Europe have been linked by friendship and cooperation dating back 1,800 years to the days of the ancient "silk road."

Since the People's Republic of China was founded in 1949, particularly over the past few years, frequent exchanges of visits by state and government leades and people from other walks of life have deepened the mutual understanding and friendship between the two sides. On top of this, Hu's tour was warmly welcomed and he and his entourage were accorded grand receptions in all the four countries.

During his talks with leaders of thee countries, Italian Communist Party leaders, opposition party leaders and businessmen, the Chinese party leader found himself having identical or similar views with them on at least two fundamental issues facing the world today -- peace and development.

Europe, being the cradle of the modern industrial revolution, has made tremendous contributions to human civilization and today remains one of the world's most developed regions in economy, culture and science. But on the other hand, Europe has twice been where a world war erupted to bring great calamities to people, and remains a hotbed of worldwide conflict.

These characteristics and experiences have placed Europe in a spoecial position in contemporary international affairs and in relation to the two fundamental world issues that concern man's future and destiny. The European people, who will not allow history to repeat itself, are striving to join hands in facing the current challenges, in the first place in the effort to maintain peace. It was only natural that this aspiration was firmly supported by the Chinese party leader.

During his West European trip, Hu made a series of speeches to expound the domestic and external policies China pursues. The speeches gave both the ruling and opposition parties in these countries a better understanding of China's foreign polices of independence and peace and its home policies aimed at enlivening the national economy. Hu's speeches won high praises from the audiences, who believe that a prosperous and powerful China will be a positive element beneficial to world peace.

General Secretary Hu told his hosts that a China which pursues independent foreign policies and a Europe which demands to grasp its own destiny and strengthen its unity will surely make greater and greater contributions to world peace and stability. What he said here is the very point of departure of China's relationship with West European countries. And it was in this spirit that Hu conducted his tour and made it a success.

In recent years, China and West European countries have made gratifying achievements in their cooperation in political, economic, trade and technological fields. During Hu's visit, both sides expressed satisfaction with the development and pledged to further expand their ties. What is more, both ruling and opposition parties in the four countries are also at one in their desire to further such relations. This is added proof that China's relations with West European countries are broadly and firmly based. Brief as it was, General Secretary Hu's visit will exert a far-reaching influence on the development of Sino-West European relations.

CHINA DAILY COMMENTATOR ON HU'S EUROPEAN TRIP

[By CHINA DAILY commentator: "A Successful Trip"]

[Text] Chinese Communist Party leader Hu Yaobang has wound up his 16-day, four-nation West European trip. Setting foot on British soil, the first stop on his trip, Hu declared that the purpose of his visit was to enhance understanding, strengthen friendship, expand co-operation and promote peace. Now, at the end of the tour, the general secretary can look back with satisfaction on his misson -- his visit to Britain, West Germany, France and Italy have been a complete success. Hu was as warmly received in France and Italy as he was in Britain and West Germany.

Hu's visit afforded him the opportunity to exchange views with the leaders of the host countries on international issues of common concern and to explore ways of furthering friendly and co-operative relations. As a result, mutual understanding was deepened.

His talks confirmed that on world peace - the most vital issue facing humanity -- there is a common language between China and West Europe. The four countries share China's views on maintaining peace and opposing the arms race. Hu reaffirmed that it is China's conviction that a united Europe can play a significant role in preserving world peace. He pledged closer co-operation from China in order to make concerted efforts to protect world peace and avert war.

He also underscored the fact that West Europe is an important partner of China in trade and economic co-operation. As a developing country, China has vast resources but lacks funds and technical know-how, both of which the developed countries of West Europe can well supply. Thus, the ecnomies of China and West Europe can complement each other and co-operate. This will benefit both sides.

The Chinese Communist Party leader explained and stressed that China's open policy will not vary with any future leadership changes. China's relations with West Europe are based on the conviction that co-operation will last a long time. Hu's trip to West Europe showed China's recognition of the importance of West Europe in world affairs and indicated China's desire to strengthen ties with it.

We believe exchanges of visits and views between leaders of countries will undoubtedly enhance mutual understanding, which is beneficial to co-operation among nations, and helps preserve world peace. General Secretary Hu's West Europe tour is good example.

EUROPEAN AMBASSADORS TO PRC ON HU YAOBANG'S TOUR

HK201240 Beijing SHIJIE ZHISHI in Chinese No 11, 1 Jun 86

[Article by reporters Wu Miaofa, Xiao Zexian and You Dianshu: "British, Federal German, French and Italian Ambassadors to China Speak on General Secretary Hu Yaobang's Visits to Four West European Countries"]

[Text] June is the best time of the summer. General Secretary Hu Yaobang will visit four countries -- Britain, Federal Republic of Germany, France and Italy. This will be the first visit to Western Europe by the general secretary of the Chinese Communist Party. It is receiving great attention at home and abroad, and has become a hot topic of conversation. The reporters of this magazine purposely visited the four countries' ambassadors to China and asked them to talk about the significance of General Secretary Hu's visit, and the existing state of, and prospects for, the political, economic, cultural, scientific and technical relations between China and the four countries. The four relevant ambassadors received us warmly and made speeches full of friendly sentiment.

British Ambassador Evans: Another Major Development After the Hong Kong Agreement

Ambassador Evans said: General Secretary Hu Yaobang's current visit to Britain is being made at the invitation of British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and the British Government. This is a matter of major significance in the history of the relations between Britain and China. What I want to stress is that this is a formal and official visit. The British side will accord General Secretary Hu Yaobang a warm welcome and Mrs Thatcher will hold official talks with General Secretary Hu Yaobang.

I think that General Secretary Hu's current visit is another major development in maintaining the friendly relations between Britain and China since the signing of the agreement on the Hong Kong issue. It is also an important visit after the visit to Britain by President Li Xiannian of China last year. I am very pleased to tell you that her majesty will visit China in response to an invitation. ...You see that we are renovating housing in preparation for her majesty's visit. Mutual visits like these have constituted, or will constitute, important events in the relations between our two countries.

I want to say with a little more emphasis that "fine" progress has been scored in relations between China and Britain. It should also be said that such progress is "extremely fine." In the political area, the implementation of the agreement on the Hong Kong issue has been marked with outstanding results. Its progress has been unusually smooth all along.

On the international scene, both Britain and China are nuclear states and are also permanent members of the Security Council. We have widespread and common interests in the world. On a number of major international issues, we share many common views and ideas between us. Development in this field is also quite satisfactory.

In the economic area, our cooperation can also be described as unusually satisfactory. The total volume of trade between the two countries last year was $1 billion based on Britain's statistics. China's statistics put it at $1.5 billion. Despite slight differences in statistics which indicate some imbalances, these small imbalances are nothing to worry about.

In such an important area as science and technology, things have also been unusually satisfactory since the signing of a science and technology agreement between our two countries in 1978. Both sides have carried out many exchanges, including the transfer of technology, the sale of products, and so forth.

In addition, we signed an agreement on cultural exchanges in 1979. We have talks on conditions for the implementation of the agreement every two years. Next month we are to hold talks in London.

At present China has about 1,200 students studying in Britain. The British side also trains many technical personnel and teachers for the Chinese side. I myself attach great importance to cultural exchanges. Progress in this respect is encouraging.

In conclusion, Ambassador Evans said that he hoped to say three things to Chinese readers through this magazine. First, the British Government and people will warmly welcome General Secretary Hu Yaobang's visit. Second, I myself and the embassy personnel have, from work experiences in the past few years, personally felt that myriads of Chinese people cherish a friendly and warm attitude toward us. This helps greatly toward the improvement of relations between the two countries and the understanding between the people of the two countries. Third, we hope that in future we can see more articles of high quality published in your journal. [as published]

French Ambassador Malo: A Special and Also a Normal Visit

Ambassador Malo, who had just returned from a visit to our country's Xizang and northwestern region, granted us an interview.

He said with great warmth: General Secretary Hu Yaobang's visit to France is a special and also a normal visit. It is special, because this is General Secretary Hu's first visit to Western Europe. It is normal, because this is an inevitable result of the development of relations between the two countries. Because of the particularly good relations between our two countries, since 1976 Chinese leaders have without exception first visited France on their trip to Western Europe. Since last year, the development of relations between the two countries has been especially satisfactory. General Secretary Hu's current visit will inevitably push the relations of friendly cooperation between the two countries to a new stage.

A review shows that there have been many exchanges of visits between the leaders of our two countries. For example, Mr. Deng Xiaoping visited France in 1975. President Pompidou visited China in 1973. Also, there were exchanges of visits involving President D'Estaing, President Mitterrand, Premier Zhao Ziyang and other leaders. General Secretary Hu Yaobang once met with some French leaders in Beijing. On his current visit to Paris, he will have a chance to meet them again. He can also get acquainted with many new friends, such as Prime Minister Chirac. Through making contacts, he will deeply understand that the French are willing to develop friendly relations with China. General Secretary Hu can also make clear his own views on China's open-door policy, which is a matter of great concern to the French. Thus, we can better understand the universally acknowledged achievements scored by China in carrying out the open-door policy.

There are no problems existing between China and France. As far as international problems are concerned, the two countries have quite identical views on such issues as in our approach to the two superpowers, independence, self-defense, disarmament, safeguarding world peace, South-East problems, relations between the East and the West, and so forth.

The permanent UN representatives of China and France constantly hold consultations on certain major international issues. The foreign ministers of our two countries have political talks every year, increasing mutual understanding. On economic, technical, scientific, cultural and commercial cooperation, there is a mixed committee, which also holds consultations every year.

In conclusion, Ambassador Malo said something about the SHIJIE ZHISHI magazine. He said warmly: This is an extremely good magazine. It enables Chinese readers to get acquainted with major world events and with conditions about world liberalization. This helps in China's realization of modernization. You have a glorious duty on your shoulders. I sincerely hope that you can make Chinese readers understand the relations between China and Western Europe, especially France. Your magazine has done a lot of work in promoting friendship between France and China. I think that in future it will do a still more perfect job.

In my opinion, Mr. Hu Yaobang's visit to France will arouse very great feelings among people. Many Chinese people have a relatively greater understanding of France's history. Special major historical events are known to almost everyone. Many of China's top-ranking leaders once studied in France. Among them are Premier Zhou Enlai, Foreign Minister Chen Yi, and so forth. Mr Deng Xiaoping with 5 years of study in France understands France still better. May I assume that when strolling through the streets of France, Mr Hu Yaobang would think of France's former history on his walk, with new feelings thus aroused him. I hope that the masses of readers can share such feelings through your esteemed journal.

Ambassador Fischer of the Federal Republic of Germany: There Is Much Scope for the Development of Cooperation

Ambassador Fischer said: We feel very proud that General Secretary Hu is visiting our country for the first time. He will have a chance to hold talks with our political leaders; to meet with representatives in economic, cultural and other fields; to acquire a deep understanding of our country's conditions in various fields; and to relish the sights of our beautiful streams and mountains.

We believe that on his visit the general secretary will see that our country is China's largest economic partner in Western Europe, is her traditional friend, and is a state where there is much scope for the development of cooperation with China.

In the 18 months since Chancellor's Kohl's visit to China, there has been quite large developments in the relations between our two countries. There have been many government exchanges and frequent exchanges of visits between top-ranking officials. It can be said that the two countries have close political ties and share the same views on many problems. We are both in favour of maintaining world peace, reducing conflicts and strengthening good and peaceful relations throughout the world. The above goals pursued by our two countries are not directed against anyone. We make joint efforts in stimulating superpowers' progress along the road to disarmament and urging them to achieve success in the Geneva arms control talks.

Our two countries show concern and willingness in stimulating the development of the impoverished countries in Africa, Southeast Asia and Latin America. In this respect, our country, your esteemed country and Third World countries can enter into tripartite cooperation and can do much.

Economic cooperation is a prod to the further development of the relations between the two countries. Our country is China's third largest trading partner after Japan and the United States. In February 1985, Chen Muhua, your then minister of foreign economic relations and trade, said that it was hoped that by 1990 the total volume of goods exchanged between the two countries could reach 10 billion marks. Last year, the volume of goods exchanged between us exceeded 8 billion marks. We are confident that this goal can be realized ahead of time.

The important thing is that we must help China expand exports and try to achieve a balance between imports and exports and try to achieve a balance between imports and exports by every means. To give the German public a better idea of China's products, China will participate next year as a partner in the largest exhibition in the world to be held in Hanover.

We are helping China in training technical forces. We have established several sites in China for the training of technical personnel in special fields. Next we will set up a training center in Tianjin. In addition, the federal government is offering more and more college scholarships. Some foundations and enterprises are also providing scholarship funds for Chinese students and graduate students. At present, the number of Chinese students studying in our country has reached 2,000. Among West European countries, our country has the largest number of Chinese students studying in it.

Our cultural cooperation also covers cooperation with the Academy of Sciences of your esteemed country. Cooperation not only concerns natural sciences but also involves social sciences. Our country's scientists have also come to China to carry out academic studies and exchanges and have achieved marked results. These exchanges have greatly promoted understanding between the people of the two countries. In this respect, we can say that there are boundless prospects, as a Chinese saying goes.

The development of mutual understanding and relations between our two countries helps strengthen the relations between Europe and China. The closer the two centers -- Europe and China -- get the greater the positive influence on world peace and stability.

Italian Ambassador Marras: The Rate of Growth Jumps to First Place in Economic Exchange With China

Ambassador Marras said: I firmly believe that General Secretary Hu Yaobang's current visit will definitely strengthen the extremely fine relations that have existed between Italy and China in various fields.

Italian President Pertini's visit to Beijing in September 1980 is the most significant and eloquent proof of Italy's interest in developing relations with China. We should also mention many other official visits between government officials and high-ranking figures of the two countries. For example, there was the visit by Premier Zhao Ziyang in June 1984, the visit by Italian Senator and incumbent President Cossiga, the visit to be made by General Secretary Hu Yaobang, and the increasing number of mutual visits between economic, cultural, scientific and technical delegations.

There is no difference of opinion between Italy and China in the political field. Especially on such issues as peace, relief of the tense situation, and security, our two countries have widely unanimous viewpoints.

On the economic relations front, people cannot help taking note of one outstanding fact. It is that the growth of Italy's economic exchanges with China ranked first in the former's developing exchanges with all its main economic partners in 1985. Economic exchanges between the two countries had reached $1.1 billion, an increase of 47.2 percent over the preceding year.

Beginning with the first agreement signed between the two countries in 1978, cultural, scientific and technical cooperation has become increasingly frequent. A comprehensive plan for exchanges has been introduced between important scientific research organs on both sides including visiting, joint participation in symposiums, and exchange of scholarships. As far as cultural exchanges are concerned, it should be said that the two countries have organized many exchange items with regard to drama, works of art, publications, films and music. These exchange items have, without exception, been hailed most warmly by people and have been marked with the greatest success.

China represents a most fundamental stabilizing factor in the global balance and can make cherished and valuable contributions toward wisdom and modernization for the benefit of mankind in the process of relieving the tense world situation. On the domestic front, China's leadership has adopted a great realistic and pragmatic policy in realizing the "four modernizations." Given full respect for mutual interests as a prerequisite, we are willing to make a proper contribution to China's economic and technical development.

The ambassador told the reporters with emphasis: During General Secretary Hu's visit to Rome and Venice, the local residents will express Italian feelings and affection for the Chinese through a rousing welcome. We are pleased to note that Venice has paired off with Suzhou, Florence with Nanjing, and Shanghai with Milan as sister cities. Lombardia has also established friendly relations with Tianjin. Mr. Hu Yaobang will fly to Venice and then take a special tour in a Venice pleasure boat, full of national characteristics. We firmly believe that this visit will be unusually successful.

ZHOU NAN DISCUSSES FUTURE OF MACAO

PM201446 Lisbon EXPRESSO in Portuguese 9 Jun 86 pp 1,24

[Joaquim Vieira report: "Chinese Vice Minister Tells EXPRESSO: 'China Will Not Alter Macao's Laws Or Way of Life'"]

[Excerpt] Chinese Vice Minister of Foreign Affairs Zhou Nan, who is to head the Chinese delegation at the talks with Portugal on the future of Macao, said in an interview with EXPRESSO that the territory's social and eocnomic system "will remain intact following its transfer to Chinese sovereignty, just as the laws and way of life in the enclave will remain basically unaltered."

The first round of talks is scheduled for the last week of this month in Beijing, and Zhou Nan revealed that the meeting will take place at the Diaoyutai State guesthouse, where the 1984 Sino-British talks on Hong Kong also took place and at which the Chinese delegation will be headed by the vice minister. "The two governments," he said, "will shortly be issuing a communique on the exact date of the start of the negotiations."

Zhou Nan said that Ramalho Eanes' visit to Beijing in May last year "contributed greatly to progress with regard to the Macao issue." At that time the two countries' leaders considered the time ripe for a solution of the problem.

According to the vice minister, a further step was taken with his visit to Portugal in March to attend Mario Soares' inauguration as president. "I had the chance to talk with the president, with Prime Minister Cavaco Silva, and with Foreign Minister Pires Miranda about the solution of the Macao issue," he said. "The talks were very cordial and harmonious, so I have the impression that the Portuguese leaders with whom I met are pledged to pursuing the guidelines and decisions of the previous president and prime minister on this matter. I exchanged opinions on a date for the start of the negotiations and the agenda, and we proved to share the same viewpoint."

Zhou Nan stressed that "China will resolve the Macao question in accordance with the idea of 'one country, two systems,' In other words, it will adopt the Hong Kong model in resolving the Macao question." He explained: "This means that while the socialist system will remain in Mainland China central government will maintain the capitalist system in Hong Kong and Macao once it regains sovereignty."

The vice minister refused, however, to discuss the territory's historical specifics (a factor cited by some Portuguese leaders as a factor to be taken into account in the negotiations), explaining that "the historical phase that caused the Macao question to arise relates to the Chinese people's national feeling: I prefer to adopt a forward-looking stance." He stressed, nevertheless, that in the negotiation process the Chinese Government will "consider Macao's specific characteristics, its similarities and differences with respect to Hong Kong, and also its status quo."

Zhou Nan, who is 59 and whose diplomatic career dates back to the 1949 Chinese revolution, declared himself "very optimistic about the future of negotiations," for three reasons: "The excellent ties of cooperation and friendship between the two countries since the restoration of diplomatic relations; the existence of a mutual agreement in principle on Macao's sovereignty; and previous experience acquired during the Sino-British talks on Hong Kong."

The Beijing government representative averred that "in the negotiations China will not underrate Portugal because it is smaller than Britain. We have always maintained that in international affairs all countries, great or small, are equal." He added that "relations between the two sides' negotiators are those of partners, not adversaries."

Zhou Nan declined to go into detail about the date for the transfer of Macao to China, the duration of the transitional period, the maintenance of the Portuguese cultural presence in the territory, or the survival of the gambling system, explaining that these were matters for discussion at the negotiating table.

With regard to the statement which EXPRESSO discovered was made to Ramalho Eanes in Beijing last year by the Chinese prime minister, who "considered it desirable for Macao's transfer to occur at the same time as the scheduled date for the recovery of sovereignty over Hong Kong" (1997), Zhou stated his "impression that the prime minister told the president that, broadly speaking, integration could occur simultaneously with that of Hong Kong."

ECONOMIC TIES WITH EUROPEAN COMMUNITY REVIEWED

["Round-up: EC-China Relations Develop Steadily — (by Zhuge Canglin]" — XINHUA headline]

[Text] Brussels, June 24 (XINHUA) — At the beginning of July, Jacques Delors, president of the Commission of the European Communities (EC), will visit China to promote trade, economic and technological trade cooperation between the EC and China. It will be Delors first visit to China and the third one by an EC Commission's President. Ray Jenkins and Gaston Thorn, formerly EC Commission chiefs, toured China in 1979 and 1983.

China-EC relations have developed smoothly since China established diplomatic relations with the European Economic Community in 1975. China believes strong relations with the EC are important and regards West Europe as a vital force to maintain world peace and stability. China also believes a united and strong Europe will contribute to safeguarding world peace and to developing an improved world economy. And, the EC sees China as an important force to maintain world peace and deter war.

In 1983, China completed establishing economic relations with all three groups of the EC -- the European Economic Community, the European Coal and Steel Community, and European Atomic Community. Later, it set up a periodical political consultation system with the organization. This was followed by Chinese Premier Zhao Zhiyang's 1984 visit to EC headquarters in Brussels.

The EC has become China's third largest trading partner, behind Japan and Hong Kong. Last year, the value of EC-China trade reached 8 billion U.S. dollars, a jump of 5.6 billion from 1975. Imports from the EC constitutes 11.9 percent of China's total import, higher than what it gets from the United States. China signed 60 import contracts, worth 120 million U.S. dollars, with more than 200 companies from EC members during China-EC trade week in Brussels in late 1985. MOre than 50 letters of intent for investment also were signed.

Since 1981, about 60 scientific and technological projects between the EC and China have been signed, ranging from sensor technology to the prevantion of tropical diseases. The biggest project has been to develop new forms of energy at Da Chen Island, Zhejiang Province. China and the EC are studying the uses of wind energy, tidal energy and solar energy and how they can be applied to generate power for the island.

China also has strengthened relations on a individual basis with each of the 12 EC members and set up dozens of joint ventures. Although China and the EC say they are satisfied with the development of their relations, both believe there is room for growth in trade, economic and technological fields. China hopes West Europe will view cooperation with China on a long term and take positive measures, such as increasing imports and investments, to develop their ties on a steady course.

SFRY'S DIZDAREVIC ON COMING ZHAO ZIYANG VISIT

["Yugoslav Foreign Minister on Upcoming Visit by Zhao Ziyang (by correspondent Yang Dazhou)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Belgrade, June 19 (XINHUA) -- Yugoslav Foreign Minister Raif Dizdarevic today said that during the upcoming visit by Chinese Premier Zhao Ziyang, the two countries' leaders will focus on economic ties. At the first press conference given by a Yugoslav foreign minister in two years, Dizdarevic said that in addition to discussing international issues, Yugoslav and Chinese leaders will try to find ways to expand cooperation in various fields, though they are not expected to sign any major agreements or documents. The Chinese premier is scheduled to visit Yugoslavia early next month.

Dizdarevic said that since the U.S.-Soviet Geneva summit last year, the international situation has deteriorated rather than improved with both superpowers still firmly engaged in the arms race. He said that the failure of both Moscow and Washington to reach an arms control agreement will eventually lead to a new round of runaway military competition.

Explaining Yugoslavia's position on the election of former United Nations Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim as Austrian president, Dizdarevic said Waldheim was elected by the people, and that it is in Yugoslavia's best interest to develop good relations with Austria.

Dizdarevic said relations with Albania have not improved, despite the efforts made by Belgrade. He accused Albania of continuing to spread propganda and advocating stands that make it impossible to better relations.

LEAGUE OF COMMUNISTS OF YUGOSLAVIA BEGINS CONGRESS

Zarkovic Lists Tasks

OW200815 Beijing XINHUA in English 0638 GMT 20 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, June 19 (XINHUA) -- Only a unified, strong Yugoslavia can overcome economic difficulties, Yugoslav leader Vidoje Zarkovic told Yugoslav radio-television today. Speaking of the tasks of the 13th League of Communists of Yugoslavia Congress which opens in Belgrade on June 25, Zarkovic, who is LCY's Central Committee president, said his committee will focus on developing socialist self-management, enhancing the unity of the Yugoslav community and the League of Communists, combating extensive economic activity, and overcoming "polycentric statism". He noted that as an organization of the working class, the League of Communists must strengthen its own unity on the principles of democratic centralism. The LCY's weakest point is its lack of cohesiveness in implementing policies, Zarkovic said. He warned that "polycentric statism" had grown stronger in recent years in socio-political communities of all levels. And he said "polycentric statism" clashes with the principles of self-management, thus threatening the unity of the country and of the LCY.

Zarkovic concluded by saying that the period between the 13th and 14th LCY Congresses could be one in which Yugoslavia leaves its economic crisis by realizing dynamic development under stable conditions.

In the international arena, Zarkovic said, Yugoslavia has contributed greatly to the struggle for peace and equality in international relations and has become one of the factors of stability in the world. Zarkovic said, "We belong to the innermost circle that originated the idea and policy of non-alignment, to whose assertion and development we have made a lasting and generally recognized contribution."

Analysis Views Party Congress

OW220028 Beijing XINHUA in English 0006 GMT 22 Jun 86

["News Analysis: New Challenges Face Yugoslav Party Congress" (by Li Daijun) -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Belgrade, June 21 (XINHUA) -- The upcoming 13th National Congress of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia (LCY), scheduled on June 25, is expected to strengthen the socialist self-management system and to examine ways to overcome the country's economic difficulties.

Since the last LCY Congress four years ago, the changed international situation poses new challenges to the country as Western capitalist countries tighten their control of the world market. The rapid development of new technology in the world makes it urgent for Yugoslavia to develop its economy and science on its own.

In recent years, many socialist countries have undertaken economic reforms. Yugoslavia, which pioneered the road to socialist self-management as early as the 1950s, is now challenged by the task of further implementation of the reforms.

Yugoslavia achieved great success during the 1960s and the 1970s. Its economic growth rate was among the highest in Europe in the 1970s, and the people's living standard improved greatly. However, with the decentralization of the federal power to individual republics, a unified market has broken down and regionalism has grown stronger. The federal government's control of the national economy has also weakened.

In addition, shortcomings in economic planning, such as over-investment and a consumer growth that outpaced production, added to the difficulties. Therefore, Yugoslavia underwent an economic stagnation in the 1980's. The inflation rate has topped 80 percent, the number of unemployed has risen to 1.1 million and the foreign debt exceeds 20 billion U.S. dollars. Overcoming the current economic difficulties is the nation's most urgent task.

Recently, during a nation-wide debate on the country's economy and political system, which lasted over a year, and during a series of preparatory LCY congresses at the republic level, there have been calls for sticking to and further development of the socialist self-management system and for reforms which should contribute to national unity and the overall interest of the country.

The 13th League Congress is likely to focus its deliberations on domestic issues, especially economic difficulties. But, will the reforms be drastic, or will they mean merely to modify the existing institutions? Signs are that the reforms will not be dramatic and that the 13th League Congress will probably chart a guideline of centralization based on socialist autonomy. It is expected to stress the importance of unity and integrity of the nation, strengthen the role of the federal government and oppose regionalism. The congress may also stress the role of the league as the vanguard of political change in the country.

At this congress, a new generation of intelligent and competent young people will assume leadership. The Yugoslavs stake a lot on this congress which, they hope, will mark a turning point in the national economy.

NEWS ANALYSIS VIEWS ARGENTINE 'AUSTRAL PLAN'

OW150104 Beijing XINHUA in English 0043 GMT 15 Jun 86

["News Analysis: A Year of the Austral Plan in Argentina" (by Ke Daan) -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Buenos Aires, June 14 (XINHUA) -- Argentina's year-long program of imposing severe economic austerity has achieved some notable success but also has been met with criticism at home.

On the one hand, the plan, called the austral plan after Argentina's new currency, has reduced the country's inflation dramatically -- from 1,705 percent to 30 percent and has been lauded by some economists as an acceptable experiment for developing countries. But while curbing inflation, the plan has not fueled the economy in the way government sources had predicted. Yesterday's 24-hour general strike, the latest in four such protests called by the General Labor Confederation (CGT), disrupted business activity across the country.

The problem is that the drop in inflation has not translated into any significant increase in capital investment.

Economy Secretary Adolfo Canitrot himself has said that the business sector has shown "a generalized lack of confidence" and that the extreme caution shown by industry has resulted in the government's "unfavorable position." However, a majority of Argentines consider the austerity plan has played a positive role in the economic readjustment of the country. The plan's successes include: a spectacular drop in the inflation rate, a reduction in the budget deficit, an increase in tax collection, a curbing of the economic recession, and the renewal of confidence by international financial organizations.

The budget deficit dropped from 15 percent of the gross domestic product in the 1981-1983 period to 4.1 percent in 1985. Tax revenues in the first four months of this year increased by 46.7 percent in real terms over the same period last year. Nearly all economic sectors, with the marked exception of agriculture and construction, have recovered in varying degrees. In the last quarter of 1985, industrial production increased by 13 percent in comparison with the previous quarter, and, in the first quarter of this year an increase of 5.6 percent was recorded.

But despite these accomplishments, the government under President Raul Alfonsin has been sharply criticized for implementing the austral plan, especially by labor. Not only have general strikes been organized but CGT representatives have refused to cooperate in important wage and price control talks.

Some observers here say that to convince its critics that the plan is working, the government must take immediate measures to increase exports. A 30 percent drop in the price of cereals on the international market, the unprecedented subsidies for agricultural products in developed countries and the poor Argentine harvest this season caused by adverse climatic conditions could mean a drop in export revenue of about one billion U.S. dollars this year. And to get its economic going, Argentina must import more which will undoubtedly cause a significant decrease in its trade surplus. Indeed this surplus has already been reduced by 37 percent during the first quarter of this year.

The government also wants to increase investment and speed up the privatization process. Capital investment in production five years ago made up 20 percent of the GDP and now only 11 percent. The austerity measures have not brought an increase in investment because such a great portion of the country's resources has been earmarked for foreign debt payments.

Other immediate tasks facing the government include the proper management of price policies and further controlling inflation. During the March-May period of this year, the average monthly inflation rate was four percent, a little higher than in previous months. According to experts, this slight price increase reflects the government's intention to change its policy of price freezes to that of controlled, slightly flexible prices.

But the most difficult and imminent task facing the government will be to improve its relations with the country's employers and trade unions. The entrepreneurs are not happy with the price freezes and tax increases which have been imposed, and the CGT, the most important labor organization in the country, denounces the austral plan as an instrument of international profiteering groups. The CGT insists that the austerity measures sacrifice the interests of the people.

The austral plan has now entered its second phase. The Argentines who have lived for more than 10 years with recession are following the economic situation with great attention. Argentine newspapers frequently publish long articles analyzing the country's economic evolution. Comments and discussions about the austral plan can be heard everywhere. Argentines cherish strong hopes for the future of their country's economy. While the austral plan has so far achieved some success, healthy economic development remains a great and difficult challenge.

NPC STANDING COMMITTEE HOLDS JOINT GROUP SESSION

Peng Zhen Speaks

OW250547 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1252 GMT 24 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, 24 Jun (XINHUA) -- Deputies attending the 16th meeting of the 6th NPC Standing Committee had a spirited discussion on the revised drafts of the land law and the regulations governing punishment for public security offenses at today's joint group session.

Chairman Peng Zhen spoke at the joint session.

Song Rufen, vice chairman of the NPC Law Committees, explained the changes to the draft land law. Shen Hong, vice chairman of the Law Committee, explained the changes to the draft regulations government punishment for public security offenses. Wu Bo, vice chairman of the NPC Financial and Economic Committee, gave a report on the committee's examination of the 1985 final state accounts. He told the session that the Financial and economic committee approved the 1985 final state accounts. Members of the NPC Standing Committee discussed the two revised drafts.

Wu Bo also reported on the handling of a motion raised by 57 Standing Committee members during the 14th meeting of the NPC Standing Committee last January. He said: The State council and Premier Zhao took the motion seriously and decided last March to increase investment in education by 650 million yuan. At the proposal of the state Planning commission and the Ministry of Finance, the state council recently decided to allocate another 650 million yuan as a special central fund for local governments to support normal school and compulsory education during the seventh 5-Year Plan. The additional fund for education now stands at 13 billion yuan. The increased funds will be used in improving normal education, training primary and middle school teachers, and building educational facilities. A portion of the fund may also be used to repair dangerous school buildings in poorer areas.

Wu Bo said: To speed up the renovation of dangerous school buildings and safeguard teachers and students' safety, the General Offices of the CPC Central Committee and State Council, acting on Premier Zhao's sugggestion, have issued a circular asking various localities to conduct a comprehensive survey of the dangerous school buildings in their areas and to adopt effective measures to repair and renovate them. The goal is to resolve its problem in 2 or 3 years.

Chairman Peng Zhen focused his talk on education. He said: Deputies and standing committee members of the Sixth NPC have made more proposals on education than on other subjects. They have made proposals in two areas -- legislation and budget. Since the 57 members of the Standing Committee presented their motion on increasing educaional budget, the NPC Fiancial and Economic Committee and the Education, Science Culture, and Public Health committees have done a lot of work. The State Council and Premier Zhao Ziyang took the matter seriusly. The result was the increase of the educational budget by 1.3 billion yuan.

Peng Zhen said: We should promote development and the building of a legal system simultaneously. Production and education are very important in building the socialist material and spiritual civilization.

Production, however, comes first. If production fails, there will be nothing left for others. On the other hand, if education fails, the socialist material and spiritual civilization will suffer.

Peng Zhen said: We must try our best to resolve the issue of educational budget. How to resolve this issue? The State Council has done its best under the present budgetary restraints to come up with such a sum of money for education. Education involves two issues -- One is to raise the education standards, the other is to make education universal. The national budget aims mainly to resolve the question of education standards, including improving normal education and subsidizing backward and poor areas. Making education universal relies mainly on the localities. It is necessary to fully rely on local human, material, and financial resources. Some provinces, cities, and counties which give priority to education have done their part.

Peng Zhen said: The question of dangerous school buildings must be resolved. The PCC Central committee and the State Council have issued circulars on this question. Local governments should set a deadline to resolve the question. We must not let our children study in dangerous buildings. Peng Zhen cotiued: The city differs from the country in resolving the question of dangerous school buildings. The city relies mainly on financial appropriations while the country relies on the efforts of the masses. the masses are enthusiastic about promoting education. The question lies in the party committee, the People's Congress, and the government, which must attach due importance to education. Peng Zhen said: In short, the whole nation should work to promote education and resolve the problems. If we do so, there are bound to be results.

The joint group session was presided over by Vice Chairman Peng Chong. Lin Yishan, Wu Juefu, Mo Wenhua, Giu Weifan, Lei Jieqiong, Ma Wanqi, Lin Liyun, Pei Changhui, Xu Dixin, Lin Yueqin, Yang Liong, Xue Yan, and Hong Peilin spoke at the session.

On nomination of Premier Zhao Ziyang, the appointment was made at the 16th meeting of the Sixth National People's Congress Standing Committee which closed here this afternoon.

A prolific writer who suffered frustrations, Wang joined the Chinese Communist Party at the age of 14. He was wrongly labelled a "rightist" in 1957 a year after publication of his book "The New Young Man of the Organiztion Department". It was an attack on bureaucracy in party work and is now regarded as one of the finest short stories since new China was founded in 1949.

Since the wrong was redressed and his literary career resumed in 1979, he has published short stories and essays totalling more than 2.5 million words. These include "The Most Precious", "Devoted Heart" and "Sound of Spring" which were voted the country's best writings in a 1977-1979 natiowide poll.

Wang is now also vice-chairman of the Chinese Writers association and editor-in-chief of PEOPLE'S LITERATURE.

Nuclear Power Policy Examined

OW241445 Beijing XINHUA in English 1402 GMT 24 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 24 (XINHUA) -- China should develop nuclear power step by step in the light of world energy trends and China's own circumstances, while actively developing coal and hydroelectric power.

Members of the National People's Congress (NPC) Standing Committee made these remarks when examaining China's nuclear power policy at the ongoing 16th Session of the NPC Standing Committee.

Xu Dixin said that the development of nuclear power, a supplement to coal power, can help save coal and keep the ecological balance, and benefit the economy greatly if safety is guaranteed.

Deputy Li Gui said that it is quite difficult for China to tackle the energy shortage only by developing coal and hydroelectric power, although China is rich in coal and water reserves.

Li suggested priority to be given to southeast China, which has relatively well-developed industry, in developing nuclear power to ease the power shortage there and lay a foundation for future development.

Deputy Xiong Fu said safety and quality should be stressed in developing nuclear power. To ensure nothing goes wrong, Xiong added, great efforts should be made to introduce up-to-date technology and strict management, and hire competent staff.

Deputy Yan Yiquan described the development of nuclear power as a key strategy in China's modernization program. Efforts should be made to educate the public to dismiss their fears about nuclear power development. Deputy Mamtov Kurban said that the nuclear power industry is a developing one and its growth can help update China's science and technology.

Bankruptcy Law Urged

OW241028 Beijing XINHUA in English 0933 GMT 24 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 24 (XINHUA) -- Members of the National People's Congress Standing Committee said today an enterprise bankruptcy law would make an important contribution to China's economic reform.

At a meeting of the leading group of China's parliament, members said a bankruptcy law which made economic failure a real possibility would lead to improved management of state-owned enterprises. Most also argued that while the law is urgently needed, it should not be hastily prepared.

Xue Yan, vice-chairman of the Guangdong Province People's Congress Standing Committee, said he wanted a law passed "as early as possible" to assist the province in dealing with its growing number of enterprises with foreign participation.

Economic Xu Dixin said that the proposed law would protect state property from continuing mismanagement and eliminate the phenomenon of "eating from the same pot" -- a Chinese expression for sharing economic benefits despite substandard performance.

Wu Zhichuan, vice-chairman of the Zhejiang Province People's Congress Standing Committee, argued that despite the need for the law, "the time is not ripe to issue it." Wu called for a trial regulation until enterprises are given a freer hand in their own management. "The way it is now, an enterprise could fail for many reasons having nothing to do with bad management, such as government price controls and tax policies," he said. Standing Committee members also suggested that to work well a bankruptcy law should be accompanied by other needed legislation, such as an industrial enterprise law, a joint-venture enterprise law, a state-owned enterprise law, a collectively-owned enterprise law, a labor service law and a social insurance law.

JINGJI CANKAO on Bankruptcy Law

HK250403 Beijing JINGJI CANKAO in Chinese 21 Jun 86 p 6

"Discussion and Deliberation" column by Sun Yunling: "Establish the Enterprise Bankruptcy System, Improve the Enterprise Behavior Mechanism" -- capitalised passage published in boldface]

[Text] The so-called bankruptcy system contains two basic meanings: first, enterprises go bankrupt in order to pay their debts; second, they go bankrupt through a shake-out. In the first sense, the bankruptcy system is one under which a commodity dealer being unable to repay its outstanding debts, handles its debt dispute by going bankrupt. In this way, the legitimate rights and interests of creditors and debtors are ensured and normal social and economic order is preserved. In the second sense, the bankruptcy system is a method of handling the results of competition among commodity producers. It is a legal guarantee for realizing the principle of selecting the superior and eliminating the inferior. Without a bankruptcy system, the principles of assuming responsibility for one's own profits or losses and of selecting the superior and eliminating the inferior will always be empty talk and will not be implemented.

If the state no longer acts an an enterprise protector, the enterprises will genuinely have to be responsible for their own decisions, assuming responsibility for both losses and profits and prudently carrying out their investment activities in line with the needs of production. The fact that a handful of enterprises go bankrupt is sufficient to develop a strong psychological pressure, which forces other enterprises to automatically control their investment and consumption demands and to rationalize their behavior.

ONLY BY SETTING UP AN ENTERPRISE BANKRUPTCY SYSTEM CAN WE COMBINE POWER WITH RESPONSIBILITY AND PERFECT THE ENTERPRISE BEHAVIOR MECHANISM

Extending the decion-making power of enterprises is an important step taken in our economic reform. However, the reform practice over the years has proved that extending the decision-making power of enterprises alone cannot ensure the rationalization of enterprise behavior. This is because, despite its various contradictions and defects, the traditional economic structure is nevertheless a unified entity, having its own unique operational logic, trends, and laws. Within this entity, whichever aspect we change, even its most important aspect, will be able to completely eliminate the defects of the old system. On the contrary, it will result in a lack of coordination between the part and the whole, very probably making the economic operations even worse. The issue here lies in the fact that, while restrictions on enterprises are lifted, they are still being protected, and that, while power is delegated to enterprises, they do not have to undertake any risk. As a result, certain enterprises abuse their power and deviate from the target of our reform. The excessive increase in consumption funds and the excessive scale of investment in fixed assets during the period of reform are more or less related to this issue. The institution of the bankruptcy system is an indispensable supporting condition for extending the decision-making power and is an integrated form of combining power with authority.

ONLY BY COMBINING INTEREST AND RISK CAN WE INCREASE THE CAPABILITY OF ENTERPRISES TO CONTROL THEMSELVES

The key problem affecting the behavior of socialist enterprises lies in the establishment of a self-control mechanism in the enterprises so that, while deriving benefits, the enterprises should also undertake some necessary operational risks. If the bankruptcy system is instituted, the workers and staff members will not be indifferent to the future of the enterprises particularly if their profit bonus is zero. This is because the workers and staff members have linked their future with that of the enterprises.

In my view, benefits and risks are the source of enterprise motivation and the necessary conditions for invigorating enterprises. As far as commodity producers are concerned, it is a complete system of motivation. If there are only benefits but no risks, the enterprises will probably seek the maximum immediate interests at the expense of their future interests. They will certainly be eager for quick success and instant benefits and become shortsighted. Therefore, the enterprises behavior mechanism can be perfected only by giving full play to the role of benefits and risks. The establishment of the bankruptcy system is also an indispensable supporting condition for perfecting the system of motivation of enterprises. It is also a necessary form for combining benefits and risks.

ONLY BY COMBINING EXTERNAL WITH INTERNAL CONDITIONS CAN WE ENSURE RATIONALIZATION OF ENTERPRISE BEHAVIOR

Both the economic means adopted to exercise macrocontrol and the economic levers applied to readjust economic operations are the external factors for rationalizing enterprise behavior, while the establishment of a bankruptcy system is the internal factor that conditions enterprise behavior and increases the capability of enterprises to control themselves. Controlling and readjusting the external conditions are undoubtedly very important to ensuring the smooth operation of the economy as a whole and coordinating the proportional relationships. However, the external conditions are insufficient in themselves. Only by combining external with internal conditions can we attain the expect results. Take the control of consumption demand as an example. Given the restriction of a soft budget, the workers and staff members of enterprises demand higher and pay and the leaders of enterprises also have a desire to increase their income. The common demand or desire will inevitably make the enterprises vie with each other in issuing unwarranted allowances in cash or kind regardless of their practical conditions in operation. In order to solve this problem, in addition to tightening macrocontrol over the total amount of consumptions funds, the state should also make readjustments by applying such economic levers as collecting the bonus tax. It should be noted, however, that relying on control and readjustment by external conditions alone will not be able to fundamentally solve the problem of a strong consumption inclination. Only by establishing the bankruptcy system is it possible for enterprises to proceed from their own overall interests and to conscientiously restrict their consumption demands, thus gradually rationalizing the consumption inclination. In the course of investigation, we discovered that 81 percent of the people held that, following the establishment of a bankruptcy system, the enterprises will conscientiously reduce their consumptive expenditures and increase their investments in technological transformation and equipment.

Controlling the investment demand of enterprises can also be carried out in the same way.

The establishment of a bankruptcy system is not only the objective demand of a transformation from a highly centralized product economy to a planned commodity economy but also the inevitable trend of the deepgoing development of the reform of the economic structure. It is bound to bring profound changes in China's economic life.

FORUM SPEECHES MARK 'DOUBLE HUNDRED' ANNIVERSARY

He Kuang on Freedom

HK241041 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 20 Jun 86 p 5

[Excerpts" of speech by He Kuang at forum to mark the 30th anniversary of the double hundred policy, jointly sponsored by the Economics Institute of the Chinese Academy of the Social Sciences and the JINGJI YANJIU Editorial Department on 31 May: "Freedom of Creation, Freedom in Academic Work and the Double Hundred Policy"]

[Text] The policy of letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend, which was put forth by our party as a basic principle guiding the work in the domain of literature and art as well as science, is actually a great creation. The policy enjoyed immense popular support when it was put forth, but good times did not last long. As a matter of fact, the policy was abolished for a long time and existed more in name than in reality. Today when we observe the 30th anniversary of the policy, we must earnestly draw the historical lesson as a warning.

In drawing the historical lesson, the article by Comrade Yu Guangyuan, which was published in RENMIN RIBAO on 16 May, cited four reasons contributing to the abolition of the double hundred policy. In my opinion, his analysis is clear-sighted. Now let me briefly discuss how to understand freedom of creation and freedom in academic work.

Making a comprehensive survey of the cultural development of mankind in modern or ancient times, in China or elsewhere, we may clearly see that advocating freedom of creation and freedom in academic work is the only way to promote progress in the arts and sciences.

Through the ages, an artist or a scientist (including the natural and social sciences) has not been able to develop his creativeness and make contributions to society unless he has asserted freedom in creation and academic work in practice and ideologically. Otherwise, his creative potential would tend to dry up and his natural talents would accomplish nothing. If a nation, a country, and an era has a good social environment for freedom in creation and academic work, many talented artists and scientists will shine forth in the arena of art and science. Otherwise, many gifted people will be stifled, and those who could gain emminence under favorable conditions are as scarce as the morning stars (the dark middle ages in Europe can be regarded as a typical example in this aspect).

Now that freedom of creation and freedom in academic work are so closely bound up with the cultural development of mankind, then what on earth is freedom of creation and freedom in academic work?

In my opinion, at present, people do not have a correct understanding of freedom of creation and freedom in academic work in two aspects.

One is that some people understand that freedom will cause people to go off into wild flights of fancy, to shoot off their mouths, and to do as they please. If freedom is so comprehended, then advocating freedom in creation and academic work will be desperately serious, the ideology of the whole society will be in chaos, there will be no political stability and unity, and the people will not be able to work for socialist modernization with one heart and one soul. People who have such an understanding of freedom are actually panic-striken by freedom and turn pale at the mere mention of freedom.

The other is that some people understand that those who do not have Marxist world outlook, do not have a good grasp of Marxism, and do not know to observe and analyze problems with the Marxist stand, viewpoint and method have no right to talk about freedom of creation and freedom in academic work. People who have such an understanding of freedom equate the concept of freedom in philosophy with the concept of freedom in literary creation and academic work. At the same time they hold that one cannot probe into objective law before one understands it. They sing loudly about freedom but they actually see freedom as unattainable.

These two understandings are in essence negating the necessity for creation and academic freedom from two different extremes, paying lip service to acknowledging it, but actually eliminating creation and academic freedom.

To my mind, the so-called creation and academic freedom is actually acting independently and keeping the initiative in the observation, thinking, exploration and creation of an artist or scientist. He shows respect for the knowledge already in existence, and regards the knowledge he has acquired as the starting point for further explorations, but not as an unsurpassable peak. He shows respect to and learns from the authorities in art and the academic field, but does not worship them blindly, nor throw himself on his knees before them, not daring to surpass them. He is in pursuit of the true, the good and the beautiful, and in search of truth, but he will never succumb to external pressure (whether it is from religious authority, monarchical, or whatever power), and he will stand the test of temptation of whatever power and interests. He is not to be subdued by force; wealth and rank will not turn him down, and straigtened and humble circumstances cannot move his faith.

The correctness of the double hundred policy lies precisely in the fact that it is based on such freedom in creation and academic work, and that it has created the best social environment for such freedom. We may say that without such a social environment for creation and academic freedom, the double hundred policy will be, in essence, abolished.

In order to adhere to the double hundred policy, it is imperative to resolutely advocate, encourage and safeguard creation and academic freedom.

He Jianzhang on Social Sciences

HK241300 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 20 Jun 86 p 5

["Excerpts" of speech by He Jianzhang at forum to mark the 30th anniversary of the double hundred policy, jointly sponsored by the Economic Institute of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences and the JINGJI YANJIU Editorial Department on 31 May: "Adhere to the Double Hundred Policy, Develop Social Sciences"]

[Text] The double hundred policy, presented in 1956, was actually implemented after the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. Now it seems that the implementation of this policy has encountered numerous obstacles. The reasons for such a situation can be summed up as follows:

1. Marxism was regarded as a solidified and closed system. The terms never mentioned in the books were not to be quoted, otherwise, it would be heterodoxy. The research results and methods of bourgeois scholars were all declining reactionary stuff which should be totally negated and not used as reference; to do so would be tantamount to bourgeois liberalization. Lenin's idea of critically assimilating the theoretical achievements of predecessors, including bourgeois scholars, was even regarded as suitable to the freely competitive capitalist era and not to the stage of monopoly capitalism or socialism.

2. Patriarchal behavior and monopoly of theoretical forums: Some comrades realized that Marxist theory is revolutionary and critical and that it should be further developed. Nevertheless, they confined the task of developing Marxism to leaders and a few theoretical authoritarians. Regarding the broad ranks of theoretical workers and the masses, their tasks were to comprehend and explain the speeches of the leaders and authoritative persons.

3. Distrust of intellectuals: Although the CPC Central Committee declared long ago that intellectuals are a component part of China's working class, the spirit of "bourgeois intellectuals" still created mischief in the minds of some people. If the speeches of intellectuals differed from theirs or went beyond the limits they set, they would become extremely nervous, regard it as "a new tendency of class struggle," and launch mass criticisms.

In order to genuinely implement the double hundred policy, it is necessary to create a fine social environment. We should look upon Marxism as a revolutinary, critical, and open scientific system. According to the principle "practice is the sole criterion of truth," we should have the courage to break with certain outdated conclusions and assimilate the outstanding cultural achievements of human society, including the scientific views and methods of bourgeois scholars. We must uphold the principle of equality before truth and oppose the practices of intimidating people with power and influence. We must trust the broad ranks of intellectuals. Instead of hastily drawing conclusions and interferring by administrative means, the differing academic views should be repeatedly examined in practice. Naturally, academic criticism is necessary and should be proposed, but we should also allow countercriticism and let scholars have reservations.

Zhao Renwei on Study Styles

["Excerpts" of a speech by Zhao Renwei at the forum to mark the 30th anniversary of the double hundred policy, jointly sponsored by the Economics Institute of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences and the JINGJI YANJIU Editorial Department on 31 May: "Correct the Style of Study, Initiate Contention"]

[Text] Over the past 3 decades, the double hundred policy has traversed a zigzag path in its implementation. Today, we should sum up our past experiences and lessons and create a favorable condition for the implementation of the double hundred policy. Here, I would like to air my personal views from the angle of correcting the style of study and improving academic administration.

First, it is necessary to create a harmonious atmosphere and environment for academic discussions. When holding academic discussions, all of us should obey the truth and uphold the principle that all people are equal before the law and the principle that practice is the only criterion for verifying the truth, irrespective of our academic and political status. Do not hold that because we have a special status or because our views are supported by a certain power, the truth will certainly be on our side and we have the right to impose our views on others with the tone of lecturing others or drawing conclusions. The style that "truth belongs to those who have power" is a manifestation of monopoly behavior in the academic field. Only by changing this style is it possible to create an atmosphere of equal contention.

Next, it is necessary to advocate upholding truth and rectifying mistakes and to oppose the practice of bending with the wind. In the course of academic explorations, it is normal that, through studies and discussions, people should uphold what they think should be upheld or change certain views. There is no lack of such precedents among noted economists at home and abroad. In academic studies we should not bend with the wind, following prevalent ideas without our own independent opinions. Obviously, this style of study does not help to initiate academic contention and to raise the academic level.

Even if a certain views is relatively correct, due to the simultaneous existence of various other viewpoints, there will be more opportunities to supplement, revise, and develop this view. The existence of different views can also play the role of one supervising another and prevent a relatively correct view or practice from going to extremes due to lack of supervision, thus leading to erroneous results. In the short term, the existence of only one tone or voice in a certain period seems fairly quiet and consistent. In the long term, this often leads to fluctuations and reversals.

Again, it is necessary to uphold academic democracy. In our economic circles there are people who do not study or explore problems but who are keen on bludgeoning others to prevent them from exploring new ground. Due to the interference of such people, our economics research institute and JINGJI YANJIU have paid a high cost. Such explorers as Sun Yefang were also subjected to gratuitous persecutions. Some authors have been subjected to attacks by such people politically just because they have submitted an academic paper for publication. For this reason, we should use democratization to resist this harmful behavior and to ensure freedom of academic exploration. In this way we can pay a smaller price and prevent setbacks.

Wang Huide on Class Struggle

["Excerpts" of speech by Wang Huide at a forum to mark the 30th anniversary of the double hundred principle, jointly sponsored by the Economics Institute of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences and the JINGJI YANJIU Editorial Department on 31 May: "Academic Contention and Class Struggle"]

[Text] The policy of letting a hundred schools of thought contend was actually negated not long after it was put forward in 1956. Why? We should draw lessons from the issue.

China's socialist transformation of ownership of the means of production was basically completed in 1956. At that time, some people believed that class struggle had come to an end and the main task was to carry out construction. However, this correct estimation of the situation was negated before long. Hence, the prevailing idea was: The question of which will win out, socialism or capitalism, though settled in the economic field and ownership of the means of production, is not yet resolved in the political and ideological fields. The class struggle between the proletariat and the bourgeoisie will be focused in the political and ideological spheres. The struggle will continue to be long and at times will even become very acute. As the ideological field was regarded s the main battlefield of class struggle, letting a hundred schools of thought contend was out of the question and only the proletariat and the bourgeoisie had the opportunity to compete with each other. With the slogan "eliminate bourgeois ideology and promote proletarian ideology" raised later, the things treated as "bourgeois" were to be eradicated rather than put under contention.

As we draw a historical lesson today, we must eliminate the pernicious influence of "taking class struggle as the key link" and discard the methods related to the erroneous idea. If academic contention is taken as class struggle, or there is a question of which will win in the ideological field, the proletariat or the bourgeoisie, or there is a process of "promoting proletarian ideology and eliminating the bourgeois one," the double hundred principle will not come into being.

When we say that "letting a hundred schools of thought contend" is the correct policy for academic prosperity, we should have the courage to admit that it is a normal phenomenon even for a Marxist to have tens or hundreds of different views on a certain question. The result of deliberation and contention is the reaching of consensus. We should not make conclusions beforehand and regard a certain view as truth and Marxism and the other 99 as fallicies, in other words, "promote" 1 and "eliminate" the other 99 views. Differing views on a question is a normal, inevitable phenomenon in the course of exploring truth and there is nothing to be surprised at. We should not try to foretell which one is Marxism and which 99 are non-Marxist or anti-Marxist. Only in this way can we genuinely implement the double hundred principle.

Tang Zhongkun on Contention

["Excerpts" of speech by Tang Zhongkun at a forum on 31 May to mark the 30th anniversary of the double hundred policy, jointly sponsored by the Economics Institute of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences and the JINGJI YANJIU Editorial Department: "Encourage the Formation and Competition of Different Schools of Thought"]

[Text] Encouraging the formation and competition of different schools of thought is an inherent meaning of the policy of letting a hundred schools of thought contend. The social economic process is a complicated process of constant development. Even though the study of the current social economic process is guided by Marxism, it is still possible for different schools of thought to arise, as the spheres, angles, and methods of study are different. Encouraging the formation and competition of different schools of thought will help economists make a systematic study of the relevant economic theories and continuously improve their theoretical system, study methods, and arguments. This is beneficial to changing the habit of repeating the study of the same theory at a low level in a "rush" manner. In the course of competition, to enable their theories to withstand the test of practice, different schools of thought should go deep into practice for investigation and study and conscientiously and critically absorb all good theoretical achievements to correctly understand the social economic process. This will help reduce empty theories which are divorced from practice. The competition between different schools of thought in Marxist economics circles will, in the course of the integration of theory with practice, promote the development of the whole of Marxist economics and help train a number of influential Marxist economists. Marxist economists should not be afraid of the emergence of non-Marxist economists. Marxist economics develops through the debate with non-Marxist economics and enriches itself by critically absorbing the scientific factors in non-Marxist economics.

A basic method of competition between different schools of thought is academic criticism and countercriticism. The correctness of theoretical views must be judged by practice and not by man. No theoretical views have the privilege of not being criticized, nor does any theoretical criticism have the privilege of not being countercriticized. Criticism and countercriticism must be equal, responsible, and reasoning, and no one is allowed to use power and influence to threaten others. What is required is convincing people by reason. This is where the difference between academics and scholar-tyrants lies.

Dong Fureng Urges Implementation

["Excerpts" of speech by Dong Fureng at forum to mark the 30th anniversary of the double hundred policy, jointly sponsored by the Economics Institute of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences and the JINGJI YANJIU Editorial Department on 31 May: "Make Efforts To Implement the Double Hundred Policy"]

[Text] The double hundred policy is a correct principle to promote the flourishing and development of science and culture. Practice over the past 3 decades has proved that China's science and culture flourished and prospered when this policy was implemented, but halted and even declined otherwise. It has been the same with economic theories. We have experiences of success as well as bitter lessons over the past 3 decades.

Speaking of bitter lessons, we have two conspicuous examples in China's economic circles. One is the criticism of the famous economist Ma Yinchu's theory of population control in the 1950's, and the other is the criticism of the famous economist Sun Yefang's entirely outstanding and original theory of economics. These criticisms went beyond the scope of normal academic debates and ran counter to the principle of the contention of a hundred schools of thought, and they were actually carried out as political struggles. Those under criticism were labelled politically with groundless and frightening charges. Such criticism suffocated the creative research on China's theories on economics, and has brought about irredeemable great losses to China's socialist economic construction.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the Central Committee has implemented the principle of emancipating minds, and seeking truth from facts, corrected the "leftist" errors in the past, and created a good environment for the development of China's theories on economics without precedent. This has enabled unprecedented development of China's theories on economics in the course of contention of a hundred schools of thought, and played an active role in China's economic reform and construction. However, the implementation of the double hundred policy is not always plain sailing, and we have experienced setbacks in the course of its implementation. In order to implement the double hundred policy in a down-to-earth way, we must make great efforts. On the one hand, we hope that the departments responsible for economic theoretical work would create a further relaxed environment for economic theoretical work, on the other, we economic theoretical workers should also do our best to correctly understand the spirit of the double hundred policy. We should acquire the courage for theoretical research, and be bold at exploration and blazing new trails under the guidance of Marxism. We should advocate not only independent thinking and contention and discussion between different views, but, even more, the calm exchange of views in criticism and counter-criticism, seeking truth from facts, fully reasoning facts, and convincing others by reasoning. We must in a down-to-earth way get rid of the unhealthy atmosphere of distorting others' original intention, garbling a statement, artibrarily labeling politically, or flying into a fit of anger when listening to criticism of a discussion nature.

China's economic circles are facing arduous tasks. Reform and development are the two big topics confronting us. Reform is for the sake of development, when development means realizing socialist modernization. Huge volumes of extraordinarily complicated and difficult problems are awaiting our exploration, research, and solution. As theoretical workers in economics, we should carry out bold exploration and research on all sorts of questions concerning economic reform and development, so that China's socialist economic science may further flourish and develop on the basis of practice. Mistakes are hardly avoidable in exploration and research, and the emergence of different views is inevitable. We should be bold at adhering to truth as well as revising our errors under the guidance of Marxism, and unfold discussions in the spirit of equality, democracy, seeking truth from facts, and fully reasoning with facts based on the principle of "letting a hundred schools of thought contend."

Xiao Zhuoji on Ma Yinchu

["Excerpts" of speech by Xiao Zhuoji at forum to mark the 30th anniversary of the double hundred policy, jointly sponsored by the Economics Institute of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences and the JINGJI YANJIU Editorial Department on 31 May: "Draw Lessons From the Criticism on Ma Yinchu"]

[Text] Ma Yinchu, former president of Beijing University, published a series of works during the period from 1956 to 1958, including "On the Theory of Comprehensive Balance and the Law of Proportionate Development: a Discussion in Light of the Actual Circumstances in China," "More on the Theory of Comprehensive Balance and the Law of Proportionate Development: a Discussion in Light of the Actual Circumstances in China," "New Population Theory," and "My Economic Theory, Philosophical Thinking, and Political Stand." In these works, he put forth many original views and valuable suggestions on such major issues as the balanced development of the national economy and population control which have an important bearing on socialist construction and the future of the state and nation. However, Ma Yinchu's correct opinions were not studied seriously and adopted at that time, neither was he encouraged to further the exploration of these issues with other comrades of the academic circles. On the contrary, Ma Yinchu's views were wrongly denounced as "anti-party and anti-socialist reactionary fallacies," and he was accused of "attacking the party and socialism behind the camouflage of academic studies" and "vainly attempting to overthrow socialism in the hope of capitalist restoration." During the two movements in 1958 and in the 1959-60 period when Ma Yinchu was attacked by name, a total of more than 160 related articles were published in various newspapers and journals, and more than 9,000 big-character posters were posted at the Beijing University campus in an organized way, having an extremely bad influence.

What lessons whould we draw from the wrong criticism against Ma Yinchu? Apart from what I have mentioned above, the following three points, I think, should also be noted.

First, it is necessary to attach importance to social sciences. Social sciences, which also play a revolutionary role in propelling history forward, are of great importance, equal to that of natural sciences. Overlooking the importance of social sciences or adopting an incorrect attitude toward the study of social sciences will inevitably cause losses to socialist construction.

Second, it is necessary to show respect for the explorative and pioneering spirit of the theoreticians. In the past, our theoreticians enjoyed little support but frequently faced criticism. It cannot be denied that our theoreticians have failed to keep abreast with the actual situation in some fields. But it is also a fact that many theoreticians have done some original work. Such works as "New Population Theory" by Ma Yinchu and "Planning and Statistics Must Be Based on the Law of Value" by Sun Yefang have presented new ideas and new policies dealing with new circumstances and new problems. On the other hand, it takes time to achieve in-depth development of a new process of theoretical generalization. Therefore, we should not make excessive demands on our theoreticians but should give them more support and encourage them to further their brave exploration.

Third, we can never demand "uniformity in public opinion" in the academic fields. Marx said: "You praise the fascinating changes and the inexhaustible treasure of nature and you do not demand that roses and violets give the same fragrance. Then why do you demand that spirit, the richest and most colorful thing in the world, exist in only one form?" Although Marx made this statement in criticizing the Prussian cultural despotism and this case was completely different from ours, the soul of his words is still of great value.

Feng Lanrui on Scientific Organizations

["Exceprts" of speech by Feng Lanrui at forum to mark the 30th anniversary of the double hundred policy, jointly sponsored by the Economics Institute of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences and the JINGJI YANJIU Editorial Department on 31 May: "The Double Hundred Policy and Scientific Organizations of the Masses"]

[Text] To realize socialist modernization in our country and build socialism with Chinese characteristics, the masses' scientific organizations are indispensable. 1) They are capable assistants of the party and state, and are links between the party and state and scientific workers. They can reflect to the higher authorities the feelings, demands and suggestions of scientific workers. The party and state can also transmit their demands to the broader masses of scientific workers through these scientific organizations of the masses. 2) They are useful for strengthening lateral links among scientific workers in various departments, units and localities. Through the masses' scientific organizations, we may organize scientific workers in various localities, departments, and units so that they can concentrate their efforts to carry out and accomplish many major scientific research projects. 3) In the activities of the masses' scientific organizations, scientific workers can freely discuss and exchange their scientific and technical achievements. They may air their different views in debate. This will give full play to the wisdom and capability of scientific workers, and promote democratic and free academic atmosphere.

The number of scientific organizations of the masses in our country has greatly increased since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee. They have carried out many academic activities, and played a positive role in varying degrees in the three aspects mentioned above.

Strictly speaking, these organizations have not yet fully exploited their role, but they have made their achievements in the work as a whole. At present, there are various erroneous views on the scientific organizations of the masses. 1) Some people fail to realize the importance of the scientific organizations are not essential, and that it is better to have a smaller number of these organizations. 2) They pay more attention to the problems and defects of these organizations, but fail to think more of their successes. They criticize them extensively, but do little to encourage them. Sometimes, some problems have occurred in one or two scientific organizations of the masses. Some people wrongly think that the same problems have also occurred in most of the organizations. The correct attitude to adopt is that we should fully affirm the important role and achievements of the scientific organizations of the masses, enthusiastically support their work, and help them solve their difficulties. Instead of hampering their advance, we should promote their progress.

Since scientific organizations of the masses are different from administrative institutions, we should not adopt administrative methods to run them. Now the problem is that we use administrative methods to control scientific organizations of the masses. The regular work of scientific organizations of the masses is to carry out academic activities. Some units in charge exercise rigid control over academic activities. There are many irrational regulations which restrict legal activities of the scientific organizations of the masses. This is harmful to the contention of a hundred schools of thought.

I believe that it is necessary to exercise control over the scientific organizations of the masses. However, the method of control should be changed. We should adopt a method which is suitable for the characteristics of the scientific organizations of the masses rather than taking simple administrative means. To do so, we should respect the democracy and independence of the scientific organizations of the masses. We should not interfere in their academic actitivies. According to Article 35 of the Constitution, I suggest that we enact a law on the scientific organizations of the masses as early as possible. Such a law will be useful to the effective administration of the scientific organizations of the masses.

RENMIN RIBAO ARTICLE ON 'DOUBLE-HUNDRED' POLICY

["Special Commentary" by Du Feijin: "Talking About the 'Double Hundred' Policy and Its Guarantee by the Legal System"]

[Text] Perhaps it is because of my leaning toward democracy and freedom that I have, of late, read almost all the articles in the press marking the 30th anniversary of the propounding of the "double hundred" policy, and I just have to say a few words on the enlightened discussions by many comrades in their writings. Focusing on the "double hundred" policy, we can deal with this topic from different angles. The author of this article would like to air a few points on how the legal system should guarantee the implementation of the "double hundred" policy.

The guarantee of the legal system must be acquired for the implementation of the "double hundred" policy.

-- This Is A Summing Up of Historical Lessons as Well as the Inevitability of the Development of the Times.

The policy of "letting a hundred flowers blossom, letting a hundred schools of thought contend" was first put forward in 1956. But it was practically abolished as soon as it was propounded. Rough treatment with regard to scientific research and the creation of culture and art was repeated over and over again beginning in 1957, and becoming all the more intensified in the 1960's and the 1970's in particular. The causes for the emergence of such a tortuous course were manifold. However, there is no evading that "the rule of man," which had been carried out in China's academic and art circles over a long period of time, was one of the most important reasons. Under the rule by man, questions concerning academic, cultural and artistic subjects were more often than not resolved by the opinions of some leading members, and their personal preferences became the criteria for judging right and wrong. We can say that the rule by man has been the fountainhead of some abnormal and unhealthy phenomena in China's academic, cultural and artistic circles. This is because the rule by man refuses to acknowledge the principle that "everyone is equal before truth", and believes that the leading members are Marxist authoritives, meaning that they are the personification of truth. Hence, the free discussion and criticism of any questions on an equal footing is unnecessary. Therefore, in order to genuinely implement the "double hundred" policy, it is imperative to substitute the rule by man with the rule by law, and necessary laws must be drawn up to protect the democracy and freedom of academic and artistic circles. This is precisely the lesson we have drawn at the tremendous cost of the long-term stalemate in science and art.

The guarantee of the legal system in the implementation of the "double hundred" policy is also the inevitable trend of the entire development of the times. This is because the "double hundred" policy is an important content of socialist democrcy and freedom. To us, democracy and freedom are not only banners as well as facts; they are an important demonstration of socialism's superiority and the target the people are pursuing under the leadership of the party and the state. Without genuine democracy and freedom, there would not be genuine socialism, and the fulfilment of communism would be an impossibility. Back in December 1978, Comrade Deng Xiaoping pointed out: "To ensure people's democracy, we must strengthen our legal system. Democracy has to be institutionalized and written into law, so as to make sure that institutions and laws do not change whenever the leadership changes, or whenever leaders change their views or shift the focus of their attention ("Selected Works of Deng Xiaoping" p 136.) Therefore, the proposal and implementation of the "double hundred" policy is by no means the whimsical idea or expedient measure of a certain leading member, but the inevitable demand of socialist construction and development, and a necessity in building a high level democratic, modernized, socialist country and for China's science and culture to flourish. I therefore believe that the guarantee of the legal system for the genuine and long-term implementation of the "double hundred" policy should be institutionalized and legalized.

The Principled Stipulation of the Constitution Alone Is Not Enough for Genuine and Long-Term Implementation of the "Double Hundred" Policy

As everyone knows, although the "double hundred" policy has not been directly written into China's Constitution, stipulations in the same vein can be found in the Constitution. For example, Article 35 of the PRC Constitution stipulates: "Citizens enjoy freedom of speech, the press, assembly, association, procession, and demonstration." And Article 47 stipulates explicitly: "Citizens have freedom to engage in scientific research, literary and artistic creation and other cultural activities." These constitutional stipulations confirm the rudimentary essences of the "double hundred" policy from the angle of the state's basic law. They thus play an important role in allowing China's scientific research, culture and art to flourish and develop. However, we should admit that in academic and art circles, the above-mentioned constitutional stipulations are far from being enough if a change from the rule by man to the rule by law, and the genuine substitution of the rule by man with the rule by law is to be realized. As the state's basic law, the Constitution cannot possibly make every right and freedom of the citizens specific, nor detail their scientific research, literary and artistic creation, and other cultural activities. Therefore, it is impossible for the state to improve its administration of the entire undertakings of scientific research and culture. Thus, it is necessary to draw up various specific laws to form a complete set, or to supplement the principled Constitution, such as the news law; the publication law; the copyright law; the invention law; the law for movies and television; the law for academic (cultural) associations (or the law for academic societies): and the law for literary creation. These laws may specifically stipulate the questions of implementation of the "double hundred" policy in detail in each specific field, and state organs will ensure the implementation of these laws. With these specific laws, people may have explicit criteria when conducting their scientific research and cultural activities. Thus the implementation of the "double hundred" policy will be ensured without any intervention or impedance by "leftist" or rightist tendencies.

In his congratulatory speech on behalf of the Central Committee Secretariat, delivered at the fourth Congress of Chinese Writers' Association representatives on 29 February 1984, Comrade Hu Qili said: "It is necessary to strengthen the concept of a socialist legal system. It is necessary to adhere to the principle of letting a hundred flowers blossom, letting a hundred schools of thought contend. Regarding the mistakes and problems which emerge in literary creation, they can only be solved through literary or art criticism. Namely by criticism, discussion and debate, so long as they have not violated the law. We must ensure that those writers under criticism will not be politically prejudiced against, and will be free from penalty or other organizational punishment because of their mistakes or problems. In conducting literary or art criticism, an attitude of equality aiming to help those criticized should be adopted. We should refrain from oversimplifying, being rough, and making unfair and exaggerated criticism, and we should allow counter-criticism."

We can say that the foregoing discussion by Comrade Hu Qili concerns not only the party's specific policies in implementing the "double hundred" policy in cultural and artistic circles, but also the party's basic guiding concept for implementing the "double hundred" policy in the entirety of academic circles. Therefore, this discussion is practically the legislative spirit for drawing up the various specific laws mentioned above.

Based on this legislative spirit, we believe these specific laws should give expression to the following principles:

1. The democratic principle must be adhered to, whether in the academic, cultural or artistic realms. Without academic democracy, and democracy for culture and art, there will be neither academic freedom nor freedom for culture and art. Neither will there be the contention of a hundred schools of thought in the activities of scientific research and cultural creation. Practice has proved that in the academic, cultural and artistic realms, the democratic principle must be adhered to. This is because the method of the lower level subjecting to the higher level is not suitable, because truth is not always in the hands of the higher level. Neither is the method of the minority subjecting to the majority (because new concepts and ideas will only be accepted by the majority after due process). Therefore, the law must start by showing respect to the law governing scientific research and cultural creation, and acknowledging the democratic principle in the academic, cultural, and artistic realms.

2. The principle that "everyone is equal before truth" must be adhered to. In criticism and discussion within the academic, cultural, and artistic realms, no one should enjoy special privilege. Any person, no matter how high his position, no matter what meritorous service he has rendered, and despite differences in nationality, belief, age, and sex, must only act only as an equal of the academic or artistic workers participating in discussing, making speeches, and writing on the discussion and criticism within the academic, cultural and artistic fields, in order to seek for truth through free discussions. All abnormal phenomena such as suppressing others by taking advantage of one's power are forbidden.

3. The principle of freedom for scientific research and cultural creation should be implemented. The principle of freedom within the realm of the Constitution and the law must be implemented whether in academic research or cultural creation.

4. The principle that allowance be given to mistakes in academic research and cultural creation should be affirmed. The lingering fears from the past, and the fears for what the future may bring, have not been entirely solved as a result of the big stick and labelling treatment for erroneous speeches which has existed for a long time. Therefore, we believe that the laws must: Start from the law governing academic, cultural and artistic development: acknowledge that cognition is something to be completed gradually; and give allowance for people to make mistakes. It must: Forbid unfair and exaggerated criticism and arbitrary political labelling; oppose political prejudice against scientific research, cultural and artistic workers; and refrain from arbitrary punishment for those comrades who have made mistakes.

Besides, it is impossible to draw a demarcation line between academic and political questions in the research of scientific socialism, politics, the science of law, and economics in particular. Therefore, the law should not stipulate that "political questions are not to be discussed," in order to ensure the implementation of the "double hundred" policy, and to prevent it from being lashed and interfered with by political campaigns.

We should point out that observance of the Constitution and the law is the obligation of every citizen. Whether it is a leading member, or one under leadership he should strictly observe every stipulation of the Constitution and the law.

Otherwise, he must be punished according to the law. Only then, will it be possible for the genuine and long-term implementation of the policy of "letting a hundred flowers blossom, letting a hundred schools of thought contend."

LIAOWANG URGES RELAXED ENVIRONMENT FOR REFORM

HK150446 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 0127 GMT 15 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, 15 Jun (XINHUA) -- The commentator of LIAOWANG weekly points out that, to make all-round progress in the reforms now being undertaken in China, it is essential to have a relaxed environment in the whole of society; in particular, democracy should be brought into play and a lively situation created.

The commentator's article carried by tomorrow's edition of LIAOWANG says that now that China has entered a great age of all-round reform, it is essential to mobilize the millions of the people to contribute their ideas and strength and display their initiative and creativity. Only thus can success be achieved in reform. It is therefore particularly necessary that democracy be brought into play and a lively situation created.

The commentator says that as there are no ready-made experiences and methods to follow in reform, it is necessary to mobilize and encourage the millions of cadres and people boldly to undertake exploration, pioneering, and creation. All this cannot avoid being experimental in nature; there will be risks, mistakes are inevitable, and there are bound to be different opinions, viewpoints, ideas, and methods. There can be no reforms if people are not allowed to experiment, if there is fear of taking risks, if mistakes are forbidden, and if different opinions cannot be held.

What is required to create a relaxed and beneficial environment for reform? The commentator holds that the important thing is to truly implement the principle of "letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend." The following conditions are also required:

1. Spur and encourage people to work creatively, probe their way ahead, and solve new problems as they are discovered. It does not matter if mistakes occur during the advance. It is fine if lessons are learned and one's ability grows from the mistakes.

2. Learn how to provide correct guidance amid a variety of opinions and how to choose and follow what is good amid this variety, and be skilled in concentrating and implementing the good opinions scattered around. An environment of exploration, pioneering, and creation is an environment of a variety of views. There can be no exploration if silence reigns. Diversity of opinion among the masses is better than ten thousand horses standing mute, since it shows that ours is a lively society.

3. Protect differing views. It is necessary to hold sincere consultations with people whose views deviate or are not completely correct. We must by no means hastily stick labels on people.

There is also another condition: Our minds must be emancipated, and discipline must be observed.

NONGMIN RIBAO ON RURAL PARTY RECTIFICATION, REFORM

HK200227 Beijing NONGMIN RIBAO in Chinese 13 Jun 86 p 1

[Commentator's article: "Party Rectification and Reform Should Complement Each Other -- Answering Readers' Questions on the Relationship Between 'Governing the Party With Strictness' and 'Invigorating the Economy'"]

[Text] In May, the CPC Central Commission for Guiding Party Rectification held two forums in Zhengzhou and Nanjing. The meetings set forth some important principles for the rural party rectification guideline, some major questions that must be solved in rural party rectification, and the relationship between party recitification and reform.

The two meetings pointed out: Rural party recitification should promote reform, help enliven the rural economy, and help develop the productive forces and arouse the peasants' production enthusiasm. At the same time, the meetings pointed out: Rural party rectification should be focused on settling the serious malpractices of cadres at the district, township, and village level. When reform develops to a higher level and the economy becomes more active, it is all the more necessary to govern the party strictly.

When studying the spirit of these two meetings, some party members asked: The meetings emphasized the need to promote reform and enliven the economy and also emphasized discipline and strictness in governing the party, so is there something contradictory between these two sides?

The answer is defintely no. The purpose of party rectification, in the final analysis, is to enhance the combat effectiveness of the party organizations. The work of the rural party organizations is to lead peasants to fulfill the party's central task in the countryside -- to promote reform, enliven the economy, develop the productive forces, and make peasants rich as soon as possible. In this sense, the party rectification should provide an organizational guarantee for reform by strengthening leadership and removing obstacles in people's minds. Reform will in turn help consolidate the party organizations. Concretely speaking, party rectification should achieve the following purposes:

First, rural grass-roots party organizations should be further freed from the "leftist" shackles, and should be able to act correctly according to the party's policies and state laws. They should be resolved to carry out reform by overcoming all obstacles and should serve the masses wholeheartedly. They should really become firm leadership cores in the reform process.

Second, the political and ideological education among party members should be strengthened, and party cadres and members should be required to abide by discipline and law, be honest in performing their official duties, seek benefit for the people, and live up to the people's trust. They should really become a backbone force in leading the masses to free themselves from poverty and to get rich.

Third, rural party cadres should overcome the formalist and bureaucratist work style which may hinder rural reforms. They should establish new ideas and work style, have courage to make explorations and innovations, and develop a new grass-roots work system in line with the needs of reform.

Fourth, the grass-roots party organizations should be freed from the inert state which is not favorable to the development of reform. The inner-party political life should be improved, and party members should be better managed. The party organizations should become real nuclei of the peasant masses, and should be full of vigor in uniting and educating the peasants.

In short, party rectification should serve reform, and reform will certainly promote the consolidation of the party organizations. The image of the party will be greater, the quality of party members will be improved, the combat effectiveness of the party organizations will be enhanced, and party leading cadres will polish their leadership art. All this will provide political, ideological, and organizational guarantees for the smooth development of reform. Therefore, party rectification and reform in fact complement each other, and "governing the party with strictness" and "invigorating the economy" in fact promote each other.

Here, the key is how to correctly understand the concept of "strictness." At present, some rural party members still have misgivings when "strictness" is mentioned. They fear that they may make mistakes in the course of "invigorating the economy." In their eyes, "strictness" means restraining the degree of "invigorating the economy" and "invigorating the economy" means relaxing all controls. Some people even think "strictness" means that people are required to make a living from farmland and talk less about the commodity economy; to talk more about the political objective, and less about material interests; to talk more about becoming rich together, and less about building up individual wealth; to follow rules and conventions docilely and not to carry out reforms and innovations, and so on.

In fact, this is a misunderstanding. The real meaning of "governing the party with strictness" is to require party members to strictly follow the party's policies and state laws to carry out reforms, to enliven the economy, and to get rich. This does not mean that people's initiative is to be dampened. In other words, as long as something is in line with the party policies and state laws and is favorable to reform, we should be bold in exploration and do it. When exploring, we should not be swayed by considerations of gain and loss. On the other hand, we should strictly require party members not to do anything unfavorable to reform and should severely handle those who break the law. At present, some people's serious malpractice of using official functions to seek selfish gains and violating discipline and law has harmed the party's reputation and aroused the resentment of the masses. This has become a major obstacle to reform, and should be taken as the main target of attack in party rectification.

We should seriously study the spirit of the two forums, fully understand their essence, persevere in rural reform, and consistently govern the party strictly. We should courageously do the good things which are favorable to reform, and avoid anything unfavorable to reform. In addition, we should take the initiative in examining and correcting any wrongdoing. We also hope that the rural grass-roots party organizations, when tackling various problems among party members, will correctly draw the lines of demarcation according to the policies and protect people's enthusiasm for reform. Ideological education should be the main way to treat most party members' problems. However, we should resolutely expose and handle the major cases which involve a small number of people who have seriously corrupted the party style. Let us strive for greater achievements in party rectification and reform!

OIL, GAS PRODUCTS COMPANIES IMPROVE WORK STYLE

[Report: "Beijing Municipal Petroleum Products Sales Company Improves Work Style by Beginning With Its Leading Group"]

[Text] According to BEIJING RIBAO, on the evening of 21 March this year, four automobiles drove to the Fuxing road gas station, which was closed at that time. They started their journey from a place far away from the municipality. Upon hearing that the drivers were in a hurry to complete the journey, a duty worker of the gas station immediately started the pump and refuelled their automobiles. When the drivers thanked him by giving them "555" cigarettes, he determinedly refused to accept the gifts. On the next day, he found a 20-yuan reward on his desk but he delivered the money to the organization. Following party rectification and the correction of unhealthy tendencies, there have been many cases like this in the Beijing municipal petroleum products sales company.

There are 24 grass-root units and some 80 sales outlets, including 40 gas stations, under this company. Over a long time in the past, some departments of this system have developed the "official merchant work style" because "the demand for petroleum products is so great that one does not have to worry about the source of customers." Some units have developed such bad practices as taking advantage of the spot for personal gain, as well as receiving and demanding bribes. Some people abused their power of taking care of gas pumpers and sending out goods. They pocketed a portion of the goods and thus committed crimes.

After party rectification was begun, this company took the correction of unhealthy tendencies as an important part of work. Through repeated serious studies that were carried out in connection with the actual conditions, and through the discussion of the central and municipal CPC committees' instructions on correcting party work style and correcting unhealthy tendencies, the company's leading group realized that most bad practices took place at the grass roots. But they were the result of the company leadership's incorrect guiding ideology toward its operation. In order to correct the party style and correct the unhealthy tendencies, it must begin with the leading organ, particularly the leading group. Only thus could the company make real achievements. In connection with the characteristics of the trade, the staff formulated the "eight regulations on strengthening the self-construction of the leading group" (nicknamed the "eight prohibitions.") The regulations clearly state that members of the leading group must not seek personal gain, be it a small group or individual, under any pretext or excuse. They must not receive gifts which are given in an inappropriate way. On the other hand, for the sake of investigating the specific manifestations of unhealthy tendencies in the trade, the company's members of the leading group and 24 organ cadres, headed by the company's party secretary and manager, went to the grass-root units and held forums. They also solicited opinions and criticism from customers. Then, through discussions and investigation, they listed the major unhealthy tendencies. They also instructed their subordinate units to discuss and deal with them.

Following party rectification, the activities of the company and the trade was improved. Recently, problems such as receiving and asking bribes from customers were no longer found again.

On the contrary, a number of good people and good deeds emerged in which the staff neither asked nor received bribes from customers, and turned down their entertainment offer but enthusiastically served them. When applying for a permit for purchasing gas, an individual household put a hundred yuan note in an envelope, placed it on Liu Baocun's desk in the business section, and said before he left, "I shall come back tomorrow." At that time only Liu was in the office. Upon discovering the envelope, he handed it over to the section head who returned the money to the household on the very next day and solemnly told him, "everything must be handled in connection with policy and 'smoothing the procedure through' bribes is erroneous thinking." Some units have not only corrected the unhealthy tendencies in the trade but have also improved their service. Some gas stations acted in accordance with customers' demands and delayed their closing time. They voluntarily helped customers solve difficulties and sent staff to the gas-consuming units to solicit opinions from them.

Commentator's Article

[Commentator's article: "Realistically Rectify the Unhealthy Trend of a Trade"]

[Text] In the course of realistically examining and handling major and key cases, to integrate the characteristics of various fronts and trades and to rectify the unhealthy tendencies that spread wide within a trade is the good experience of the Beijing municipality in its work of rectifying party style. The report on the Beijing municipal petroleum products sales company, which is published in today's RENMIN RIBAO, is an example of this.

We have a wide range of fronts and trades which have links throughout the whole society, involving tens of thousands of households. Railway, automobile, post office, shops, restaurants, hospitals, theaters and so on are "windows" through which the people observe society. Usually, the people see the party style and the general mood of society through these "windows." Whether a unit is civilized or boorish, takes a positive or negative view, or is honest or corrupted is by no means the problem of that single unit. Rather, it is an influence on others. An aged woman might compare the treatment she just received on a train with that in the old society. An overseas friend would compare the advantages of socialism with those of capitalism by the treatment he received in a guesthouse. A primary school student would learn how to act politely when getting along with people by seeing the smile of a saleslady in a shop. Similarly, a customer might think about many things by seeing the expression on a saleslady' face. We do not advocate the practice of quickly jumping to conclusions whenever seeing something. However, we cannot but acknowledge that when judging party style and the general mood of society, the people indeed always base their judgments on first hand and personal experience. The behavior of comrades working on various fronts is indeed related to the work style of CPC as well as the general mood of society in socialist China. If everyone agrees to judge the issue by proceeding from this point, why should not we set strict demands for ourselves and do well in our work?

What a pity it is that some comrades working in various trades do not understand the issue in this respect, or do not set demands for themselves. Instead, they make use of the power they have for personal gain, or even blackmail people, demanding them to pay these comrades "the access charges." This kind of unhealthy tendency is also a manifestation of an unhealthy party style.

Various trades are so different from each other that many people take advantage of their office in one way or another, as well as in varying degrees, and use their power to demand things from their clients. Over a long period in the past, this kind of unhealthy tendency in this and that trades made the situation so bad that the masses complained a lot. The people said that if things went on like this, how could we manifest the CPC's goal of serving the people wholeheartedly, as well as socialist China's spiritual civilization?

Beijing is the focus of attention from places across the country. Tens of thousands of people come in and leave the municipality every day. Many people have criticized and complained much about Beijing's "windows." This is also a good thing because it helps the Beijing municipality CPC Committee and government be determined to rectify the unhealthy tendencies. Of course, this is just the beginning. A lot of work still has to be done to clean every "window" in Beijing.

To rectify the unhealthy trend in a trade is a very important part of rectifying party style. The investigation and handling of major and key cases will bring about great shocks. Nevertheless, only a few people committed the crimes. The area they are involved in is therefore limited. If we consolidate the party style by further integrating the trade's characteristics, we shall develop work in an in-depth manner. The unhealthy trend of a trade involves, of course, a wide and comprehensive area. We should rectify it under the leadership of party committees at various levels and in a systematic way. We must not rush headlong into mass action and must not compare figures, progress or scale. What the people ask is practical results rather than any kind of lip service. Every comrade in each trade is, of course, urged to begin with himself when rectifying the unhealthy trend. But the first thing is that the leading comrades of each trade should begin with themselves. They should investigate the unhealthy tendencies they have in their trade, and should find ways for dealing them. On problems concerning the masses, we should focus on positive education and must by no means "let everyone pass." This is the point to which we must pay close attention.

STATE COUNCIL MAKES EFFORTS TO DEVELOP POOR AREAS

OW211353 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chiense 0644 GMT 19 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 19 Jun (XINHUA) -- The General Office of the State Council on 10 June issued a circular to all provincial, autonomous regional, and municipal people's governments and all departments of the State Council on distributing the minutes of the first plenary session of the State Council's leading group for economic development in poor areas. The circular calls for seriously studying and implementing the suggestions made in the minutes on strengthening economic development in poor areas and striving to solve the food and clothing problem for the people in most of the poor areas during the Seventh 5-Year Plan. It calls on the leadership and the rank and file to make common efforts and fulfill this task well.

To strengthen guidance over economic development in poor areas and shake off poverty in these areas as soon as possible, the State Council has set up a leading group in charge of economic development in poor areas. Chen Junsheng, secretary general of the State Council, will concurrently serve as the head of the leading group, while Lin Hujia will serve as its adviser.

The leading group's basic task is to investigate and study; formulate principles, policies, and plans for economic development in poor areas; coordinate to solve important questions in development and construction; supervise and examine work; and sum up and exchange experiences.

Presided over by Vice Premier Tian Jiyun, the first plenary session of the State Council's leading group for economic development in poor areas was held on 14 May 1986. The session pointed out: Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, great changes have taken place in China's rural areas. Thanks to rapid economic development, peasant life has markedly improved. However, we must clearly understand that economic development in many localities is uneven. Currently, conditions for production are still poor in some areas, mainly areas where there are ethnic groups; old revolutionary base areas which made tremendous contributions to China's revolution; remote mountainous areas; and settlements around reservoirs. In these areas, the development of social productive force has been slow; their economy and culture are backward; and some peasants still face the food and clothing problem. This is an important economic and social question that we must not overlook.

The session pointed out: Over the past 30 years and more, to help poor areas shake off poverty, the central authorities and party committees and governments at all levels have made great efforts, formulated many preferential policies, provided a lot of funds and materials, and achieved certain results. However, economic development in many poor areas is still slow today. These areas have not changed much, and their economic results are not satisactory. It is necessary to sum up experience, start with reform and development, and replace the old way of providing relief to poor people and the production policy not suitable for development in poor areas with new economic development. In view of this, the session made the following 10 suggestions:

1. Stop exercising general leadership, adopt a special policy and special measures, and concentrate efforts to solve the problems one after another on the poorest areas. For those poor areas with average annual per-capita income less than 150 yuan, provincial, autonomous regional, and municipal authorities should concentrate manpower and financial and material resources and adopt special policies and measures to shake off poverty in one poor area after another. For those scattered poor townships, villages, and households, local counties should strengthen leadership and adopt corresponding measures including providing aid to key units and promoting mutual assistance. As for work methods, it is necessary to integrate key points and promote work in all areas by drawing upon experience gained at key periods. It is necessary to achieve practical results and formalism should not be practiced.

2. Maintain the principle of adopting measures according to local conditions; formulate principles for economic development of poor areas by seeking truth from facts; foster strengths and circumvent weaknesses; bring superior positions into full play; and improve self-development capacity. In helping to promote economic development in poor areas, we must particularly emphasize developing the commodity economy and boldly opening the road to prosperity by being realistic and emancipating our minds. Currently, it is necessary to develop whatever is suitable and whatever is marketable, fully utilize natural resources, actively develop diversified economy, and set up a rural industrial structure with great variety and potentials for development.

3. Strengthen intellectual development to improve the quality of workers in poor areas. The core of developing poor areas is intellectual development. It is necessary to adopt various measures to invite and train qualified personnel. Currently, the most important work in educational reform in poor areas is adult education for peasants. It is necessary to proceed from the actual conditions of economic development and bring the role of local middle school graduates, demobilized soldiers, and various skillful craftsmen into full play.

4. Actively develop the farm produce processing industry and promote rural enterprises. In poor areas, the processing industry is very weak while rural enterprises are nonexistent or fledgling. Therefore, it is necessary to actively support and show proper consideration for these areas in levying taxes and offering credit loans.

5. Expand diverse circulation channels, improve transport conditions, and invigorate the commodity economy. In order to bring the superior position of poor areas into full play, we must take pains to solve the question of circulation and transportation State-run businesses, foreign trade departments, and rural supply and marketing cooperatives must actively purchase products and spare no efforts to find a good market for them. In addition, it is necessary to encourage peasants to be purchasers and salesmen and specialized households to engage in transport; and rural trade markets must also be established. It is also necessary to encourage and support coordination between agriculture and commerce, between industry and commerce, and between commerce and commerce, and to widen diverse circulation channels.

6. Actively develop and continuously expand the lateral economic ties between poor areas and economically developed areas. To develop poor areas, we must thoroughly break up the interior-oriented, low-standard, self-cycling state; introduce investment from abroad and establish lateral ties at home; and strive to develop and expand multiform and multilevel lateral economic association with economically developed areas and big and medium-sized cities.

7. Introduce the "sparking plan" to poor areas and bring the tremendous role of science and technology to shake off poverty and become well-off into full play. To develop poor areas, we must formulate a policy, offer technology, and deliver information; offering technology must be the most important. In implementing the "sparking plan" everywhere in the country, we should regard poor areas as the main direction of attack and focal point and make efforts to disseminate and popularize all kinds of applicable scientific and technological achievements centering on today's economic development. It is also necessary to mobilize and organize scientific and technical personnel and skillful craftsmen to go to poor areas to deliver science and technology to peasants there.

8. Reform the use of state funds appropriated to poor areas. Economic development in poor areas calls for a certain amount of funds. However, what is more important is to thoroughly change the way funds are spent irrationally and the simple way relief is provided. We suggest that the provincial, autonomous regional, and municipal authorities consolidate state and local government funds for poor areas, make overall arrangements, and use them in a rational way.

9. Strengthen the building of leading bodies and set up a responsibility system with goals clearly specified. It is necessary to understand still better that to shake off poverty and become well-off is a basic task of all leading organizations and cadres in poor areas. It is necessary to strictly check on cadres and promote them, commensurate with their performance.

10. Mobilize everyone in society to help poor areas shake off poverty. This is a matter of prime importance for the whole party and the whole country. Over the past few years, a lot of good experience has been acquired in many areas. Their experience is worth our learning from. We welcome all circles in society to do their best and adopt different measures to make contributions toward economic development in poor areas.

MEETING URGES DEVELOPING COLLECTIVE ECONOMY

[Text] Beijing, 22 Jun (XINHUA) -- Addressing a national congress of staff and workers (members) of light industrial collective enterprises today, State Councillor Zhang Jingfu pointed out that continued efforts should be made now to enliven collective and small enterprises while stressing the invigoration of state-run large and medium enterprises. Light industrial collective enterprises, he added, should continue to implement the reformative measures that have proved effective through practice in the past few years and, at the same time, make ceaseless efforts to improve such measures.

Zhang Jingfu said: The collective economy is one of the economic forms of our country based on socialist public ownership. It is compatible with the development level of our productive force and has great vitality. Development of the collective economy is one of our significant tasks in building socialism with Chinese characteristics and a long-term important policy of our party and state. We must make a serious effort to learn from past experience, draw lessons from it, and resolutely carry out the important guidelines that the party has formulated for developing the collective economy. In accordance with the needs of our national economic and social development, we must strengthen leadership over the light industrial collective economy, encourage and support its development, and create favorable conditions for accelerating the growth of this economy.

In his speech, Zhang Jingfu emphasized: To further develop the light industrial collective economy, it is imperative to persist in making reforms. The reforms centered on the contract responsibility system that we introduced to the light industrial collective economy over the past few years have produced fruitful results. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we must persist in making intensive reforms on the basis of summing up experience and consolidating achievements. The reforms should be focused on enlivening the enterprises. It is necessary to stabilize, develop, and gradually institutionalize and improve the various economic contract responsibility systems and continue to explore new ways of making reforms to meet the requirement of running enterprises in line with the general and chracteristic nature of the collective economy. Governments at all levels and all departments concerned must create external conditions for enlivening the enterprises and give them necessary support by implementing special policies that are favorable to them. With regard to the advanced individuals in collective enterprises who insist on making reforms, we must warmly support them, be concerned about them, help them, and protect their initiatives so that the reforms will progress in a healthy way.

In addition to the above, Zhang Jingfu said: The key to success in developing the light industrial collective economy lies in the policy. In leading the work of readjusting and reforming the management system of this economy, we must consider its characteristics and try to avert the problems of uncoordinated work and incapable management, which would bring unnecessary losses to our collective economy. Moreover, we must persist in treating collectively owned units and their staff members and workers in the same way as state-run units politically and economically.

Bo Yibo Addresses Meeting

[By RENMIN RIBAO reporter Mo Xinwu and XINHUA reporter Wu Jincai]

[Excerpts] Beijing, 22 Jun (XINHUA) -- The third national congress of staff and workers (members) of light industrial collective enterprises opened today in Beijing. Zhang Jingfu extended the State Council's greetings to the congress.

This year is the 30th anniversary of the successful completion of socialist transformation of China's handicraft industry. Bo Yibo attended the opening ceremony of the above congress and delivered a speech. After reviewing the several decades' history of the development of China's handicraft cooperatives, he pointed out: Light industrial collective enterprises now have a certain foundation. They are a major component of our light industry and backbone force of the city and town collective economy. During the Seventh 5-Year Plan, we should see to it that the light industrial collective economy develops steadily; that the relations within and without the enterprises are further straightened; and that new breakthroughs in product quality, variety, and quantity are commensurate with consumer needs and export requirements.

He stressed that during the Seventh 5-Year Plan, strenuous efforts should be made to reform the economic structure, upgrade technology, and improve product quality rather than blindly seeking a high development speed; otherwise there will be no sustained progress. Bo Yibo also put forward the demands that the position and role of the light industrial collective economy be properly recognized, that all-out efforts be made to support and lead this economy, and that good work be done to reform the management system of light industrial collective enterprises and to strengthen their contingents of staff and workers.

The current congress is a grand meeting after the second national congress of members (staff and workers) of handicraft cooperatives held in 1963. Attending the congress are more than 600 formal delegates representing the 7.45 million staff members and workers of the light industrial collective enterprises throughout the country.

Hao Jianxiu, Lu Dong, and other leading comrades were also present at today's session.

STATE COUNCIL REVISES REGULATION ON AWARDS

OW121724 Beijing XINHUA in English 1522 GMT 12 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 12 (XINHUA) -- A Chinese worker may receive 4,000 yuan as an award for a rationalization proposal, according to a revised State Council regulation released here today.

The regulation provides that a person may receive 2,500 to 4,000 yuan for a proposal resulting in an economic benefit of more than one million yuan in a period of one year. The award for a proposal bringing a benefit of more than half a million yuan is 1,500 to 2,500 yuan.

The money awards of five grades are 50 to 150 percent higher than those set by the original version announced four years ago.

An official from the State Economic Commission said that the state has decided to raise the amount of money awards to encourage enterprise workers to make proposals on improving management or technical renovations.

"In the economic and science and technology reforms, workers have become the real masters of the enterprises and they have raised more proposals in the past two years than ever before," he said.

But "the original regulation only covered proposals for improving specific techniques but failed to mention those for updating management or using the latest scientific and technological findings," he said.

"The monetary awards were too small as well," he added.

All enterprises will set up evaluation committees to decide the amount of economic benefits resulting from a proposal and the amount of prize money, according to the new regulation.

Enterprise managers who offer suggestions for improving efficiency will have their contributions assessed by the official departments concerned.

CIRCULAR URGES RURAL YOUTH CENTER CONSTRUCTION

OW200529 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0810 GMT 19 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Beijing, 19 Jun (XINHUA) -- The Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee and seven other units recently issued a joint circular asking all localities to mobilize the rural sectors to strengthen the building of the "homes for youth" and other cultural activity centers to make socialist ideology and culture prevail in the countryside.

The circular on strengthening the building of "homes for youth" was issued by the Propaganda Department of the CPC Central Committee, the CYL Central Committee, the Ministry of Agriculture, Animal Husbandry and Fishery, the Ministry of Culture, the Ministry of Radio and Television, the State Education Commission, the State Physical Culture and Sports Commission, and the All-China Women's Federation. The circular points out: Along with the deepening of rural economic reform, the peasants, and especially rural youths, are beginning to have new and greater spiritual and cultural needs.

In the past few years, under the leadership of party committees at various levels and with the support of various departments, many localities have speeded up the development of the "homes for youth" and other cultural activity centers by incorporating them in plans for building civilized villages (towns). In some provinces and municipalities, over 60 percent of the villages have set up youth cultural centers. These centers are attracting more and more rural youths and have taken an important place in the construction of socialist spiritual civilization in the countryside. However, development is uneven nationawide and cannot keep up with construction of socialist material and spiritual civilization in rural areas. A considerable portion of the countryside lacks cultural facilities, and the young peasants there are unable to enjoy an adquate cultural life. In a number of places, feudal superstition and gambling have become prevalent, and materials propagating sex and violence, and other products of vulgar taste have made their way into the countryside. This has seriously harmed the physical and mental health of rural youth.

The circular asks all localities to fully understand the importance of and need to build rural "homes for youth," approaching the task as a concrete step in building socialist spiritual civilization in the countryside.

The circular asks all localities to work hard to make "home for youth" a political and educational front, a classroom for learning science, technology, and the liberal arts, a window for the exchange of information on how to prosper, and a place for entertainment and sports. As an ideological education front, the home should try to educate the peasants in the current situation and tasks, the party's policies, and communist ideology, to organize young peasants to contribute ideas on building socialist material and spiritual civilization, to promote civilized village ethics, to disseminate legal knowledge, to oppose feudal superstition and gambling, and to stop arranged and mercenary marriages, wasteful wedding ceremonies, and other outdated customs. As a classroom for learning science, technology, and the liberal arts, it should introduce and disseminate advanced, practical production technologies, conduct spare-time learning activities and technical training, and popularize science. As a window for information exchanges, it should subscribe to various newspapers and periodicals for villagers to obtain commodity information, and it should organize the exchange of experience in commodity production and business operations, explore ways to develop production and operations, sponsor discussions and make suggestions on prosperity measures suitable for local conditions. As a place for entertainment and sports, it should set up television or entertainment rooms, based on local conditions, conduct healthy entertainment and sports activities from time to time, organize colorful, popular theatrical performances and games during slack farming seasons and holidays, set up newspaper, magazine, and book reading rooms, organize reading and book review activities among youths, as well as various hobby groups.

CHEN GUANGYI, HU PING DISCUSS FUJIAN AGRICULTURE

OW172359 Fuzhou FUJIAN RIBAO in Chinese 8 Jun 86 p 1

[Dispatch by reporter Chen Xicong]

[Excerpts] A meeting of agricultural bureau directors of prefectures, cities, and some counties of Fujian Province closed on 7 June. The meeting was held by the Fujian provincial department of agriculture. This reporter learned from the meeting that the provincial party committee, attaching great importance to present agricultural production, was briefed on the meeting's proceedings, and it put forward important opinions on how to promote agricultural production.

During the briefing, Comrade Chen Guangyi emphasized: We should never slacken our efforts for agricultural production and must work in accordance with the guidelines of the Central Document No 1. We should comprehensively implement the principle of "never relaxing efforts to increase grain production and develop a diversified rural economy." We should steadily increase grain production, further exploit mountain and marine natural resources, and make the diversified rural economy develop better.

Comrade Hu Ping emphasized the need to pay attention to this year's grain production and diversified undertakings. He particularly pointed out: Leading cadres at all levels should correctly appraise the situation of the agricultural front and should not be unrealistically optimistic. In order to increase agricultural production this year, we must make great efforts.

The meeting of agricultural bureau directors studied the opinions of the leading members of the provincial CPC Committee and the provincial government and analyzed the situation of Fujian's agricultural production in the current season. Generally speaking, the early rice crop this year is growing more promisingly than last year's. However, the task of fulfilling this year's grain production plan is very arduous, because the output of spring crops decreased, this year's planting plans for wheat, barley and early rice were not completely fulfilled, and the possibility of natural disasters must be taken into account. The participants deemed it necessary to plant additional crops, practice interplanting, plant autumn grain now, and strive to plant more in order to harvest more.

HAN PEIXIN ADDRESSES THEORETICAL WORK FORUM IN JIANGSU

OW230626 Nanjing XINHUA RIBAO in Chinese 14 Jun 86 p 1

[Speech by Han Peixin at the Forum of Theoretical Workers on 12 June 1986 -- XINHUA RIBAO headline]

[Excerpts] Today, the Jiangsu Provincial CPC Committee has invited the theoretical workers in Nanjing to attend this forum. This forum aims primarily at hearing the ideas and views of the comrades in the theoretical field. Let us discuss how to further develop theoretical work in Jiangsu and help it meet the needs in carrying out reforms and construction work.

First of all, what has Jiangsu accomplished in doing theoretical work in the past few years? I believe Jiangsu has attained remarkable achievements in doing theoretical work.

Those comrades in the field of theoretical study have done a great deal of work. In the past several years, Jiangsu has witnessed a fine situation in economic work and made initial progress in carrying out reforms. Naturally, all this is inseparable from the strenuous efforts made by the comrades in the field of theoretical study.

The broad masses of theoretical workers are extremely concerned over the developments in carrying out economic construction and promoting reforms. They have carefully studied and explored the new situations and issues in the course of practice, and theoretically epitomized the new experiences created by the masses. They have scored remarkable achievements in this regard. The province's contingent of theoretical workers is being expanded. The number of young and middle-aged theoretical workers is rapidly increasing. Our practice in carrying out reforms and promoting the modernization program has greatly stimulated the study of theories in the province. This is the main aspect.

However, our comrades have also realized that in order to meet the present needs in carrying out reforms, opening the country to the outside world, and developing the modernization program, our theoretical work still lags behind, we are still not active enough in theoretical study, and we still lack major achievements in the study of theories and in putting such theories into practice. We are determined to change the situation of theoretical study's lagging behind practice. In the past, the provincial CPC committee paid little attention to theoretical work. It very seldom contacted comrades in the theoretical field to discuss issues. From now on, it is necessary to improve this situation. The provincial CPC Committee has decided to further strengthen its work in the realm of ideology, and regard its efforts in this regard as something important in developing spiritual civilization. This is the first point of view I wish to mention.

The second point of view I wish to mention concerns the relations between theoretical work and reform. Our on-going reform has not only proposed new themes and imposed higher demands on the theoretical workers, but also provided rich soil and fine conditions for nursing and developing theories. Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, we have gradually extended our reform from the rural areas to the cities, scoring tremendous achievements. The various achievements made in our province in economic construction and social development are inseparable from our efforts in carrying out reform. Comrade Deng Xiaoping has repeatedly pointed out that reform is China's second revolution. In the course of bringing about profound changes, our reform will inevitably affect economic relations and the interests of all sectors of life in society, and greatly influence people's behavior, concepts, mentality, human relations, and mode of life. If we fail to handle the situation well, there will be problems of one kind or another as well as risks. All this calls for our efforts to carry out theoretical work even better.

The third point of view I wish to mention here is that I wish to take this opportunity to discuss some issues with the comrades in the theoretical field. Those issues are ones we have encountered in the course of carrying out reform and developing the two civilizations. I wish to invite the comrades in the theoretical field to join their efforts in studying and discussing these issues.

In carrying out reform and construction, we need theoretical guidance. First of all, we need the guidance of Marxism. Here we have the issue of how to persistently advocate and develop Marxism.

Since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee, the party Central Committee has conducted brave explorations in building socialism with Chinese characteristics and made creative contributions to enriching and developing Marxism. In what way can our theoretical workers epitomize and elucidate all these explorations and contributions accurately and in an overall manner? How can we theoretically summarize and epitomize what was created by the masses and proven by practice as correct in the course of carrying out reform and developing the modernization program? Also, how can we theoretically epitomize the new ways we have found and the new experiences we have accumulated in developing township industries, building small townships, and promoting lateral economic ties?

The fourth point of view I wish to mention involves the study of theories. At the national party conference held last September, Comrade Deng Xiaoping stressed the significance in the study of Marxist theories. He called on the whole party to "study basic Marxist theories in light of the new situation." With regard to this issue, our leading comrades must take the lead in studying Marxism well, and must create a pleasant atmosphere for studying Marxism. We must repeatedly study some basic Marxist works and some major works written by Comrade Mao Zedong. We must also study Marxist theories in close connection with our new experiences in order to continuously raise our standards for theoretical work and improve our ways of thinking and our work methods. Also, the important documents made public since the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee and the important speeches made by central leading comrades should be considered Marxist works. We must conscientiously study them.

We have understood the situation well and learned a great many things at this forum. From now on, we will adequately hold more forums like this one. We also welcome comrades to continue to express their views and offer their suggestions to the provincial CPC Committee through various channels and in various forms. I believe that through our common efforts, we will definitely be able to further develop and promote our theoretical work and our socialist material civilization and spiritual civilization vigorously.

SHANGHAI JIAOTONG UNIVERSITY MARKS 90TH ANNIVERSARY

OW092220 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 0000 GMT 9 Jun 86

[Text] According to our reporter Jiang Xiaoqing, over 20,000 people, comprising alumni from home and abroad, faculty members, and students of Shanghai's Jiaotong University, gathered in high spirits yesterday morning at the Square of Democracy on the campus for a ceremonious meeting to mark the 90th anniversary of this university's founding.

Ulanhu, Lu Dingyi, Zhang Aiping, and Rui Xingwen wrote inscriptions for the occasion.

At the meeting, Mayor Jiang Zemin, as an alumnus extended warm greetings to this university on behalf of the municipal CPC Committee and government. He spoke highly of the remarkable achievements made by the university in reforming its education system, training competent persons, and conducting scientific research. He said the primary task of university education is to cultivate students into new people who have high ideals and moral integrity and who are well educated and self-disciplined. Bold steps should be taken to change all thoughts, contents, and methods of education that are incompatible with our socialist modernization program.

It is imperative to change the old tradition practice of divorcing education from the economic work in society and the old traditional outmoded criteria for defining competent people and, instead, uphold the viewpoint which emphasizes cultivating the students' intelligence and skills.

The precursor of Jiaotong University in Shanghai, Nanyang Public Institute, was founded in 1986. During the 90 years since then, as many as 46,000 people graduated from its various departments, and some 1,000 from its graduate schools. In particular, since 1978 when reform of the education system began, both the educational and scientific research work of this university have taken on a new look. In scientific research alone, it has accomplished some 1,400 research projects. Among them, more than 300 have won awards from the state, from ministries or commissions at the central level, or from departments at the provincial or municipal level. Now Jiaotong University has been included as one of the key units in the state construction program.

Yang Haibo, vice minister of the State Education Commission, who had made a special trip to Shanghai for the occasion, also addressed the meeting and extended congratulations.

Other municipal leaders attending the ceremony were Wu Bangguo, Wang Daohan, Chen Tiedi, Mao Jingquan, Zhao Zukang, Yang Kai, and Yang You.

The meeting was followed by the unveiling of the statues of (Sheng Xuanhuai) and (Tang Wenzhi), founder and 14th president respectively of Jiaotong University in Shanghai.

SHANGHAI INCREASES NEW TECHNOLOGY APPLICATIONS

OW181306 Beijing XINHUA in English 1122 GMT 18 Jun 86

[Text] Shanghai, June 18 (XINHUA) -- Shanghai, China's biggest industrial center, is taking steps to put new technologies into production, according to a local official. The municipal government has designated micro electronics, new materials, bio-engineering, optical-fibres, lasers, marine engineering and robotics as its key development fields.

So far, Shanghai has promoted the use of 13,000 micro computers in metallurgy, light, chemical, machinery and textile industries, and in post and telecommunications, transport, radio and television.

When a 256-line computer-controlled cable transmission system was put into operation, the average time for each cable was shortened to three minutes from 37, and the fault rate was greatly cut, the official said.

The Shanghai institute of silicate research under the Chinese Academy of Sciences together with six other research institutions and some factories have promoted the utilization of research results in optical-fibre telecommunication technology. The city can now produce terminals and optical components. Optical-fibre telecommunication systems have been used in the city's urban telephone service, power industry, radio, television, public security and transport.

Shanghai is also establishing a number of new technology experiment and development centers. Cooperating with the Chinese Academy of Sciences, such centers are being built for biological engineering, new chemical materials, large-scale integrated circuits and application of radiation technology in keeping vegetables fresh.

GUANGDONG COMMENTARY URGES STIMULATING PEASANTS' ENTHUSIASM

HK210457 Guangzhou Guangdong Provincial Service in Mandarin 0300 GMT 21 Jun 86

[Station commentary: "Fundamentally Stimulate the Peasants' Enthusiasm for Agricultural Work"]

[Text] In recent years, large number of laborers in parts of Guangdong have poured into township enterprises, where income is relatively high. This is particularly the case in the Zhu Jiang Delta, where such enterprises are more developed. They are unwilling to engage in agricultural production, where income is relatively low.

This situation shows that there are indeed backward points in current agricultural production. For instance, there is the practice of sticking to one seed strain for many years; technology in dealing with plant diseases and insect pests is weak; production costs are high and economic results low. These things affect the peasants' enthusiasm for agricultural work.

The experience of (Lesu) District in Shunde County in popularizing advanced technology, improving the conditions for agricultural production, and raising agricultural economic results is therefore a fundamental measure for stimulating the peasants' enthusiasm for working in agriculture, and should be recommended.

SINO-FOREIGN JOINT VENTURES THRIVE IN GUANGZHOU

HK190804 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0240 GMT 13 Jun 86

[Text] Guangzhou, 13 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- There are now 471 Chinese-foreign joint ventures and cooperative enterprises in Guangzhou which have obtained business licenses, a 100 percent increase over 1984.

Of these enterprises, the number of large and medium-sized projects has markedly increased and the number of productive projects has risen year by year. Before 1984, investments amounting to more than $5 million were concentrated on a small number of projects such as guest houses, large buildings, residential houses, and the Guangzhou-U.S. Food Company. Over the past 2 years, however, in addition to the tertiary industries, which have continuously developed, there have been 13 industrial and agricultural projects with an investment amount of more than $5 million each. The investment amounts of eight of them are about $10 million or above. For example, the total investment amount of the Guangzhou Peugeot Automobile Company using Chinese and French capital is $180 million. The number of productive projects exceeds 60 percent of the total.

A growing number of foreign businessmen have come to Guangzhou to make investments. The areas from which foreign capital is introduced have spread from Hong Kong and Macao to Southeast Asia, Europe, the United States, Japan, and other regions. Of the contracts signed last year, the investment amount of foreign businessmen accounted for one-third of the total.

Most of the Chinese-foreign cooperatave enterprises which have gone into production or started business have attained quite satisfactory economic results.

According to incomplete statistics, most of the 233 Chinese-foreign joint ventures and cooperative enterprises which have gone into production or started business are operating at a profit. Last year they made a total profit of more than $30 million and exported goods valued at about $20 million.

SHENZHEN ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT STRATEGY, POLICY OUTLINED

HK191324 Beijing JINGJIXUE ZHOUBAO in Chinese 8 Jun 86 p 1

[Report by Guo Yanchun: "Meeting on the Strategy for Developing the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone Held in Beijing"]

[Text] A meeting on the strategy for developing the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone was held in Beijing on 24 May. Present at the meeting were Yu Guangyuan, Qian Jaiju, Huan Xiang, Fan Muchao, Ji Chongwei, Xue Baoding and other experts and scholars. The meeting specifically discussed two questions.

First, the orientation of opening up to the outside world for the Shenzhen Special Economic Zone: Many scholars hold that the outward orientation is correct because it is a basic feature of distinguishing between the special economic zone and other areas. The policy of outward orientation should include: 1) the special economic zone must be geared to the capitalist world, and particularly to develop countries; 2) the funds for construction of the special economic zone should basically be foreign investment funds; 3) production in the special economic zone should be mainly export-oriented and there must be a balance between income and expenditure of foreign exchange.

Second, the selection of production structure in the special economic zone: Participants in the meeting believed that the key to the question lies in how to handle the relationship between industry and trade. Practically, there are two different points of view. Comrades who advocate "giving first place to industry" believe that only when priority is given to industry, and efforts are made to develop modern technology industry and build strong industrial bases, will it be possible to make full use of the role of importing advanced technology and management knowledge, and lay a solid material foundation for trade and economic development in the special economic zone. Only then will it be possible to make up for shortages of natural resources, technology and trained people. However, comrades who advocate "giving priority to trade" believe that Shenzhen should make vigorous efforts to promote import and export trade, as well as entrepot trade, in order to build itself into a large commercial city between China and other countries and develop into a trade center of our country which lays stress on the export and entrepot trade, as well as a shopping, financial, and tourist center.

DEMOCRACY IN SHENZHEN'S SHEKOU 'AID' TO SUCCESS

OW211150 Beijing XINHUA in English 0625 GMT 21 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 21 (XINHUA) -- The democratic polling system practised in the Shekou industrial area close to Hong Kong is a crucial aid to its future success, a senior Shekou official was quoted as saying today. Sheko is part of the Shenzhen [special] Economic Zone in Guangdong Province, where investors from Hong Kong, Macao and overseas enjoy preferential treatment such as low tax rates.

Yuan Geng, chairman of the area's Administrative Committee, said in an article in today's "GUANGMING DAILY": "In this area, a high level of socialist democracy is the key to the implementation of the open policy and economic reforms." "To achieve a high level of democracy," he said, "the people should have the right to elect, supervise and recall officials."

He said Shekou was particularly suitable for the practising of democratic voting because it was economically developed and its administrative efficiency was high. Its residents were well educated and had a good concept of democracy. "We've followed the practice of promoting officials through public polls within the area since 1982," he said. "Workers can decide through ballots on the promotion or demotion of officials." This had removed the "iron chair" -- or life tenure -- of leading officials, and encouraged efficiency.

Members of the Administrative Committee, Shekou's top tier of local government, are elected by secret ballot every two years. The area's 15,000 residents over the age of 18 choose the nine committee members from a larger list of candidates. In addition, electors cast "trust" votes every year for the nine representatives. Any committee member receiving majority disapproval from the voters must stand down.

Yuan said two committees had so far been elected by secret ballot, and a draft election law had been passed. In April, all members of the second committee won majority trust in a poll and kept their seats.

"Our committee frequently holds press conferences to answer questions about enterprise management and the area's administrative and economic results," he said. "We encourage academic organizations to comment on our committee's policies and measures, and the masses to criticize leaders by name."

Sixty-eight percent of the local work force is engaged in the manufacturing industry.

HAINAN: COMMENTATOR'S ARTICLE ON LESSONS OF LIN TAOSEN CASE

HK230519 Haikou Hainan Island Service in Mandarin 0300 GMT 22 Jun 86

[Report on 21 June NANFANG RIBAO commentator's article: "Deep Thoughts Aroused by the Heavy Sentenced Passed on Lin Taosen"]

[Excerpts] Lin Taosen, former member of the Standing Committee of the Hainan Regional CPC Committee and director of the Organization Department, engaged in criminal activities during Hainan's large-scale import and resale of automobiles for profit. He degenerated from a leading cadre shouldering heavy responsibilities into a speculator committing serious crimes, for which he has been sentenced to life imprisonment by the judicial organs. Following this heavy punishment, people must inevitably ponder deeply what this case shows and what profound lessons should be drawn from it.

The Lin Taosen case occurred under conditions of reform and opening up the world. It profoundly shows that an environment of peace with merry songs and dances is just as severe a test as an environment of war with roaring guns and a hail of bullets. So many people who were not felled on the battlefield were hit by sugar-coated bullets in peacetime.

This was because they were always highly vigilant against armed enemies but relaxed vigilance and became apathetic with regard to decadent exploiting-class ideology in an environment of peace.

Lin Taosen was an old cadre who joined the CCPC in 1941. He joined the Qiongyai Column when he was 13. The crimes he committed amid a peaceful environment profoundly show that if an old cadre who has undergone party education for many years abandons political studies, neglects ideological remolding, and replaces faith in communism with worship of capitalism, he may degenerate amid the new conditions of opening up to the world and invigorating the domestic economy, and turn into a criminal. Lin Taosen precisely evolved from ideological wavering into political degeneracy. Hence, our old cadres and old party members must certainly not give themsleves a privileged position on the question of ideological remolding.

The facts of Lin Taosen's crimes show yet again that turning the powers in one's hands into a means for pursuing private interests in a marked characteristic of current criminal activities in the economic sphere. This is an outstanding problem.

In January 1983, Wang Zhong, former secretary of the Haifeng County CPC Committee in Guangdong, paid the supreme penalty for bribery and corruption. More than 3 years later, Lin Taosen, former member of the Standing committee of the Hainan Regional Taosen, former member of the Standing Committee of the Hainan Regional CPC Committee and director of the Organization Department, has been sentenced to life imprisonment for speculation. It is evident from this that no matter how strict the law, there will always be people who want to try their luck against the law. There is nothing strange about this, because we are in a great flood-tide of opening up and reform, and every time such a tide comes, it brings a mixture of good and bad. To open up to the world and enliven the domestic economic is our basic national strategy. After the dregs and dross have been washed away, the great flood-tide will roll on with even more grandeur, and reform and opening up will develop still more healthily.

HENAN GOVERNOR ON PLANT MANAGER, PARTY SECRETARY RELATIONS

HK140611 Zhengzhen Henan Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 13 Jun 86

[Excerpts] Governor He Zhukang inspected work in Anyang City from 8 to 11 June. He stressed that it is essential to persevere in reform, manage the enterprises with strictness, and promote industrial production.

He Zhukang said: All urban work must be closely centered on economic construction. In the final analysis, work performance must be judged by the development of production and the improvement of economic results. We are opposed to one-sided pursuit of output value and growth. However, we must have the guiding idea of ever striving upward. We can produce more if there are sales outlets for our goods and sources of raw materials.

Apart from visiting Anyang, He Zhukang also inspected work in Xinxiang and Hebi, focusing on questions of industrial production and practicing the plant manager responsibility system. His inspection lasted 9 days. In light of various experiences and lessons, He Zhukang advanced a number of views on correctly handling relations between the plant manager and the party committee secretary.

He said: Practicing the plant manager responsibility system is the decision of the central authorities and marks a major reform in the leadership setup of China's enterprises.

We must correctly understand and practice the party committees' role as guarantee and supervisor. At present the main thing is to persevere in reform and ensure that plant manager responsibility system is practiced. This is an extremely important reason why the system has been practiced relatively well in a number of large and medium enterprises.

It is necessary to draw up specific regulations regarding division of responsibilities between the plant manager and the party secretary, together with their work systems and policymaking procedures. We should gradually systematize and legalize these things.

The Behi City refractory materials plant and other units have drawn up work regulations for the plant manager, party secretary, and workers' congress. Anyang City has proposed three divisions and three unities: division of responsibility and unity of thinking; division of work and unity in aim; and division of system and unity in relations. These are good methods to refer to.

An enterprise is an entity. It is essential to have an integrated set of work systems for its party and government organs. We cannot have two carts travelling side by side, each with its own system. At present there are still two sets of structures in many enterprises. Apart from duplication, there is also buck-passing and a great deal of wasted energy. The two sets should be merged into one and be responsible both to the plant manager and the party secretary in accordance with division of work.

The secretary should support a decision taken by the manager within the framework of the powers given the latter by the state. If there is a difference of opinion, the secretary should still respect the manager's decision, so long as the question is one of principle. If there is a difference of views on major issues, a party committee meeting or a plant management committee can be held to discuss the matter; or else it can be referred to the upper level for a decision.

Both the plant manager and the secretary must put reform and production in first place. They must also have more contacts and consultations with each other. They must respect each other. The secretary must be broad-minded and spontaneously switch from his policymaking status to the role of guarantee and supervisor. On the other hand, the plant manager must correctly exercise his powers, and rely on the party committee and the plant management committee. He must be skilled in coordinating the wisdom of everyone to do his work well. The plant manager must take a correct view of the opinions of his comrades and the investigations carried out by the upper-level departments.

He Zhukang pointed out: At present the various relationships involved in practicing the plant manager responsibility system have not been harmonized well. The leading departments must take a positive attitude in investigating and analyzing the problems and help to solve them. This is an important task in service work.

SHANXI FORUM DISCUSSES MALPRACTICES IN CADRE SELECTION

HK210316 Taiyuan Shanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 20 Jun 86

[Excerpts] The Organization Department of the provincial CPC Committee recently held a forum of prefectural and city CPC Committee Organization Department directors to discuss the further implementation of the CPC Central Committee's instruction on selecting and appointing cadres in strict accordance with the party principles.

Lu Gongxun, member of the Standing Committee of the provincial CPC Committee and director of the Organization Department, spoke on a number of major things to be grasped in organization work in the second half of the year. He stressed that we must continue to investigate and deal with malpractices in cadre selection and appointment and promote a fundamental turn for the better in party style.

He said: The party organizations and the organization and personnel departments must continue to implement in depth Central Document No 4, the CPC Central Committee instruction on strictly acting according to party principles in selecting and appointing cadres, and the Shanxi Provincial CPC Committee's Document No 22, on serious implementing Central Document No 4. We must get a still better grasp on checking on and correcting malpractices in cadre selection and appointment. We must overcome fear of difficulties, strengthen confidence, and boldly tackle tough problems. We must deal severely with people who, on the cadre employment question, engage in malpractices and favoritism, pursue factionalism, and even abuse their powers. Those who are not suitable for work in the organization and personnel departments must be transferred elsewhere.

SHANXI COMMENTARY STRESSES MERIT APPOINTMENTS, NOT FAVORITISM

HK210314 Taiyuan Shanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 20 Jun 86

[Station commentary: "Persevere in Appointing People on Merit, Oppose Appointing People by Favoritism"]

[Excerpts] Whether in personnel work to persevere in appointing people on their merits and pursue great unity or to appoint people by favoritism and organize small cliques represents a crux in the frequent appearance of contradictions within the party. If this problem cannot be correctly viewed and handled, it will affect the unity of the leadership groups and the cadres, and will also have an adverse impact on the selection of talented people.

As a result of bringing order out of chaos in recent years, the party committees at all levels are able to implement the Central Committee's line of organization work. However, a few leading cadres lack sufficient awareness and do not perform well enough in this respect. For instance, when recommending and selecting cadres, certain people always focus on the small cliques with which they are familiar, introducing old fellow provincials, fellow students, fellow subordinates, and so on. They simply want to select such people regardless of whether or not they meet the criteria. Some comrades draw demarcation lines according to factions and gangs; they cannot praise enough those who belonged to the same faction or gang as them, while describing as shortcomings the strong points of people who belonged to other factions or gangs. Some even insert sons, daughters, and relatives in the leadership groups or important work departments who are fundamentally unsuitable for the posts [words indistinct].

As a result, contradictions are always being caused between comrades who uphold principles and comrades who appoint people by favoritism. Unprincipled disputes also break out among them, and they have no common language on the question of personnel appointments. This has a serious impact on our proper employment of cadres.

It must be pointed out that to draw demarcation lines according to family relationships or factions and to cultivate personal forces is a wrong method of handling cadre issues. Cadres are all party cadres, and cannot be divided into yours and mine. Lower-level cadres should not seek defenders and backers and regard themselves as belonging to a particular person. Cadres are promoted by the party organization, and should not be regarded as being promoted by any particular person.

The most fundamental thing in handling contradictions over the cadre issue is to uphold the party's cadre line of appointing people on their merits and oppose appointing people by favoritism. This demands that certain comrades eliminate the backward, obsolete, feudal and patriarchal ideas in their minds. It is also essential to eliminate the remnants of factionalism.

We must broaden our vision with regard to promoting talented people and focus on able cadres who are not familiar to us instead of only looking at the small clique that we know. We must implement the Central Committee's criteria and procedure for selecting and appointing cadres. The masses should recommend them, the organization should examine them, the party committee should study the matter collectively, and things should be decided in line with the jurisdiction over cadre management. We must also enforce strict organization work discipline. We must by no means indulge people who pay no heed to this discipline and abuse their powers on the cadre issue. They must be criticized or punished as appropriate.

Only by doing these things can we speak a common language on the cadre issue and eliminate a point at which contradictions in the party become acute.

SHANXI: CRACKING DOWN ON ECONOMIC CRIME EMPHASIZED

HK220243 Taiyuan Shanxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 2200 GMT 21 Jun 86

[Excerpts] A provincial conference on cracking down on economic crime concluded in Taiyuan on 21 June. The meeting stressed that it is essential to have a correct view of the situation, mobilize the whole party and people for a general battle, vigorously tackle major and important cases, and produce tangible results.

Wang Jiangong, deputy secretary of the provincial CPC Committee, spoke at the meeting. He said: We must focus on investigating and dealing with major economic crimes committed by party and state work personnel, especially cadres at and above county-level. In this work, the party committees, discipline inspection commissions, and political and legal work departments must take an upright and firm stand in breaking through relationship networks, and resolutely dealing with the cases in accordance with party discipline and state law. They must certainly not discard principles and, still less, protect offenders.

The current phenomenon of weakness and ineffectiveness in tackling major and important cases, which exists in a few places, is caused by failure to strictly enforce the law [words indistinct]. Such cases must be investigated and tackled without exception, no matter where they occur and which units and persons are involved. We must certainly not be short-handed in this matter.

KMT, NONPARTISAN LEGISLATORS EXCHANGE VIEWS

OW250405 Taipei CNA in English 0232 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Text] Taipei, June 24 (CNA) -- Seven Kuomintang and nonpartisan legislators dined together Tuesday noon for the first time to increase their mutual understanding and exchange views on matters of mutual concern.

Political observers in Taipei said they believe the holding of such a gathering will help reduce misunderstandings and ease tension between the two groups of legislators in future sessions of the Legislative Yuan.

The gathering has attracted wide attention from people in this nation because it was held after the third communication meeting between three deputy secretaries general of the KMT Policy Coordination Committee and seven members of the Nonpartisan Public Policy Research Association was shelved early this month.

Participants in the lunchoen stressed that they attended the gathering mainly to welcome nonpartisan legislator Hsu Jung-hu, who has just returned from a visit to the United States and to extend congratulations to KMT legislator Hsiao Tien-tsan who has been appointed a minister without portfolio, and they denied any political implications involved in such a gathering.

The three KMT legislators who attended the luncheon were Liang Su-jung, Hsiao Tien-tsan and Chou Mu-wen, and the four nonpartisan legislators were Chiang Peng-chen, Hsu Jung-shu, Chang Chun-hsiung and Fei Hsi-ping.

NONPOLITICAL CONTACTS EXPLORED WITH COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

[Text] Fresh from the experience of "direct talks" with Beijing over the China Airlines incident, Taipei is further exploring non-political contacts with communist countries. This may bring about many contacts between Taiwan and the mainland, and at the same time re-establish the regime's status in the international arena.

In a new move, the Taiwan Government has in principle agreed that the match between its national basketball team and its Soviet counterpart in Moscow will be televised to the island's audience. This will be a departure from a years-old rule that bans telecasting of matches with communist countries. Government spokesman Dr Chang King-yuh said last week the issue is now under study by the Government Information Office and other government units.

"In principle, it is hoped that based on an open attitude the case can be treated as an individual one," he said. Taipei has banned the telecasting of matches involving communist countries in the current soccer World Cup based on an old rule.

Lately, Taiwan has displayed greater flexibility in its relations with communist countries. Besides sending its national women's basketball team to Moscow for the 10th World Women's Basketball Championships in August, another team will leave for Prague for a tennis tournament next month.

The reasons given by the government are that sports should be separate from politics and the approval does not run counter to the basic national policies.

Indications are that Taiwan is increasingly applying the "apolitical" principle on its contacts with the communist countries. Earlier this month, the Taiwan team met the mainland team in the basketball tournament in Kuala Lumpur. The Taiwan Government said this did not violate its policy towards Beijing.

The FREE CHINA JOURNAL published by Dr Chang, who is director-general of the Government Information Office, said the approval of sending sport teams to communist countries has the support of Taiwan people. It quoted a poll by Taiwan's UNITED DAILY NEWS that 83 per cent of the interviewees in Taipei endorsed the decision. The journal further defended the decision, saying Taipei is always strongly opposed to and protests against polluting the international sports scene with politics.

"Whatever the reasons, it is wrong and unfair to deprive athletes from any nation of the right to participate in international sports."

Observers are interested to see to what extent the principle of "sports separate from politics" will be applied in other fields. Academic events are naturally one other arena where the principle could be applied. But will it be applied to, say, family reunions between relatives on the mainland and Taiwan? And will it be applied to international organisations, such as the Asian Development Bank, which is involved more in the economy than politics?

Taipei's face-to-face talks with Beijing over the return of the China Airlines jumbo cargo plane and its crewmen last month has some bearing on the government's display of greater flexibility.

The FREE CHINA JOURNAL said drawing on the experience on the talks, "we believe that only by striking back against Beijing's invisible war, will the Republic of China win support from and stand upright in the world community." It said: "Given our current social, economic and political progress, we are confident in facing any challenges from Communist China.

"All the people-to-people exchanges ... should be encouraged. Only through such contacts can it be shown that the ROC's [Republic of China] system and experience are the only roads to develop a better tomorrow for the one billion Chinese people."

CHIANG WEI-KUO DISCUSSES IMPORTANCE OF COMMUNICATING WELL

HK231340 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE in Chinese 1230 GMT 23 Jun 86

[Report: "Chiang Wei-kuo Stresses the Need To Pay Serious Attention to Agreement on Major Issues While Tolerating Minor Differences in Communication" -- ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE headline]

[Text] Hong Kong, 23 Jun (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) -- According to Taipei sources, on a public occasion, Mr Chiang Wei-kuo, the newly appointed secretary general of Taiwan's "Security Council," suggested that in the face of disputes and conflicts, an organization or an individual should seek common understanding in terms of general principles and general directions, while displaying mutual respect and tolerating "minor differences" over minor issues and issues that would not produce adverse effects on public interests.

He stressed: This coexistence of "major agreement and minor differences" is one of the spiritual goals of the Chinese culture, which is centered on the principle of the golden mean.

According to the CHINA TIMES, Chiang Wei-kuo said the above when he elaborated on the relations between an individual and the community at a meeting of an organization. This was his first public speech since he assumed his new office.

Quoting the song "Your Me and My You," Chiang Wei-kuo suggested that people should be broadminded enough to be able to "see part of others in themselves and part of themselves in others" and that this spiritual goal of "merging oneself with others" was the essence of the Chinese culture.

Commenting on the issue of "communication," Chiang Wei-kuo, using people speaking different languages as an example, stressed that at a gathering of many people speaking different languages, one should speak the common language, not one's own dialect, and that only by doing this can one communicate efficintly. He maintained that the communication barriers between people are mainly a result of their different attitudes and of different ways they look at things. Thus, he emphatically pointed out that if people always readily accept new concepts and new knowledge, realize that "there is part of themselves in others and part of others in themselves," and respect one another, there will not be any communication barriers.

NATIONAL ASSEMBLY ADVOCATES INCREASED TRADE WITH W. EUROPE

[Text] Taipei, June 22 (CNA) -- The Constitutional Resesrch Council of the National Assembly urged the government Sunday [to] be more active in seeking better mutual relations between this country and West European countries.

In its research report on this topic, the council pointed out that the total population, area, and national gross product of the 12 European Community countries are much higher than that of either Japan or the United States, and that their foreign trade volume is three times larger than that of the United States and six times higher than Japan's, occupying almost 40 percent of the global business. But only 10 percent [of] this nation's business and trade pie is devoted to European nations.

The conditions for upgrading these relations are favorable to the ROC since this country has established 22 trade and commercial offices in these countries in recent years, and in return, 11 European countries have also set up their counterpart offices and 13 European banks are operating branches here, the report stated.

In order to upgrade the nation's relations with West European countries, the council urged the government to take active measures in two general areas:

-- In the political arena, set up a unifying organization authorized to handle certain levels of European affairs; do more research work on European countries; and increase contact with parties and organizations in Europe.

-- In technology, increase contact with important leaders and parliamentarians of European countries; strengthen the functions of Overseas Chinese organizations; invite European journalists to visit the ROC; encourage private Chinese groups to pay visits to European countries; and research European military technological knowhow and induce European nations to transfer it to the ROC.

PRC INCREASES GOLD PRODUCTION, EXPORTS FOR FOREIGN EXCHANGE

[By BUSINESS POST Editor John Mulcahy]

[Excerpt] In an effort to shore up dwindling foreign exchange reserves, China has stepped up gold production and sales, exporting more than 1.8 tons to Hong Kong in March alone, compared with minute quantities before that.

Details of China's gold mining output are sketchy, but Mr Victor Lam, managing director of Shearson Lehman Brothers Bullion (Asia), said in London yesterday China's future output and exports are likely to be much higher than expected.

Addressing the FINANCIAL TIMES "World Gold in 1986" conference, Mr Lam estimated China's gold reserves at 400 tons by the end of last year. On production, Mr Lam said China's private enterprise mines now account for about half the country's total production, and "the government has raised the internal purchase price several times as an incentive."

Speaking on "the view from Hong Kong and Southeast Asia," Mr Lam said China sold gold jewelry valued at about 1.4 billion yuan (about HK$3.41 billion) on the domestic market last year, an increase of more than 300 percent over 1984.

"In Shanghai, the main centre, consumers are going for the finer carat gold jewelry, a sign of the more different affluent times," he said.

PRC TRANSPORT CHANGES EASE INVESTORS' OPPORTUNITIES

HK210442 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 21 Jun 86 BUSINESS STANDARD p 1

[By Eva To]

[Text] China's huge spending plan to upgrade is transport facilities in the next five years has opened the way to massive new business opportunities for Hong Kong and other foreign investors. China recently resolved to spend about US$10 billion upgrading its railway system, as well as US$3 billion (RMB [renminbi] 10 billion) on ports and place orders for at least 300 new aircraft in the next five years.

The size of such investments is very significant, given Beijing's recent policy of holding back infrastructural spending for fear of a renewed unco-ordinated over-expansion of the country's economy. With the massive volume of transhipment of goods to China through Hong Kong, local transport and freight forwarding companies are expected to benefit greatly by its upgrading move of China's transportation network, China analysts said.

Since the opening up of China in 1979, a mushrooming volume of consumer goods, in addition to cargo supplies related to China's infrastructural and industrial development, have been transhipped through Hong Kong. These include the transhipment of supplies for nearby projects like the Daya Bay nuclear powr plant, the 1,100 megawatt power station at Tai Ping, a floating glass factory in Shekou, a cement plant in Guangzhou and glass and beer factories in Zhuhai.

Mr Paul Woodward, managing editor of CHINA TRANSPORT, believes that trading and consultancy companies based in Hong Kong are also likely to have their business volume boosted as a result of such improvements in China's transport infrastructure. However, as Hong Kong does not have any base in infrastructural construction such as the building of new roads, berths, cranes, ports and airports, Mr Woodward feels that Hong Kong will be able to capitalize indirectly from such developments on the trade front.

Other than Hong Kong companies, foreign investors in general are beginning to take on a greater role in these developments, according to Mr Woodward.

Officials of China's Ministry of Communications recently indicated that negotiations are currently under way with more than 80 foreign companies just on port schemes alone. The Japanese port of Kobe and the World Bank, for example, are heavily involved in a project at Tianjin which is worth some US$250 million.

Railways, described to be "arteries of the national economy" by Chinese officials and which carry some 70 percent of all goods [that] travel in China, have been given high priority in the infrastructural scheme. Electrification of the lines and of the rail offices are among the priority area of development. Computers are being introduced at various management levels, as well.

Mr Woodward believes the rapid expansion of China's economy over the past eight years was the major cause of the enormous strains on the country's transport infrastructure. Given China's huge economy, the size of the task makes it hard for China to have its transport system surge ahead in line with its economic development within a short period of time, analysts said. Though putting money into such systems is an important pre-requisite to improve the transport infrastructure, but Mr Woodward said it is extremely important to know how to spend investment available wisely and put brakes on areas of lower priority.

ONE-THIRD FUJIAN JOINT VENTURES SHORT OF FOREIGN EXCHANGE

[By Olivia Sin]

[Text] About 100 joint ventures in Fujian Province are having problems earning enough foreign exchange to meet their expense and investments, according to a senior provincial official visiting Hong Kong. Mr Gu Ming, Fujian's Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Commissioner, said the problems stemmed from when companies' dependence on imported raw materials and their failure to export finished goods. The 100 problem-cases represent about a third of the joint ventures in Fujian.

Mr Gu said provincial authorities, including officials of the foreign exchange control bureau were taking steps to solve the problems. "Fortunately, their (the ventures) difficulties are not too serious," he said, adding that none of them was the brink of bankruptcy. Among the problem ventures are factories and servicing outlets, including hotels and restuarants.

Analysts said an increasing number of joint ventures in China were suffering shortages of foreign currency either because of a lack of planning or some unforseen difficulty in working in China.

In Guangdong, it was recently reported that more than half the 139 joint ventures sampled in a survey could not balance their foreign exchange accounts. Recognizing the problem, the State Council announced interim regulations some months ago to ease the ventures' difficulties. They included permission for joint ventures to use their yuan earning to buy certain Chinese goods and export them to generate hard currency.

Foreign investors in the problem ventures were also allowed to invest their yuan earnings in other foreign-exchange-generating ventures to compensate for their own shortfall. The regulations permitted the scale of finished goods to other state corporations, in exchange for foreign currency, as a substitute for imports.

Mr Gu said the Fujian authorities were making use of the new regulations to help the struggling ventures. "We have already succeeded in easing the difficulties of number of problem ventures."

Mr Gu is a member of a high-level Fujian delegation visiting Hong Kong to lure investment and technology. The delegates will today address a seminar on Fujian's economy organized by the Hong Kong Trade Development Council. During this visit, Fujian also hopes to start talks with foreign investors on 31 projects ranging from machinery-manufacture and light industry to marine culture.

Apart from the currency issue, Mr Gu admitted that foreign investors faced problems of bureaucracy, low efficiency, sourcing supplies and failure to make profits. But the economic reforms under way in China should help to boost efficiency and reduce red tape.

The Fujian authorities believed investors should reap "reasonable profits" to compensate for their investments and the risks encountered in China.

Between 1979 and last year, Fujian signed agreements for the formation of 699 joint ventures -- 200 of them last year alone. Many, however, are for service industries, contrary to the state's wish to channel foreign investment into the manufacturing sector.

The vice-director of Fujian's Foreign Economic Relations and Trade Commission, Mr Zhang Liang, said the province's exports reached US$409 million last year and imports totalled $600 million. About 30 percent of imports were consumed goods and electrical appliances, imports of which will be curbed this year.

GUIZHOU IMPROVES EXPORT PERFORMANCE BY 95 PERCENT

HK200616 Hong Kong HONG KONG STANDARD in English 20 Jun 86 BUSINESS STANDARD p 4

[By Eva To]

[Text] One of China's backward provinces, Guizhou, has posted record increase of 95 percent in its exports in a year. According to Vice-Governor Mr Liu Yulin, the province's efforts in developing its economic base in recent years has started paying off.

Mr Liu said the annual growth rate of the province's economy has averaged 8 percent in recent years. And the spectacular export performance will provide the foreign exchange funding needed to push vigorously its general economic development.

Guizhou exported goods worth US$22.5 million during the first five months of this year.

During a recent interview with reporters from Hong Kong, the province's senior official said that since 1983, a total of US$22.39 million in foreign investment has been channeled into Guizhou. And the province has imported more than US$60 million of machinery and facilities needed for production during the same period.

To an extent, Mr Liu said, a huge jump in imports is magnified by the relatively low base of such imports in past years. Because of the foreign exchange accumulated during these years it was possible to import so much in 1985, he said.

As a relatively backward region compared with other provinces -- apart from getting a greater share of the funding pie from Beijing -- Guizhou was allowed to retain a greater percentage of its foreign exchange earnings than other provinces.

"In recent years, we managed to get about RMB [renminbi] 700-800 million of subsidy from Beijing each year," he said. Though specific portions of such funds are meant for well-defined purposes, Mr Liu is convinced these funds already constitute a very vital lifeline for the economic development of Guizhou.

While most provinces can only retain less than 30 percent of their foreign exchange earnings for their own development, Guizhou is one of the very few provinces which get the preferential level of more than 30 percent, said Mr Liu. Though such preferential treatment has played a vital role in boosting Guizhou's economic development in the last few years, the vice-governor believed Guizhou will strengthen its own capacity to generate the badly needed development funds. "We used to get blood supply from the central government, but now we are entering into a stage where we shall start manufacturing our own blood," he said.

On investment from other provinces, governor of Guizhou, Mr Wang Chaowen, said incomplete statistics show that more than RMB 150 million has been introduced into Guizhou through 500 economic and technical projects.

The cooperation projects followed a meeting of key leaders of five provinces and municipalities in the land-locked south-western region in 1984 and 1985. The meeting was encouraged by a directive from Beijing.

On export performance, Mr Wang pointed out that structural changes were taking place in the kind of commodities Guizhou exported. "The proportion of industrial and mineral products exported has risen to 60 percent while exports of agricultural produce has dropped to 40 percent since 1980," he said.

"Among the imports, the proportion of machinery and electronic equipment and scientific apparatuses has registered a gradual increase though the imports of means of production are still predominant," he added. Mr Wang stressed that structural changes in the province's imports and exports were essential to meet the changing need for industrial and agricultural development as well as the technical progress of the province.

Though satisfied with the current progress of foreign investment input, Guizhou does not seem to be very happy with the structure of such investment.

Investors from Hong Kong and Macao form the bulk of foreign investment in Guizhou, followed by Singapore, the United States, Italy and Sweden. Most of the investment is in hotels, buildings and other light and service industries. As a province rich in mineral and hydroelectric resources, Guizhou would like to see more future investments to be channeled into such fields, stressed the officials. Admitting that huge investment and the prolonged wait for returns on it may not be appealing to most potential investors, Mr Liu said the investment offered may be modified when such necessity arises.

As part of a drive to improve its communications with the outside world, Guizhou has joined other southwestern provinces in forming a regional airline joint venture with the country's national airline, Civil Aviation Administration of China. In the joint venture, Guizhou will contribute one 737 jet whereas Sichuan will provide the other two.

Guizhou plans to hold its maiden export promotion drive in Hong Kong in August this year.

PRC EASTERN CITIES FORM ECONOMIC COORDINATION BODY

HK200253 Hong Kong ZHONGOUO TONGXUN SHE in Chinese 1411 GMT 18 Jun 86

[Text] Hong Kong, 18 Jun (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) -- News from Nanjing: Today, commissioners and mayors of 15 prefectures and cities in the western part of the lower reaches of the Chang Jiang met in Nanjing to attend the first meeting of the "Nanjing Regional Economic Coordination Association."

The Nanjing region covers an area from Yangzhou and Zhenjiang in the east to Liuan in the west and from Huizhou in the south to Chuxian in the north, consisting of 15 prefectures and cities with 70 counties and cities under them. Its gross industrial and agricultural output value is about 60 billion yuan and it has an economic capability equal to that of a province. In this region, there are two provincial capitals, Nanjing and Hefei, and two well-known historical and cultural cities Nanjing and Yanzhou. There is also Wuhu, one of the four major cities dealing in rice; Maanshan, a rising iron and steel industrial base; and Huang Shan, a famous scenic spot.

Over the past few years, there has been a certain amount of development of lateral economic relations in this region. Nanjing, Zhenjiang, and Yangzhou have established a Nanjing-Zhenjiang-Yangzhou Economic Cooperation Zone and have thus already carried out cooperation and exchanges related to funds, materials and goods, personnel, technology, and information. They have also jointly carried out economic development in other areas. The seven counties and cities in Chuxian Prefecture have established cooperative relations with the seven districts in Nanjing City. Since Nanjing Port was opened up to the outside world, these relations have been strengthened.

This meeting will discuss matters such as the joint development and exploitation of Nanjing port, the establishment of a regional tourism coordination group, the expansion of cooperation related to materials, goods and technology, and the arrangements for funds. The association will hold a meeting every year, sources said. Jiangxi Province and Jiujiang City attended this meeting as observers.

WORLD CONFERENCE ON RELIGION OPENS IN BEIJING

[By Pierre-Antoine Donnet]

[Text] Beijing, June 25 (AFP) -- Buddhist monks, Tibetan lamas, Taoist priests, Catholics, Protestants, Moslems and Jews gathered in the Great Hall of the People Wednesday to open a week-long meeting of the World Conference on Religion and Peace (WCRP). Some 200 representatives of the major world religions began the meeting with meditation for peace and a Catholic prayer recited by the archbishop of Delhi. "We are all brothers and sisters of one human family, under the Lord and father of all," Archbishop Fernandez told religious leaders from around the world taking part in the first WCRP conference to be held in a communist country. Later, the prelate and Catholic leaders from Australia, Canada, France, Italy, Thailand, the United States, West Germany and Zambia, held prayers at Beitang Cathedral, which Chinese authorities allowed to reopen in December.

Several thousand people gathered at the cathedral, and many sought to kiss the hand of the churchmen. Religious worship was banned in China and religious figures were frequently the target of persecution during the 1966-1976 Cultural Revolution and its radical aftermath. Representatives of other religious groups held similar prayer meetings in places of worship around Beijing.

Earlier, Tibet's second-ranking spiritual leader, the Panchen Lama, told the opening session of the WCRP: "Peace is a common goal of all religions as well as a lofty ideal of the whole mankind. "From the bottom of my heart, I hope that the people and religious believers of all countries will closely unite, to make their contributions to lessening world tension, safeguarding world peace." Tibet's spiritual leader, the Dalai Lama, has been in exile in India since a failed anti-Chinese uprising in 1959.

Since 1979, the Chinese authorities have allowed for greater religious freedom. While saying tolerance toward religions is a long-term policy, Beijing openly counts on their eventual disappearance when prosperity is assured for all. WCRP President Nikkyo Niwano said: "It is most significant that this meeting is taking place here in China, a nation that plays a crucial role in world peace."

The WCRP, a non-governmental organization attached to the United Nations, was created in Kyoto, Japan, in 1970. The Beijing conference is being held on the theme of "peace through work and prayer." The secretary-general of the WCRP, Dr. John Taylor, said Tuesday that Vatican authorities were very happy about the conference, which will provide an opportunity for informal contacts between China and the Vatican. China broke off relations with the Vatican in 1957 and created the China Patriotic Catholic Association for the country's three million Catholics.

At Beitang Cathedral, prayers were led by the bishop of Shandong, Zong Huande, head of the Chinese Patriotic Church, and the Bishop of Beijing, Fu Tieshan. Archbishop Francis Quinn of Sacramento said afterward he had been moved by the fact that people of all nationalities "were singing in one language, the whole church." He said his talks in Beijing would focus on peace and disarmament rather than on relations between the China and the Roman Catholic Church. But he added: "I think things are getting closer.

Christian leaders from Czechoslovakia and the Soviet Union were also reported to be taking part in the WCRP gathering. Some of the 30 countries invited to the conference, including Israel, South Korea and South Africa, have no diplomatic relations with China.

Zhao Puchu Addresses Conference

[Text] Beijing, June 25 (XINHUA) -- It is the consistent stand of the peace-loving Chinese religious believers to actively support the activities beneficial to the relaxation of the tense international situation and to safeguard peace and justice, an international gathering of religious believers was told here today.

Addressing the International Council of the World Conference on Religion and Peace (WCRP), Zhao Puchu, president of the Buddhist Association of China and co-chairman of the WCRP, expressed the belief that the convention of the conference would surely promote friendship and cooperation between Chinese and foreign religious believers in their cause of safeguarding world peace. This would also help increase the ties between the WCRP and religious believers of various countries so that WCRP may play a greater role in striving for peace and justice for mankind, Zhao added. Zhao also extended his warm welcome to the more than 100 religious leaders, public figures and scholars from over 30 countries and regions to the gathering.

In his opening remarks, WCRP honorary president Nikkyo Niwano said: "The United Nations has designated this year the International Year of Peace, and it is therefore most significant that this meeting is taking place in China, a nation that plays a crucial role in world peace." The main theme of this meeting is "peace through work and prayer," he said, adding that religions must cooperate to develop conditions for peace.

Congratulating the meeting, the Bainqen Lama, honorary president of the Buddhist Association of China, said the meeting was a matter of great significance. He expressed his sincere hope that the people and religious believers of all countries would unite closely and play their part in reducing world tension, safeguarding world peace and bringing happiness to mankind. It is possible for mankind to achieve a lasting peace through the joint efforts of various peace forces, the Bainqen Lama said.

Angelo Fernandes, honorary president of the WCRP, presided over a prayer for peace.

Jointly sponsored by American and Japanese religious bodies in 1970, the WCRP has called four world conferences at which many declarations of peace were adopted, and this has promoted the progress of the world peace movement, according to a WCRP official. The fourth meeting of the WCRP was attended by more than 600 religious believers from 60 countries and regions and the WCRP International Council was founded at the meeting.

Attending the opening session which took place in the Great Hall of the People here this morning were Zhou Peiyuan, president of the Chinese People's Association for Peace and Disarmament; Ren Wuzhi, director of the Religious Affairs Bureau under the State Council; Zhang Wenjin, president of the Chinese People's Association for Friendship With Foreign Countries; and more than 500 Chinese Buddhists, Taoists, Muslims and Christians. The opening session was followed by a dinner hosted by Zhao Puchu, chairman of the Chinese reception committee, in honor of the participants.

REAGAN WELCOMES SOVIET DISARMAMENT EFFORTS

HK240741 Beijing RENMIN RIBAO in Chinese 21 Jun 86 p 7

[Report from Washington by reporter Zhang Yunwen: "Reagan Welcomes New Efforts of the Soviet Union in Disarmament"]

[Text] Last night, President Reagan said that on the issue of cutting nuclear arms, the Soviet Union "has begun making new efforts." The is the first time Reagan has welcomed the Soviet move on this issue during his 5-odd years' presidency. He also called on the Soviet leaders to agree at an earlier time on the work of preparing another meeting of the heads of the two countries. Reagan made this statement in a speech delivered at a secondary school in Glassboro, New Jersey.

Reagan said: The new development on the arms issue "may be an opportunity" for U.S.-Soviet relations. In the name of peace, he invited Gorbachev to take joint action with him.

Through this speech, Reagan commented for the first time on the new proposals made by the Soviet Union on arms control. He said: We cannot accept these proposals without revision. But it seems that the Soviets have begun making new efforts. Reagan said, "If both parties really want to achieve progress, this may develop a turning point at which the world will become more safe and peaceful." He added: The Soviet's moves on the arms issue have been "very disappointing," but a "new development has recently emerged."

Reagan made these statements under the circumstances in which the U.S. congress and its allied countries responded strongly to the U.S. decision of nullifying the SALT-II agreement. The House of Representatives adopted yesterday by 225 to 145 votes a nonbinding agreement, and urged Reagan to continue to adhere to the SALT agreement. On that same day, the military group of the Senate also passed a similar resolution. Furthermore, the House of Representative's Armed Services Committee decided to cut the allocation of "star wars" funds from $5.4 billion to $3.7 billion.

According to another report, the Soviet diplomats here expressed that the positive signs given by Reagan on the Soviet Union's arms proposals might clear obstacles for the next round of talks between leaders of the two countries.

STAR WARS CONTRACT BETWEEN U.S., UK ANNOUNCED

OW250623 Beijing XINHUA in English 0609 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Text] Washington, June 24 (XINHUA) -- The United States and Britain today issued a joint statement on the signing of a 10 million dollar letter of offer and acceptance between the two nations for a European architecture study for the U.S. Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI), U.S. Defense Department spokesman Robert Sims announced today. Sims also said at a Pentagon regular briefing that additionally, a British laboratory was awarded a 4.3 million dollar contract for the development of high brightness negative ion sources and neutralizer for use in neutral particle beam systems.

The agreements were announced as U.S. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger met with his British counterpart George Younger, who is visiting the U.S. for the first time as secretary of state for defense. Younger is expected to meet with other U.S. officials and visit the North American Air Defense and Space Command in Colorado.

The contracts fall under a memorandum of understanding signed last year by officials of the two countries opening the door for British organizations to participate in President Ronald Reagan's SDI program, commonly known as "star wars".

TASS CONDEMNS PLANNED U.S. NUCLEAR TEST

[Text] Moscow, June 25 (XINHUA) -- The official Soviet news agency TASS today condemned a planned U.S. nuclear test as a challenge to the public opinion of the world. Today's expected underground blast at the Nevada testing site would have a yield of up to 150 kilotons and would be the 13th the U.S. has conducted since the Soviet Union introduced a unilateral moratorium on nuclear tests last August 6. The Soviet moratorium has been further extended to August 6 this year. Moscow has asked the United States to follow suit, but Washington has so far failed to respond.

In defiance of world-wide protests, Washington "stubbornly refuses to halt nuclear explosions," TASS said in its commentary. The decision to extend the moratorium to August 6 demonstrates the extent to which the Soviet Union has exercised restraint, the news agency added. But how long Moscow will observe its self-imposed ban in the race of continued U.S. tests remains to be seen, analysts here say.

TRIPARTITE TALKS PROPOSAL GAINS SUPPORT IN DPRK

OW251726 Beijing XINHUA in English 1518 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Text] Pyongyang, June 25 (XINHUA) -- The proposal for talks among the military authorities of the northern and southern parts of Korea as well as the United States is gaining widespread support in the Democratic People's Republic of Korea (DPRK).

The proposal, put forward by the Supreme Command of the Korean People's Army on June 17, was aimed to ease the tension on the Korean peninsula and remove the military confrontation.

Leaders from a number of political organizations in the North have spoken in public to support the proposal and urged the United States and the South Korean authorities to make prompt response.

Yu Ho-chun, director of the Secretariat of the Central Committee of the Democratic Front for the Reunification of the Fatherland, expressed his high appreciation of the proposal. He said the approach to the proposal is a touchstone by which to test who is seeking peace and who is seeking war.

Hong Ki-mun, vice-chairman of the Committee for the Peaceful Reunification of the Fatherland, asked the United States and South Korea to discard their wrong way of rejecting any proposal of the DPRK and give serious thought to the latest proposal.

Chon Kum-chol, chairman of the DPRK delegation to the preparatory meeting of North-South parliamentary talks, stressed that realization of the proposal, removal of the danger of war and easing of the strained situation will create conditions favorable to the North-South dialogue.

Many people from factories, collective farms, schools and Army units in the North have also voiced their support for the proposal either in newspapers or on television.

Meanwhile, the minister of Korean People's Armed Forces has sent a letter to William Livesey, commander-in-chief of the U.N. forces in South Korea, and Yi Ki-paek, defense minister of South Korea, calling for contacts at Panmunjom on June 27 in preparation for the military talks. But, the U.N. forces and South Korea have reportedly rejected the idea.

[Text] The Korean Government today issued a statement proposing that the Korean peninsula be turned into a peace zone free of nuclear weapons. The statemente includes three proposed measures.

The statement says: At present, in order to safeguard peace and security in Korea, Asia, and the world, an urgent task is to remove all threats of nuclear war on the Korean peninsula. The Korean Government and people hold that in order to prevent nuclear war and strive for lasting peace, it is first necessary to take urgent measures to turn the Korean peninsula into a nonnuclear and peace zone without nuclear weapons and nuclear bases.

This new peace proposal of the Korean Government includes the following points: First, the DPRK Government will not test, produce, store, or import any nuclear weapons and will not permit the establishment of any foreign military bases, including nuclear bases, and will not allow the passage of foreign nuclear weapons through its territorial land, air, or sea areas.

Second, according to the wishes of the Korean people and the peace-loving people throughout the world to turn the Korean Peninsula into a nonnuclear and peace zone, the U.S. Government should stop delivering new nuclear weapons to South Korea, dismantle all the nuclear weapons that have been brought into South Korea in stages, and thoroughly dismantle and withdraw all nuclear weapons in the end. Meanwhile, the U.S. Government should take steps to call off all operational plans to use nuclear weapons on the Korean peninsula.

Third, the DPRK Government is ready to come to the negotiating talbe, no matter what form of negotiations, if the U.S. Government and the South Korean authorities consider it necessary to negotiate on the DPRK proposal for turning the Korean peninsula into a nuclear-free zone and a peace zone.

RENMIN RIBAO EXPLAINS JAPANESE TEXTBOOK ISSUE

[Article by Rong Sheng: "What Is the Japanese 'Textbook Issue' About?"]

[Text] In 1982, the "textbook issue" emerged in Japan and was sternly criticized by public opinion both in Japan and in the world. The Japanese Government promised to correct the errors. However, a few years later, at the end of last May, major Japanese papers one after another reported that the new version of the senior middle Japanese history textbook, written by the "defend Japan national conference" has been examined and regarded as "up to standard" by the textbook examination board of the Japanese Ministry of Education. Generally, all the papers made negative comments on this. The news soon spread and aroused a strong response from relevant Asian countries and regions. On 7 June, our country's Ministry of Foreign Affairs sternly approached Japan over this issue and pointed out that many sections of the book seriously distort historical facts and demanded that the Japanese Government conscientiously implement the spirit of the Sino-Japanese communique and earnestly fulfill the promise that it made in 1982. Many readers asked: Why has the Japanese "textbook issue," which emerged a few years ago, reemerged today, when Sino-Japanese friendly cooperative relations are continuing to develop?

It happened in the following way: In the spring of 1982, the Japanese Ministry of Education proposed to revise, and then examined and approved, a number of textbooks, among which there were some textbooks which distorted historical facts and concealed the truth in quite a lot of their accounts of modern and current history and which attempted to absolve kJapanese militarists from being solely responsible for launching the war of aggression that brought disaster to the whole Asia-Pacific region. For example, they used the ambiguous word "advance" for the undisguised aggression against other countries. As a result, they seriously hurt the feelings of the people in various Asian countries who had suffered from the aggression. Naturally, this incident aroused strong indignation among the people of the countries concerned and was denounced unanimously by the Japanese people and by personages in the Japanese Government and the public.

At lthat time, the Japanese director of the Cabinet Secretariat published a speech saying: "In the Sino-Japanese statement, the Japanese Government said 'it feels keen regret for the great harm that Japan caused the Chinese people to suffer through the war, is aware of its responsibility for it, and expresses deep self-examination.' It has not in the least changed this view now." In the speech, he also said: "This spirit of the Sino-Japanese joint statement ought to be respected in Japanese school education and in examining textbooks. Japan will listen fully to China's and other countries' criticisms concerning problems of this kind related to our country's textbooks and the government will be responsible for the correction of the errors."

The above was the background and grounds for the demand raised in our country's Ministry of Foreign Affairs' note to the Japanese Government saying that the Japanese Government must carry out the spirit of the Sino-Japanese joint statement and earnestly fulfill the promise that it made in 1982.

There are quite a lot of versions of Japanese history textbooks. They are generally written by nongovernmental groups and personages and are finally examined and approved by the Ministry of Education, which does not usually examine and approve only one version of a history textbook.

The above-mentioned textbook is only one of the approved versions and has been written by the "defend Japan national conference." What kind of group is the "defend Japan national conference"? Why has it taken such pains to write a history textbook with so many erroneous accounts? Our readers will know the answers to these questions as soon as they analyze the "publisher's statement" and the views on some major historical incidents in that textbook which has been examined and regarded as "up to standard."

The "publisher's statement" says that it was not until July 1982, when Japan accepted China's and other countries' protests concerning textxbooks and "apologized" to them, that the "defend Japan national conference" began to discuss the textbook issue widely. They "worried" about the "biased accounts" and made up their minds to write a textbook that could make "youngsters love their country's history." Therefore, they spent about 2 years and held dozens of writers' meetings before they finished writing the book and sent it for examination and approval.

How does this book describe some major historical incidents? With what spirit do they want to teach Japanese youngsters? As the length of this article is limited, we only select its major viewpoints for our readers' consideration. Concerning the puppet "Kingdom of Manchuria," which was entirely set up by Japan alone, the book describes it as a new country that was set up under Japan's leadership and which was to develop a "kingdom of happiness" through encouraging "cooperation and concord" among the Japanese, Chinese, Manchurian, Mongolian, and Korean nations. Concerning the "'7 July incident' at Lugou Bridge" and the "Shanghai incident," which Japan purposely provoked in order to expand its war of aggression against China in all all-round manner and occupy the whole of China, the book says that the incidents occurred because "Chiang Kai-shek issued an order for general mobilization and the CPCP's army also took part in the war," and that Japan was forced into the war and thus "spread the war to the whole of China." As for the brutal Nanjing massacre that shocked people all over the world, the book deliberately refrains from mentioning the fact of the butchering of ordinary civilians by the Japanese troops, but on the contrary says that Japanese people did not know of this incident until after the war and that it is necessary to carry out a clear investigation regarding the "truth" of the incident. As for the "Pacific War" launched by Japan, the book says: "At that time, Japan called the war the 'great east Asian war' (the so-called Pacific war), and considered the goal of the war to liberate Asia from the rule of the European and American powers and to build an east Asian co-prosperity sphere under Japanese leadership."

People still remember well what the "kingdom of happiness" and the "east Asian co-prosperity sphere" were. When they were writing the book, the writers boasted that they wanted to be "objective and just" and to "correct biased acounts." However, from the views and accounts cited above, it is not difficult for our readers to see that what they call being "objective and just" is nothing but concealing the facts about the launching of wars of aggression, and that what they call "correcting errors" is in fact aimed at leading astray Japanese youngsters' education in history.

Precisely because of this, this book was first generally denounced in Japan by Japanese people of insight. In its editorial entitled "Why Should Such a Textbook Be Produced Now?" ASAHI SHIMBUN said that from the point of view of the book's contents, it is clearly characterized by willfully refraining from mentioning Japan's role as an evildoer in writing about modern and contemporary wars. The editorial warns: Education must serve posterity and should by no means serve the desires of the old generation of people who attempt to restore old ways! Japan's teachers and staff trade union sharply pointed out that the serious probems with the new textbook are: First, the "imperial Japanese view of history" permeates the whole book; and second, the book carries out no self-examination at all regarding the past war of aggression, on the contrary it describes it as a war of self-defense." Throughout the book, the word "aggression" does not appear, and it withholds the facts about the Nanjing massacre.

Amid loud condemnation at home and abroad, the relevant departments in Japan could not help but give the explanation that the textbook was still under examination and had not received final approval. According to Japanese newspapers, recently, relevant Japanese departments said that the final revised version conformed to the statement made by the director of the Cabinet Secretariat in 1982. If this is the case, our readers will hope that the history textbook really treats history in an "objective and just" manner and draws on lessons from history in order to facilitate log-standing friendship between Japan and its Asian neighbors and bring happiness to Japan's future generations.

ROUNDUP VIEWS TERRITORY TRANSFER IN INDIA

OW220206 Beijing XINHUA in English 0153 GMT 22 Jun 86

["Round-up: Transfer of Chandigarh to Punjab Deferred" by Tan Renxia -- Xinhua headline]

[Text] New Delhi, June 21 (XINHUA) -- On the eve of territorial transfers between two Indian states, Punjab and haryana, Indian Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and Punjab Chief Minister Surjit Singh Barnala yesterday decided to postpone the controversial action until July 15.

Chandigarh has been shared as a capital city by the two states, a situation which has caused on-going headaches. But last July an accord between the prime minister and Sant Longowal, the slain leader of the Sikhs who represent a majority in Punjab was reached by which Chandigarh would be transferred to Punjab but as compensation the Hindi-speaking areas now in Punjab would be ceded to Haryana.

The city of Chandigarh was constructed between 1951-65 as the capital of what was then the state of East Punjab. West Punjab became part of Pakistan. In 1966, East Punjab was reorganized -- the western portion became part of the newly established state of Punjab, the eastern part came under Haryana's administration and the hilly areas were transferred to Himachal Pradesh. Chandigarh became the capital of both Punjab and Haryana and a source of conflict ever since.

The transfer agreement reached by Punjab and Haryana was supposed to have occurred on January 26 this year but was delayed because a government-appointed commission could not identify the areas in Punjab which should go to Haryana in exchange for Chandigarh. Territorial claims and counter-clasims were tossed back and forth -- Haryana, for example, pleaded for 483 villages or an area of 450,000 acres which Punjab was not ready to yield.

The commission was changed and subsequently recommended that 70,000 acreas of land in Punjab should be transferred to Haryana in exchange for Chandigarh on June 21. It identified only 30 villages with a land area of 45,000 acres on the basis of 1981 census as Hindi-speaking areas in Punjab and sought a mutual acceptasble settlement between the two states on the remaining 25,000 acres. Haryana accepted the recommendation while Punjab insisted that only 45,000 acres could be transferred on June 21 and the remaining after its fate have been determination by another commission.

In an attempt to keep to the schedule of transferring Chandigarh -- one of Punjab's major demands -- the central government yesterday appointed yet another commission to determine the areas to be transferred to Haryana within a period of 12 hours. However, Punjab Chief Minister Barnala rejected the plan pointing out that it would be a "mockery of the judicial system" to expect the commission to give its verdict on such an important issue within 12 hours.

The delay has already caused great uncertainty among the populace of Punjab and Haryana and no one is convinced that this commission will be the last one to tackle the problem.

ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE HAILS HU'S EUROPEAN TRIP

HK251251 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 0350 GMT 23 Jun 86

["Short" commentary by Chen Dawei: "A New Chapter in Sino-European Relations" -- ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE headline]

[Text] Rome, 23 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- CPC General Secretary Hu Yaobang's current visit to four West European countries is a trip which will deepen mutual understanding, strengthen friendship and cooperation, and promote world peace.

Beginning 8 June, General Secretary Hu Yaobang visited four major industrial countries in Western Europe, namely, Britain, the FRG, France, and Italy. This is another important visit by a top Chinese leader to Western Europe, following premier Zhao Ziyang's visits to these countries in 1984 and 1985. Premier Zhao Ziyang will soon visit some European countries in 1984 and 1985. Premier Zhao Ziyang will soon visit some European countries along the Mediterranean Sea coast. All these diplomatic activities show that China highly values Europe's role in international affairs and is very interested in developing political, economic, technological, and cultural exchanges and cooperation with European countries.

As General Secretary Hu Yaobang has often mentioned during his current European trip, Europe is the source of modern civilization and is still one of the most economically, culturally, and technologically developed regions in the world. European people have previously suffered untold disasters from disturbances and wars and they detest war and ardently long for peace. Therefore, Europe will naturally be able to play a great role in the settlement of the two major issues -- peace and development -- in modern times.

On these two issues, China can successfully cooperate with Europe. The most important historical task for China at present and in the future is to modernize the country: By the end of this century, China will reach a comparatively well-off level; and then, after another 50 years of efforts, China will approach the development level of the developed countries. In order to achieve this goal, China needs a peaceful international environment. China holds that both China and Europe constitute important forces for preventing war and safeguarding peace. From the angle of economic cooperation, China and Europe also complement each other. China has rich resources and a vast market, while Europe has advanced technologies and adequate funds. Economic cooperation can not only promote the development of both sides, but can also contribute to the prosperity of the world economy.

Therefore, when General Secretary Hu Yaobang exchanged opinions with the leaders of the four European countries during the current visit, it was found that both sides had more in common than expected on the two above-mentioned major issues. Although there remained some differences on some concrete issues, both sides came to understand each other more profoundly.

During the visit, it has been found that relations between China and these West European countries are very good. In the past year since China and Britain succeeded in solving the Hong Kong issue, the two countries have developed their relations at an unprecedented pace.

The FRG is China's largest trading partner in Europe and China's third largest trading partner next to the United States and Japan in the world. Economic and technological cooperation between the two countries has reached a rather high level.

France was the first country in Western Europe to establish diplomatic relations with China and relations between the two countries have developed steadily.

As a country with a time-honored civilization, Italy's friendly relations with China can be traced back to remote antiquity.

Today, she is China's second biggest trading partner in Europe next to West Germany. Opinion in these countries holds that General Secretary Hu Yaobang's visit to these four West European countries will not only help deepen mutual understanding, but will also develop China's relations with Europe to a new level.

Tens of thousands of Chinese people and people of Chinese origin are living in these four West European countries, and thousands of Chinese students are studying there. So, wherever General Secretary Hu Yaobang went, he met with representatives of local residents of Chinese origin and Chinese students and relayed to them the regards of their countrymen. He encouraged Chinese residents to keep on good terms with local people so as to make contributions to friendship between the Chinese people and the people of these countries. At the same time, he also hoped that they would succeed in their businesses and careers and live and work in peace and contentment. Vice Premier Li Peng and Professor Fei Xiaotong also had the experience of studying in foreign countries when they were young, and they had heart-to-heart talks with Chinese students now studying in the European countries, encouraging them to work hard to master knowledge so as to serve the motherland in the future.

General Secretary Hu Yaogang's successful visit to these four West European countries will open a new chapter in Sino-European relations.

[Text] Belgrade, 25 Jun (XINHUA) -- The 13th National Congress of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia (LCY) opened here today.

Vidoje Zarkovic, president of the Presidency of the LCY Central Committee, delivered a keynote report on the work of the league since the last party congress four years ago.

The report, entitled "LCY in the Struggle for the Further Development of Socialist, Self-Managing and Nonaligned Yugoslavia," reviewed accomplishments and difficulties the country now faces. It also discussed the causes of the present economic crisis and social problems and charted future tasks.

Zarkovic pointed out that ways to rid the country of its economic crisis will be found through forceful development of self-management, firm eradication of socio-economic base of autarky, reinforcement of an intensified economy and strengthening national unity.

The congress will also hear and examine a working report by the LCY Central Committee, modify the league's program and elect a new leading body.

Attending the congress are 1,742 delegates representing 2.1 million league members, and 125 foreign delegations, including a Chinese delegation headed by Communist Party Politbureau member Xi Zhongxun. About 2,200 local and foreign reporters are on hand to cover the congress, which will last four days.

Urges World Disarmament

[Text] Belgrade, June 25 (XINHUA) -- Describing the struggle against nuclear war and for peace as "without any doubt" the most significant global issue, Vidoje Zarkovic, president of the Presidency of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia, today called for an end to the arms race, in particular nuclear testing.

Addressing the 13th congress of the league, which opened here this morning, Zarkovic said the consequences of a nuclear war "would be disastrous for the entire human race." He said the arms race, and the possibility of it extending into space, as advocated by the military-industrial complex in the United States and some West European countries, is "alarming." "We emphatically condemn such a course and practice and resolutely demand measures to halt the arms race, ban nuclear weapons and begin a process of general and complete disarmament," Zarkovic said.

He said Yugoslavia has for decades advocated complete disarmament under international supervision, the liquidation of foreign military bases and the withdrawal of troops from foreign territories, a ban on nuclear tests, the formation of nuclear-free zones and other measures conducive to easing international tension and eliminating the danger of war. Zarkovic said his country had submitted several constructive proposals for disarmament and supports other initiatives in this area.

He also said Yugoslavia wants to develop strong and equitable relations with the big powers and the mediterranean and European countries. "We are particularly keen on having stable and all-round relations with all the neighboring countries," he said. "We have a profound interest in peace, stability and cooperation in the Balkans," he added.

Analyzes SFRY Economic Progress

OW250854 Beijing XINHUA in English 0810 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, June 25 (XINHUA) -- Vidoje Zarkovic, president of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia (LCY), says his country will overcome its current social and economic difficulties by strengthening socialist self-management, combating "decentralized statism" and transforming its extensive economy into an intensive one.

In his report to the 13th LCY Congress, which opened today, Zarkovic candidly outlined both the achievements and failures on the road to the nation's vigorous development from a was-devastated country into a modern self-management social community.

The report entitled "The LCY in the Struggle for the further Development of Socialist, Self-Managing and Non-Aligned Yugoslavia" noted that in less than 40 years (1947-1985), Yugoslavia's social product increased seven times, volume of industrial production 17 times, and social sector employment more than five times. Education, health welfare, culture and scientific research also grew and improved, the document said.

However, Zarkovic admitted, the league has made many mistakes due to unrealistic ambitions in development policy, disintegration of the countryside, disruptions in the economy's material structure, heavy borrowing abroad and unrealistic expenditures.

He sharply criticized the country's failure to develop a system of social planning based on self-management after it had abandoned statist centralized planning. "In dropping the statist method of concentrating and steering social accumulation," he said, "we failed to develop a system of concentration of resources in self-management. This reinforced the elemental and autarkic tendencies and intensified the disproportions in the material pattern of our country."

Zarkovic told the congress that the role of the state has grown beyond the constitutionally defined framework. Because of excessive interference, the state has prevented organized labour from exercising its constitutionally defined role, he said.

The president also attributed the country's current economic failure in part to unfavorable international conditions, particularly rising trade protectionism.

Zarkovic's report attacked nationalistic forces as "the most dangerous among the forces engaged in counter-revolutionary activities today." Zarkovic said since the last congress, economic and social crisis have peaked. The league too, he said, has matured and become better prepared to tackle the problems facing Yugoslav society.

He said the only way out of the country's economic crisis is through more intensive development of socialist self-management, abolition of "decentralized statism" and bureaucracy, speedier transition from extensive to intensive industry, and strengthening of national unity and equality.

The president called for a faster and more even realization of the long-term economic stablization program formulated in 1982 before the last congress.

He also required a halt to the declining living standards and more equitable distribution of the products of labour and urged adoption of a comprehensive anti-inflationary program at all levels, from basic labor organizations to the federation, to check Yugoslavia's inflation rate of 80 percent and unemployment, which stands at 1.1 million.

The LCY leader stressed that the principle of democratic centralism remains the inviolable foundation of relations with the league and that there is no room for federalization in the League of Communists.

The congress in scheduled to last four days.

Pledges Nonaligned Support

OW251006 Beijing XINHUA in English 0950 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Text] Belgrade, June 25 (XINHUA) -- Vidoje Zarkovic, leader of the League of Communists of Yugoslavia (LCY), today pledged continued Yugoslav backing for the Non-Aligned Movement. At the first session of the LCY's 13th Congress, Zarkovic said that "acting as an independent, global and non-alignment policy have asserted themselves as a major political and moral force of the contemporary world."

He told the 1,742 delegates at the congress that the Non-Aligned Movement, by its struggle for peace, democratization of international relations and establishment of a new international economic order, "is significantly contributing to progressive social development in the world."

He noted that the increasingly pronounced aspirations of nations, especially non-aligned countries, for peace and equitable international cooperation "are being countered by power politics, domination and hegemony."

Zarkovic pledged the Yugoslavia will continue to invest its efforts to strengthen the bilateral cooperation with the non-aligned and developing countries seeking in particular to increase mutual trade and scientific-technical cooperation.

A durable and stable peace cannot be secured unless the deep division of the owrld community into the rich and the poor is overcome and the major economic development problems of the developing countries, such as food, debts, commodity prices, technology transfer terms and the like are resolved, he said.

Zarkovic also called for the establishment of a new international order in the field of information and cultural exchange as the domination by the developed countries which jeopardizes the cultural and national identity of the developing countries is having an effect on overall international relations.

He stressed that the Non-Aligned Movement has prepared a comprehensive platform to address most international concerns and has offered a series of constructive proposals and ideas. "We are confident that the next conference) of the non-aligned countries) in Harare will also take a step forward toward resolving concrete problems on the way to overcome the grave economic difficulties of the contemporary world," he added.

MASS EXECUTION OF 31 CRIMINALS CONDUCTED

[Text] Beijing, June 25 (AFP) — Thirty-one criminals were put to death here Wednesday in China's largest mass execution since it launched a widely publicized drive against crime in 1983, officials said. The list of executed prisoners, all men aged 19 to 35, was posed outside a Beijing courthouse and read by silent crowds of onlookers. All were killed early Wednesday by China's traditional method of a bullet in the neck.

Six of the 31 were convicted murderers; others were found guilty of rape or armed robbery or were repeat offenders. A 22-year-old store manager and his 21-year-old employee were condemned for stealing money, cigarettes and a car.

Wednesday's mass execution was the largest since the anti-crime campaign was launched nearly three years ago.

Eighteen people were shot in the last mass execution here in January. An estimated 10,000-plus people were executed in the first year of the drive against crime, diplomats here said. Hundreds of thousands of Chinese were reportedly arrested or deported to desert or semi-desert regions.

After cracking down on murderers and rapists, the Chinese authorities turned their attention to economic crimes -- embezzlement, bribery and corruption.

The Chinese press regularly carries reports of prosecutions, but executions are rarer, with only about 20 offenders said to have been put to death. The trials are sometimes held in public stadiums in front of several thousand people.

Those condemned to death are usually executed immediately after being sentenced. Some 13,000 people filed into the Workers' Stadium here for the sentencings in January.

Proceedings against a bank employee accused of embezzlement in the central town of Anyang drew 50,000 spectators in April. The Beijing leadership launched in January a campaign against corruption within the Chinese Communist Party, with the press warning that senior leaders and their offspring would not be exempt. Three children of senior party officials in Shanghai were executed in February for rape and "hooliganism."

BAN YUE TAN ON RELAXED ENVIRONMENT FOR REFORM

HK251216 Beijing BAN YUE TAN in Chinese No 11, 10 Jun 86 pp 6-7

[Article by Xue Zhongxin: "Reform Needs a Relaxed Environment"]

[Text] Economic reform and the development of science and culture require relaxed economic and social environments.

In his "report on the Seventh 5-Year Plan," Premier Zhao Ziyang pointed out that the "overall development of economic reform requires a relaxed economic environment." While making investigations and studies in Shanghai, Comrade Hu Qili said that party leading comrades at all levels, together with comrades engaged in the work of social sciences and those on the ideological and cultural fronts, should make efforts to create an atmosphere of unity, harmony, mutual trust, and mutual understanding. He added that this is the basis for progress in our cause. In his remarks, emphasis was laid on creating a relaxed social environment.

Why is it necessary to create a relaxed environment? This is because the reform we are carrying out is an overall reform, an extensive, profound, and protracted change, and a great experiment in human history. In exploring and blazing a road of socialist modernization with Chinese characteristics, we must bring into play the strength and wisdom of millions upon millions of people and encourage them to work with one heart and one mind. Only in a relaxed and harmonious environment can the people act as the masters of the country, boldly carry out explorations and creation, engage in democratic discussions, and strive to make their reforms a success, to have an economic take off, and to achieve prosperity in science and culture.

Since reform is profound revolution, it will have an unprecedented impact on rigid and traditional concepts and habits. People are required to gradually adapt themselves to this change.

The central authorities have stressed time and again that we should be resolute in carrying out reforms, in launching the first battle, and strive to win it. On matters involving the people's interests, policies should be carefully worked out, giving consideration to rights, profits, and losses. The feeling of being over anxious for quick results should not be allowed and efforts should be made to prevent social upheavals and the tightening of relationships in various fields.

In creating a relaxed environment, what should we pay attention to?

In creating a relaxed environment, we should correctly handle the problems in reforms. In the face of problems, we should not be at a loss of make subjective, arbitrary conclusions. Reforms require explorations, from which new problems will arise. It is natural for people to have different views and opinions on reforms. To solve their differences of opinion, fact-finding analysis and correct guidance are necessary. Leaders at various levels should carry out meticulous ideological work and do their best to preserve the trend of reform.

In creating a relaxed environment, we should have a profound understanding of the importance of socialist democracy. Only by bringing into full play the role of socialist democracy can we fully arouse the initiative of the people and turn such initiative into a material force for promoting reforms. Without socialist democracy, there can be no socialist modernization. Under the prerequisite of the four basic principles, we should encourage a democratic work style and allow people to think independently, to make various suggestions, and to supervise our work in various fields.

In creating a relaxed environment, we should conduct normal criticism and self-criticism. In theoretical and academic studies as well as in literature and art creation, it is normal for different views and opinions to crop up. It is necessary to implement the policy of "letting a hundred flowers blossom and a hundred schools of thought contend." Criticism and self-criticism should be conducted in moderation and by reasoning. Those who are criticized are allowed to explain or countercriticize. The purpose is to distinguish between right and wrong, to seek truth, to strengthen unity, and to promote our cause.

Of course, by creating a relaxed environment, we do not mean encouraging people to behave in a lax, undisciplined manner or that leaders can relax their disciplinary control, still less do we mean bourgeois liberalization. The relaxed environment we refer to is a social environment we refer to is a social environment in which problems can be discussed in a democratic and equal manner on the basis of unity and harmony -- a social environment in which construction smoothly proceeds under the conditions of stability and unity. This is an environment where the people can fully display their talents and where the two civilizations can be simultaneously carried out. This is just what was described by Comrade Mao Zedong: "A political situation in which there are both centralism and democracy, both discipline and freedom, both unity of will and personal ease of mind, and liveliness."

The higher authorities and the lower levels should keep pace with each other in creating a relaxed environment for reforms and construction.

STATE COUNCIL CIRCULAR ON REFORM OF COMMERCE

OW250325 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0654 GMT 24 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, 24 Jun (XINHUA) -- The State Council recently approved an transmitted a "Report on Several Questions Concerning the Reform of Commercial Structure in 1986," which was submitted by the State Commission for Restructuring the Economic System, the Ministry of Commerce, and other departments, and issued a circular in this connection, calling on all localities to earnestly carry out the reform in the light of actual situation in each locality.

The State Council's "circular" said: In view of the current commercial circulation system, which still cannot keep a breast of the needs of planned development of the commodity economic, it is necessary to deepen the reform by consolidating, digesting, replenishing, and improving the reform measures already taken and, at the same time, emancipate the mind to promote lateral economic cooperation in commerce and explore new circulation channels and commercial forms in the course of reform.

As reform of the commercial circulation system involves various sectors of the national economy, all local people's government should coordinate the efforts of all quarters and map out unified arrangements for carrying out this reform as an integral part of the entire economic structural reform.

Currently special attention must be paid to ensure market supply in the course of the structural reform in order to promote market prosperity and stability and create a favorable environment for the reform.

The "Report on Several Questions Concerning the Reform of Commercial Structure in 1986," submitted by the State Commission for Restructuring the Economic System, the Ministries of Commerce and Finance, and the State Council's Economic, Technological, and Social Development Research Center, said: In recent years, we have scored fairly remarkable achievements in carrying out a series of reforms in the commercial circulation system. However, due to an incomplete market mechanism and uncoordinated macroeconomic regulation during the current transitional period between new and old systems, we have not yet effectively relaxed control over some fields, while failing to reorganize other fields already decontrolled. As a result, the commercial circulation system still cannot keep abreast of new demands in the development of commodity economy, and must be further improved. In 1986, it is necessary to consolidate, digest, replenish, and improve the reform measures and actively explore new circulation channels, commercial forms, management systems, and measures for macroeconomic regulation.

1. It is necessary to develop extensive lateral economic associations in the commerical circulation field.

It is necessary to concentrate efforts on promoting extensive lateral economic cooperaton, which is crucial for deepening the reform of the commercial circulation system. We must earnestly implement the "Regulations of the State Council Governing Certain Questions in Promoting Lateral Economic Associations" and, in accordance with the special characteristics of commodity circulation, develop various forms of lateral associations based on enterprises, centered around cities, and providing mainly commodity procurement and marketing service, thereby gradually forming a nationally unified commodity marketing network linked by circulation channels from all directions.

It is necessary to break down the barriers between higher and lower levels and between different departments or regions and remove the restrictions imposed by various regions, cities, towns, departments, and trade in promoting transregional and transdepartmental combinations of industry and commerce, agriculture and commerce, agriculture, industry, and commerce, commerce and commerce, and commerce and trade. Members of an association may cooperate in providing services before, during, and after production, or in procuring and marketing commodities. They may cooperate in one or several business undertakings, or they may be a loosely or closely formed combination of enterprises. In circulating manufactured goods of everyday use, it is necessary to develop combinations between industry and commerce between commerce and commerce, and gradually set up large commercial corporations based on such combinations. In circulating farm and sideline products, it is necessary to develop transregional associations based on cities and counties, and gradually explore economically rational new circulation channels through such associations. It is necessary to develop locally-run joint commercial undertakings with independent management, combine production with marketing and combine agriculture, industry, and commerce together, and established direct links between town and country and between the producer and the consumer in order to reduce the chains and speed up the circulation. Commercial facilities such as transport teams, storages, and warehouses should gear to the needs of the community and improve service.

The governments and the relevant departments in various localities must actively support and encourage the development of lateral economic ties. We must solve the problems which have cropped up in the course of promoting associated operations among enterprise such as fund raising and double taxation. We must permit enterprises in rural areas and various localities to open up shops or engage in joint operations with city enterprise. We must allow supply and marketing cooperatives and township enterprises to enter joint operations with any enterprise in the city, and permit urban commercial establishments to promote associated operations of buying and selling in rural areas. Except for merchandise to be produced under state planning or specialized merchandise to be produced with local subsidies, we must permit various manufacturing enterprises to freely select the factories from which they buy the merchandise to replenish their stock. At the same time, we must strengthen our leadership over various enterprises in developing lateral economic ties, and guard against rushing headlong into mass action.

In developing lateral economic ties, we must further straighten out the wholesale system. Wholesalers in place where the merchandise is being manufactured may sell goods for a profit or on a commission basis, or act as an agent for a manufacturing enterprise. They may enter joint operation with the manufacturing enterprise in selling the goods. Manufacturing enterprises may directly coordinate with wholesalers and retailers in place where goods are being sold or enter associated operation with them, gradually forming a new wholesale network. Wholesalers of state-run commercial establishments must adhere to the principle of doing business while rendering services. On the one hand, they must support the factories in the producing area to directly engage in wholesale business, render services of facilitate the circulation of merchandise and the exchange of information, while on the other and, they must actively sell the local products as well as those products manufactured in other localities.

We must reduce the varieties of goods that should be alloted by the state, and convene less meetings at which goods of various types will be distributed arbitrarily by higher authorities.

Various large and medium-sized cities must unify their plans and do a good job in running wholesale trade centers for manufactured goods, wholesale markets for farm and sideline products, markets for small commodities and markets for farm products on a barter basis. We must include the development of such centers and markets in the general plan for urban development. We must find locations, and raise funds to accelerate our pace in developing such centers and markets. We must earnestly consolidate the existing trade centers, and gradually turn them into trade centers that are open to and serve the wholesalers. We must turn them into permanent trade centers for buying and selling goods for future delivery in large quantity. However, right now, we may do some business on our own during this transitional period.

2. It is necessary to further invigorate large and medium-sized state-run business enterprises.

Large and medium-sized state-run business enterprises play an important role for commodity circulation on the market. We should further invigorate such enterprises. We must work out regulations to help large and medium-sized business emterprises expand their decision-making power, and truly become economic entities that run their own business and assume sole responsibility for their profits or losses. We must further improve the responsibility system within an enterprise in doing its own business, gradually standardize the business management (including the standardization of business management and services), continuously raise the level of business management, and improve economic results and social benefits. We must strictly forbid anyone from arbitrarily demanding money or requisitioning labor from any enterprise.

3. It is necessary to continue to relax our control over small state-run business establishments.

To relax our control over small enterprises is a major reform in the field of commerce. We must do a good job in consolidating and improving those enterprises over which we had already relaxed our control. We must gradually relax our control over those enterprises which are still under control. To relax our control over small business establishments, we should recommend that they become collectively owned and individually managed. Those small enterprises that are state-owned and collectively managed must gradually become collectively owned. A definite period must be set for any small enterprise on lease. After the lease has expired, those enterprises collectively leased may become collectively owned. Lease holders may also continue to lease them or sell them to individuals at the market price. We must actively help small enterprises over which we have relaxed our control to create conditions and gradually change their affiliation with state-run companies.

4. It is necessary to strengthen macroeconomic regulation and management of market and commodity circulation.

Under the present circumstances, when prices and price parties between products have not been made fair and reasonable, it is necessary to fully use credit, taxation, financial subsidies, and other means to macroeconomically regulate market and commodity circulation.

It is necessary to selectively ensure the availability of funds for procuring grain, cotton, edible oil, pigs, and other important commodities in state plans and to help make funds available for procuring readily salable consumer goods and farm and sideline products. With the approval of the tax department, small enterprises which make small profits on labor and on dealing with daily necessities may be exempted from their business tax or have it reduced if they have difficulties paying tax. Tax management should be strengthened for individual and collective commercial ventures and for small deregulated state-owned commercial enterprises.

It is necessary to improve the management of commodity prices while ensuring overall price stability. It is necessary to strengthen the control of commodity prices that are fixed by the state or under state guidance. Price adjustment and pricing guidelines must be approved by the relevant commodity price authorities. Enterprises may decide for themselves the prices of deregulated industrial goods for daily use and of farm and sideline products, except for those which are under the control of price guidelines. Wholesale prices of the manufacturing enterprises and commercial stores should be fixed in accordance with the pricing method for batch commodities.

Commercial administrative departments and administrative offices for industry and commerce at all levels should share the work and cooperate with each other in strengthening administrative control of commerce and the market. It is necessary to perfect commercial and market laws to keep up with the new opening and enlivening situation, act in strict accordance with the law, crack down on illegal activities, protect legitimate business, and straighten out market order.

5. It is necesessary to further streamline government administration and delegate more power to lower levels.

Commercial departments at all levels must enforce separation of government functions from those of enterprises, streamline government administration, and delegate to enterprises all the power they deserve. They must also actively explore ways to exercise indirect control of enterprises. In addition, under the unified plan of the local government, they should continue to carry out the experiment of unified control of commerce at selected points. Corporations of an administrative nature at the provincial and prefectural levels should, in principle, be abolished.

In the experiment of separating government functions from those of enterprises, cities and counties with the necessary conditions may set up chambers of commerce and trade associations of various kinds on a trial basis. Such organizations should be formed by enterprises on a voluntary basis instead of by administrative order.

RENMIN RIBAO COMMENTATOR ON DEVELOPING POOR AREAS

[Commentator's article" "Accelerate the Development of Poverty-Stricken Areas in the Course of Reform"]

[Text] The State Council's leading group for economic development in poor areas recently called for basically solving the people's food and clothing problems in the poor areas in 5 years' time (or during the period of the Seventh 5-Year Plan).

At the same time, it called for forming the capacity to develop the commodity economy by relying on their own strength in these areas so as to create favorable conditions for long-term development and constructiion and to advance along the course of gradually becoming rich. This is a major decision and program made by the party and the government for speeding up the development of the poor areas. This is of great economic and social significance and requires joint efforts of all people in our society.

Over the past 30 years and more since the founding of the PRC, the party and the government have always paid close attention to improving the living standard of the people in poor areas. In order to change the conditions in these areas, the state has appropriated large amounts of money each year and has offered preferential treatment to these areas. These measures have indeed achieved some results, but the results are still not quite satisfactory. Thus far, many poor areas have not developed and changed markedly. So, shall we be able to achieve the objective of basically solving the food and clothing problem of the peasants in poor areas in 5 years' time?

Our answer is yes. first, the party central leadership and the state are deeply concerned with the well-being of the people in poor areas, and the people in these areas all ardently desire to free themselves from poverty. Meanwhile, the development of the national economy and the support given by the whole nation to the poor areas will also play a great role. Second, when the targets of developing poor areas in the Seventh 5-Year Plan period were formulated, attention was focused on solving problems in large stretches of poor areas in an orderly way by giving priority to ensuring that the people there will have sufficient food and clothing. This will prevent us from too widely scattering our resources and will bring about marked results in the areas on which we concentrate our efforts and resources. Third, we are undergoing major reforms which are adding vigor to the rural economy and are bringing hope and vitality to the poor areas. Through reform explorations in recent years and by summing up the experience, both positive and negative, in the past 30 years and more, we have more clearly realized the way we should go in order to develop the poor areas. The key for us now is not to increase investments in these areas, but to adopt effective measures to develop production and arouse new economic vitality there by introducing some new development modes, relaxing administrative controls, changing the previous leadership methods and production approaches which were noit suited to the conditions of these areas, and thoroughly changing the previous method of merely giving relief to these poor areas.

To establish a new development mode in the poor areas, we should first change the method of relying on the external supply of materials, and should mainly strengthen the self-development capacity of the poor areas by making use of necessary external assistance. Funds should not be scattered too widely or be distributed in an egalitarian way; instead, funds should be concentrated and be used in some priority areas. The funds should be used on a compensable basis. Not only should funds be offered to the poor areas, but technology and technical manpower should also be transferred to these areas. Not only should relief be given to these areas, but main efforts should be made to help them develop their industrial foundation. The turnover of funds appropriated to these areas should be accelerated.

In short, state appropriations for the poor areas should bring about better economic and social results. The limited financial resources should be used most efficiently. The external supply of funds and materials constitute a necessary condition for the development of the poor areas, but in order to change the development mode and the economic pattern there, the most important thing is to break through the self-sufficient economy at a low level and to greatly develop the commodity economy there. They should not be required to stick to a narrow production range; instead, their production structure should be diversified. At the same time, their economic activities should not be confined to a seclusive local sphere, but should be linked to extensive horizontal economic networks so as to form an open economic pattern. The basic purpose of reforms in the above two aspects, as well as the central task, is to form a set of self-development economic mechanisms so that the poor areas will be able to develop their economies by relying on their own strengths and to eventually achieve the goal of shaking off poverty and becoming rich.

Changing the backward conditions in the poor areas is an arduous strategic task. The party and government leading organs at all levels must have firm determination, persevere in reforms, dare to break new ground in their work, go deep into realities, and work in a down-to-earth manner, so as to advance the work of promoting the economic development in all poor areas.

COMMENTARY URGES DEVELOPING LIGHT INDUSTRY

OW230413 Beijing Domestic Service in Mandarin 1100 GMT 22 Jun 86

[Station commentary: "Vigorously Develop the Collective Economy in Light Industry"]

[Text] Collective enterprises in light industry are an important force in light industrial production and the backbone of the urban and rural collective enterprises. There were more than 59,000 collective enterprises in light industry by the end of last year, accounting for 83.2 percent of the light industrial enterprises; and they made up 44.13 percent of the total output value. This economic force is playing an increasingly important role in the economic life of our country.

Collective enterprises in light industry developed gradually on the basis of the collectivization of handicrafts in the 1950's. The first National Congress of Handicraft Cooperative Members was convened in December 1957, fully affirming the important status and role of the collective handicraft ecoinomy in the socialist economy. Regrettably, because of mistakes caused by the Great Leap Forward, some of the just-collectivized handicraft organizations were turned into state enterprises while others were put under people's commune management. In addition, the policy at that time in this regard was not clearly defined, and there was confusion in management. As a result, the production of the collective enterprises in light industry was seriously affected. Consequently, some urgently-need consumer goods and small commodities for daily use were out of stock for a long time, and the structure of the socialist market and the needs of the people in consumption were also seriously affected.

The collective handicraft economy was rehabilitated and readjusted in 1961, promoting the development of production. In the 10 years of turmoil, however, the collective economy suffered setbacks again. A new period of development for the collective economy in light industry did not begun until the 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee.

According to statistics, the total output value of the collective enterprises in light industry increased at an average rate of 11.6 percent at year during the Sixth 5-Year Plan. Important changes also took place in the structure of trades. In addition to traditional trades in making clothing, shoes, hats, hardware, tools, stationery, handicraft articles, and products for minority nationalities, new trades have developed, such as plastics, household electrical appliances, lamps and lanterns, whole sets of tools for indoor use, packaging, and decorating.

The fixed assets of the collective enterprises in light industry were valued at 19.8 billion yuan in 1985, a twelvefold increase over 1963. They paid 44.5 billion yuan of taxes to the state and made an important contribution in earning foreign exchange through exports.

As far as the actual conditions in the economic life of our country are concerned, it can be said that we have every reason to attach great importance to the development of collective enterprises in light industry and have no reason whatsoever to pay no attention to the important role being played by these enterprises.

All localities should support the development of collective enterprises in light industry according to their actual conditions and in a planned way and regard this as a long-term strategic measure for developing their local economies, stimulating the urban and rural markets, and satisfying the needs of the people in daily life. Particularly regions with a better foundation in the collective economy should take the lead in making full use of their favorable conditions and lay down specific policies and measures to ensure the vigorous development of collective enterprises in light industry.

CHINA DAILY COLUMNIST EXAMINES SUBSIDY SYSTEM

["It Seems to Me" column by Xiao Xiao: "Who Enjoys Subsidy? Who Pays?"]

[Text] In the course of our economic reforms, we have gradually found that the simple things in our daily lives can seem far more complicated than they really are.

One illustration was last winter's debate about the problems with Beijing's mass transport. The novelist Liu Xinweu offered two solutions -- tolerance on the part of city dwellers and continued subsidy of the bus system on the part of the municipal government.

But being a novelist is different from being an economist; he did not have to explain where the subsidy came from when he went into raptures telling his readers how mass transport in Paris, New York, and other major cities in the world was being subsidized.

In fact, although government prints money, it does not produce wealth; the wealth of society (which includes the amount available to subsidize various goods and services) comes from nowhere but the hand and brain of the working population.

As the Chinese saying goes; Wool comes from sheep, after all. For Beijing's mass transport, the subsidy is actually created by the local people. It is taken from their output value before the distribution of their incomes and is being spent on everyone who takes the city bus.

Like it or not, this support of the public services is still necessary for the economic realities of life in China -- a typical developing economy.

It takes time and a lot of hard work for the nation's vast rural sector to grow into an industry of commericial production.

Only when that happens can society as a whole begin to talk about the idea of "high income and high consumption" — suggesting that either people can afford more expensive bus tickets or bus companies can be more generously subsidized.

The process leading towards this end has just begun: The process of reform. While people should not be blamed for their occasional complaints, they should nevertheless be told that the reform can bring them tangible and long-term benefits.

In the same way, it is understandable when foreigners staying in China, experiencing the same process of reform, may complain sometimes as well.

For instance, they pay 150 yuan to fly from Beijing to Shanghai while the Chinese next to them pay only 90 yuan.

Unfair?

But if they care to ask how much their Chinese companions earn per month and compare the sum with Western salaries, they may feel an even greater sense of unfairness — for the Chinese who make an average of about 100 yuan (about $30) per month.

College graduates may take only 60 yuan and their monthly contribution to society may be worth far in excess of this. They may have just helped design a new electronic system worth thousands of dollars, or have tipped off the policy markers to avoid a costly planning mistake. Their contribution to society is not fully rewarded in the form of money.

Naturally, their share of public wealth is not truly tied to money. They eat State-subsidized food, live in State-subsidized houses, enjoy free medical care, and their children get free education. And, when they fly, they get charged the rate they can afford.

There are some foreigners who complain that they are not being treated equally with the Chinese in terms of money. Their arguments have some justification. Different air fairs are just the tip of the iceberg, followed by an almost endless list of other things: Chinese may pay 10 yuan to get a nice restaurant dinner while they may probably have to pay 20; Chinese may pay half of the foreigners' rate for a hotel room.

Charging visitors higher prices is by no means a Chinese tradition. Nor do the Chinese take foreigners, especially Westerners, to be all capitalists. (This, of course, does not include some reprehensible street vendors and sales clerks, some of whom have indeed tried to "rip off" foreigners.)

Foreigners do not have to agree with the Chinese economic structure, but they may grumble less when they understand it a little better.

This seems especially important for representatives of foreign companies. They often protest: "We are asked to pay our Chinese employees a couple of thousand yuan a month. But we know they get only a small percentage of that. Why can't our employees get what we pay them, or we pay what they get?"

But should Chinese allow people working for these firms to take 20 times as much as those working for Chinese companies?

Should there be a whole different price system so that those working for foreign companies do not have access to state-subsidized food, housing, education, medical care, and so on?

One way to solve all these small but complicated issues seems to be: The government should specify where foreigners should be charged more and where they should be charged the same.

SHIJIE ZHISHI VIEWS COMPOSITION OF 'WORKING CLASS'

HK190904 Beijing SHIJIE ZHISHI in Chinese No 9, 1 May 86 pp 4-5

["Special Commentary" by Pan Peixin: "International Controversies Over the Question of the Working Class" -- Capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] May day this year marks the centennial of International Labor Day. During the last 100 years, especially since World War II, tremendous changes have taken place in the state of the international working class. In the capitalist countries, many new phenomena have also emerged in the state of the working class. Thus, theoretical and academic circles in many countries have put forward various kinds of new ideas on questions such as who belongs to the working class and how to define the class attributes of wage mental laborers and wage laborers in the service trades.

CHARACTERISTICS OF THE CHANGES IN THE CONTINGENT OF WAGE LABORERS

Owing to great developments in the new scientific and technological revolution since World War II and the development of national monopoly capitalism, great changes have taken place in the class composition in developed capitalist countries, especially in the contingent of the broad masses of wage laborers. They bear the following characteristics: 1) The number of wage laborers has sharply increased. These laborers now form the overwhelming majority of the people who are able to support theselves with independent income though they were the minority in the past. The number of people belonging to the working classes as well as their proportion in the class composition of the society has also increased. 2) The number of "white-collar" workers who are not engaged in physical labor has increased by a big margin, greater than that of "blue-collar" workers who are engaged in physical labor. In the entire capitalist society, a contingent of wage mental laborers has emerged. 3) The number of people engaging in service trades has rapidly increased, and is greater than that of people engaging in substantial production.

WHO CAN BE DETERMINED AS MEMBERS OF THE WORKING CLASS

Due to the above-mentioned great changes, there have appeared some different views abroad on the question of how to determine the range of the working class in a modern capitalist society, or, how to correctly define the concept of the working class.

1. Some people hold that only wage laborers who directly create surplus value (referring to the industrial workers) can be regarded as members of the working class. This is based on Marx remarks that "in economics, the proletariat can only be interpreted as the wage laborers who produce and multiply 'capital.'" This is a narrow definition.

The people who oppose this view hold that this definition rules out the possibility of proletarianizing a part of wage mental laborers and excludes all wage mental laborers (as well as wage laborers in the service trades) outside the working class. Thus, the number of the working class will inevitably drop with each passing day. Even some Western scholars who hold this view have made a prophecy that the influence of the working class is approaching its "end" and will be unable to play the leadership role. However, some communist parties in capitalist countries are not rigidly adhering to this narrow definition. They hold that the working class concept in the comtemporary age should include not only manual laborers who create the surplus value, but also the laborers from other social strata (such as the laborers engaging in education, public health, social services, and other undertakings, and those engaging in the civil affairs and local government work), because, like workers engaging in manual labor, they are also using the means of production to indirectly serve capitalist commodity production and the creation of profits.

2. Some people hold that all wage laborers (including all wage mental laborers) should be determined as members of the working class, because none of them possess the means of production and have to sell their labor and be exploited. This is a broad definition. But some other people point out that this definition has enlarged the concept of the working class too much, because the working class is not the same thing as the wage workers. Various social classes and wage workers of various social groups are playing different roles at their different positions.

3. Some people hold that working class refers to wage laborers who are doing specific jobs in society labor organizations under the supervision of other people. They obey the orders of the capitalists and their agents and are in a powerless and subordinate position. Those wage laborers who have the right to supervise others and take part in policy decisions in these labor organizations do not belong to the working class.

THE CLASS ATTRIBUTE OF THE WAGE MENTAL LABORERS

In developed capitalist countries, most mental laborers are wage mental laborers. For example, in 1971, specialists employed in the United States made up 91.8 percent of the total number of intellectuals in this country. In the 25 years from 1947 to 1972, owing to the new technical revolution, nearly 1,100 new professions have appeared in the United States. Most employees were university or college graduates, and technical workers were mainly engaged in complicated mental labor. Should these new wage laborers be included in the working class?

On this question, there are three different views: 1) Some people hold that intellectuals who are employed as wage mental laborers should not be determined as members of the working class, because if they are, it would mean a negation of the antithesis between manual labor and mental labor under capitalist conditions, and cancellation of the task of eliminating the essential differences between the two in the course of building communism. It would also mean a negation of the alliance of the working class and the intellectuals who have integrated themselves with the working people, and cancellation of the leadership of the working class. But those who do not agree with this viewpoint hold that in determining the class status of intellectuals, it is necessary to proceed from analyzing their objective social and economic status, and that an alliance can also be realized within a certain class, and among various contingents of the working class, which is different in the degree of maturity.

2) Some people hold that although the intellectuals can be divided into several different groups due to their different social positions, most of them belong to the working class, because they do not possess the means of production or create surplus value, and they are exploited by their employers. A slightly different view hold that only those intellectuals of the lower strata can be regarded as members of the working class. 3) Some people hold that most intellectuals (including those who are employed as wage mental laborers) belong to the intermediate stratum of the capitalist society. Only a small number of them can be determined as members of the working class, while a minority of them may belong to the bourgeosie.

SEVERAL KINDS OF NEW CLASS THEORIES

Some new class theories have also appeared, which have something to do with the concept of the working class. Of these new theories, the following three have greatest influence:

1. The theory of "intermediate class." This theory holds that the increase of the "intermediate class" was an important result of Western social development in the first half of this century, which embraced "almost the entire Western world." People holding this viewpoint said with certainty that a proletarian society will be realized in the capitalist countries through the rapid expansion of the intermediate class by swallowing up the lower-strata classes rather than through the proletarian dictatorship. Toffler, the famous U.S. futurist, held that in "third wave" civilization, there does not exist the social group of classes as advocated by Marxism. There has appeared a new "middle" class, which includes the workers, intellectuals, and technicians who have received higher education. Some people even said that the prophecy of Marxism on the future of the capitalist system will fail in the end, because under the condition of private ownership, industrialization itself will not make poverty increase, but will expand the intermediate class contingent and enable more and more people to become better off like the petty bourgeoisie. According to this viewpoint an equal sign is placed between the working class and pure manual laborers, the range of the working class is limited to refer to wage manual laborers only, and all the wage mental laborers are considered as the "intermediate class." The purpose is just to prove that the Marxist "thesis on polarization is doomed to failure." As a matter of fact, this is by no means a new theory. As early as the end of the 19th century and the beginning of the 20th century, this theory was already advocated by Bernstein and others.

2. The theory of a "new petty bourgeoisie." According to this theory, the wage workers of most service trades, engineers, technicians, scientific workers, middle-and lower-level administrative staff in factories, mines, and enterprises, and ordinary working personnel in government organizations at various levels are all regarded as the "new petty bourgeoisie." In economic status, there are some differences between the "new petty bourgeoisie" and the "traditional petty bourgeoisie" (small businessman, pedlars, and handicraftsmen): They have nothing but their own labor force and have to become wage laborers who "live on their wages." The similarity between them is that they belong to neither the proletariat nor the bourgeoisie. Although both the working class and the "new petty bourgeouisie" do not possess the means of production and are exploited wage laborers, judging from their specific situation of being exploited, the former is directly "producing surplus value" for the capitalists, but the latter is just engaging in nonproductive labor.

However, the people who oppose this viewpoint hold that intellectuals do not form an independent class. If there really is a "new petty bourgeoisie," we will have to admit that the differences between mental labor and manual labor should be taken as the demarcation line in determining class status. Thus, the range of the working class, the most advanced revolutionary class in modern society, will inevitably be narrowed. Therefore, the theory of a "new petty bourgeoisie" is actually one of "non-proletarianization" of the working class and, in essence, a variety of the theory of expanding the range of the "intermediate class."

The theory of a "new working class." According to this theory, all wage mental workers are included in the working class and are called the "new working class." This is because modern capitalism is now at the stage of taking scientific and technological knowledge as the decisive "productive forces," and because a "new working class" will certainly replace the old working class and become a leading force in promoting social development. Those who do not agree with this argument, point out that this actually places specialized technical and administrative personnel in an important position in the changing modern capitalist society and takes the intellectuals as a new leading class and an independent class as well. As a matter of fact, the intellectuals as a stratum of capitalist society comprises intellectuals of different classes. As a social group, they are complex in composition. They do not represent a certain type of production relations, nor do they have the common interests of a class. The theory of a "new working class" in fact dishes up the theory of an "intermediate class" in a new form.

The controversy over the question of the working class is in no account only about the concept of the working class. It constitutes one of the piercing questions in the contemporary ideological struggle, and bears an important bearing on whether the Marxist theory related to the proletarian revolution still works or not in the world of today, and on whether the great historical mission of the working class will be achieved or not. We must pay adequate attention to the problem and study it conscientiously.

JINGJI RIBAO COMMENTATOR VIEWS 'QUADRUPLICATION'

[Commentator's article: "'Quadruplication' Is a Concept of Quality"]

[Text] The question of quality has a bearing not only on the life of an enterprise but also on whether or not the national economy can develop smoothly and whether or not the objectives of the four modernizations can be attained. Therefore, it is necessary for us to further deepen our understanding of this question.

We must be clear about this idea, that is, the socialist modernization program calls not only for quantity but also places greater stress on quality. The same is true of "quadruplication." Is "quadruplication" a "muddy radish" or "a radish washed clean of mud"? A "muddy" and shoddy "quadruplication" is not only of no practical significance but will also cause serious consequences. The 12th National Congress of the CPC has defined that the general objective of our country's economic construction by the end of this century is to quadruple the nation's gross output value of industrial and agricultural production under the premise of constantly improving economic results.

Stressed as a premise here, economic results call for, among other things, the requirement of quality. Therefore, "quadruplication" is a concept of quality as well as of quantity. It is essential to always stress achieving a big increase in output under the premise of improving quality. However, some leading departments and production enterprises often forget the lessons of history; they one-sidedly pursue output and neglect quality and benefits to society, with the result that some brand products fail to live up to their name and their quality shows a marked decline; and there is also a marked decline in the quality of work and service in certain economic departments and enterprises. Consumers and customers are annoyed by this. The constantly growing incidence of these phenomena merits our vigilance.

As we all know, the basic purpose of socialist production is to continuously meet the people's ever growing needs in our material and cultural lives. To quadruple the nation's gross output value of industrial and agricultural production by the turn of this century is precisely in line with this basic purpose. With the gradually improved living standards of the urban and rural population, consumers and customers are bound to set stricter and stricter demands on the quality of products as well as on service. Only when they discard the old concept of "daughters of an emperor have no worry about marriage," firmly foster awareness of quality, and provide the market with marketable, high-quality products and first-rate service can enterprises meet social demands and establish themselves in an unassailable position in production and operations. They foreign exchange needed by the state in opening up to the outside world and importing advanced foreign technology and equipment to speed up the process of the four modernizations program should be earned mainly by expanding the country's exports. Whether or not more products can be exported and whether or not our products can survive the acute competition in international markets depend chiefly on their quality. With quality stressed, our products will be able to meet challenges and win victory in world markets. From this we can see that the question of quality is of vital importance to the development of the country's foreign trade.

China is practicing a planned commodity economy. A commodity has both value and use value. If the quality of a product is neglected, it will have less use value and cannot be sold or if used, it will soon reveal itself to be rubbish. This being the case, commodity production will hardly develop and the material and living labor used to produce the product will be wasted. Under these circumstances, the more the enterprises concentrate on output value, the greater the waste and losses they will bring to society. That recently, some fake and inferior commodities did serious harm to consumers and customers and even caused deaths is a case in point. Therefore, although the output and output value of an enterprise can reflect the results of its production under ordinary circumstances, they cannot accurately reflect its real economic results and the social benefit brought about by its products. This is because when the practical use value of a product declines and its production consumption and costs increase, the increase in output value can still be expressed by the product in the form of constant price. This false increase conceals the losses and waste suffered in reality. This is not helpful but harmful and therefore, undesirable. Quadruplication of real value, without "padding" or "extraneous elements", can only be attained on the basis of bringing about an all-round improvement in the quality of products, construction, transport, and servies, and through doubling and redoubling output by raising labor productivity.

The great goal of quadrupling the nation's gross output value of industrial and agricultural production by the end of this century, a goal that we are aiming at, means precisely this kind of "quadruplication" with ensured quality and quantity, without any cutting back. We hope that our leading economic departments at various levels and the vast numbers of enterprise cadres, staff members, and workers will firmly keep this in mind.

Poor quality and high consumption are two weak points critical to our country's industrial production. Similar cases can also be found in the other economic sectors, such as agriculture and service trades. If the two problems are not solved, this will pose a serious threat to the attainment of the goal of "quadruplication" and will bring about no end of trouble in the future to our long-term economic development.

Therefore, we must emphasize quality to the high plane of strategy, resolutely overcome the backward concept that concentrates on output value, enhance our awareness of quality, firmly foster the idea of quality going first, and during the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, through comprehensively improving the quality of enterprises by doing a good job in management and performance upgrading, we must successfully carry out the formidable tasks of improving quality, reducing consumption, raising economic results, and gathering more momentum for further economic development. In this way we can satisfactorily achieve the vast goal of "quadruplication" and create sound conditions for the healthy and steady development of the national economy in the several decades ahead.

SONG JIAN ON GROWTH OF SCIENCE, TECHNOLOGY

New Law To Protect Scientists

OW221030 Beijing XINHUA in English 0957 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 25 (XINHUA) -- A member of the State Council, China's highest governing body, said today specialists were drafting a law to protect academic activities of scientific and technological societies.

Song Jian, who is also minister in charge of the State Science and Technology Commission, said the law was designed to boost scientific and technological research. Those involved in scientific research are "the hope of China's four modernizations" -- science, agriculture, industry and defense, he said.

Speaking at the Third National Congress of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology, Song said scientists are participating in developing the proposed law, which would have to be passed by the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress, China's parliament, before it could go into effect.

Government departments which depend on scientific research should support relevant academic societies, he said, "but the most important thing is to protect them with a law."

Song said the law should give official status to scholarly societies and define their role as well as their relationship to the Communist Party, the government and state-owned, collective and individual enterprises.

Such a law would protect these organizations against outside interference and guarantee that their work could proceed along a normal track, he said.

At present, 138 national societies and other organizations with a membership of 1.8 million are affiliated with the science and technology association. In addition, the 1.8 million members are in contact with another five million scientists and technicians, according to the state councillor.

Praises Science Society

OW251714 Beijing XINHUA in English 1452 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 25 (XIHUA) -- Capable Chinese scientists and specialists will be organized to strive for the lead in some scientific fields while following closely the tracks of the most up-to-date scientific and technical results in the world, a senior Chinese official said here today.

Song Jian, state councillor and minister in charge of the State Science and Technology Commission, said at the Third National Congress of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology that a great nation like China should have a number of outstanding scientists in the forefront of world science and technology.

They should absorb and use the most up-to-date thinking on science to arm the Chinese intellectual circles and the Chinese people, he added. He hoped Chinese scientists would make their contributions to the cause of the science for the mankind, and serve China in vitalizing her economy.

It is necessary to increase the scientific and technical exchanges with other countries, he said. The Chinese Association for Science and Technology and its branches have close relations with the international scientific and technical circles and should play a great role in following the new trends of world developments in science and technology.

In the past 30 years and more, he said, the association has created a fine climate for the scientific and technical workers to grow to maturity, and provided opportunities of free discussions, mutual study and close cooperation for their scientific research work.

Song said the association was the first to open the door to the world for Chinese scientific and technical workers. With its help, many young and middle-aged scientists have become prominent worldwide, and scientific and technical circles as a whole are marked by unity, friendship and cooperation.

"We should face the future and take it as a strategic task to admit more young scientific and technical workers to the association," he added.

Urges Science in Rural Areas

OW181052 Beijing XINHUA in English 1034 GMT 18 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 18 (XINHUA) -- A leading Chinese scientist and high-ranking official has urged a break-up of the concentration of scientific expertise in urban areas, the GUANGMING DAILY reported today.

The paper quoted Song Jian, who is a space expert and minister in charge of the State Science and Technology Commission, as saying development of China's rural areas, where 800 million people live, depends on wider diffusion of scientific knowledge and its practical applications.

To solve the problem, Song recommended the commission's "sparking plan," aimed at using scientific developments in urban areas to promote modernization of the rural economy. The plan covers 24 fields including farming on mountainous terrain, aquatic production, animal raising and food processing.

Most of China's 15 million scientists, engineers and other intellectual workers are concentrated in universities, colleges, research institutes and industrial enterprises in cities.

"Lack of intellectual workers in the countryside has become a barrier to rural economic development," Song said.

Developed countries, he said, are stressing new, sophisticated technologies appropriate to their industrial and agricultural systems. "In China, we should generate more sophisticated technology for already developed sectors and in the countryside apply scientific knowledge in ways that increase production and serve the practical needs of the people," he said.

According to the paper, China's 1985 industrial output value totalled 875.9 billion yuan, or 4,400 yuan per capita in urban areas. But the year's agricultural output value, including rural industries, while reaching 450 billion yuan, was only 560 yuan per capita among rural residents. The low agricultural productivity pulled the national per capita output value down to 1,300 yuan.

At the same time, ten million of people in mountainous areas, remote villages and areas inhabited by minority nationalities have a per-capita annual income of less than 150 yuan and cannot support themselves, Song said. "This problem will be aggravated as the population continues to grow."

Despite their comparative economic strength, the "urban areas cannot make the rest of China prosperous," song said. "Even if the productivity of the industrial sector were to jump ten times, the national average would only rise twice."

For that reason, he said, enhancing agricultural productivity is a "strategic task."

HAO JIANXIU CALLS FOR NEW EXPORT STRATEGY

OW221928 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1420 GMT 21 Jun 86

[Text] Wuhan, 21 Jun (XINHUA) -- Hao Jianxiu, member of the Secretariat of the CPC Central Committee, inspected some 20 factories and enterprises in Hubei's Wuhan City, Shaxhi City, and Jingzhou Prefecture 6-20 June. She stressed that the key to opening up new vistas for earning foreign exchange through export is to develop new items with high competitiveness.

From 6 to 8 June, Hao Jianxiu visited eight enterprises in Wuhan City, including a woolen mill, a printing and dyeing mill, the city wholesale market of textile industry, the city industrial art studio, and others. After seeing printed bed covers, embroidered sheets, bali yarn, children's pleated skirts, and other quality brandname products, she noted that these products were very competitive on both the domestic and foreign markets.

She suggested that it was necessary to make good use of Hubei's abundant resources of cotton and bast fibers and to change the export mix from mainly exporting raw and primary products to mainly exporting fully processed and refined end products; only thus can Hubei's resources of cotton and bast fibers be fully exploited.

Hao Jianxiu inspected the vast Jianghan Plain, homeland of the "Red Guard of Honghu." Last year, the amount of purchase of products for export in each of the 11 countries in this area exceeded 10 million yuan; Mianyang County even surpassed the 100 million yuan mark. Hao Jianxiu maintained that prefectures and counties could make significant contributions to earning foreign exchange through exports, adding that the work in this regard should be done simultaneously in both urban and rural areas.

During her inspection, Hao Jianxiu discovered that a lot of goods for export were manufactured from the old equipment of the 50's and 60's. Hao Jianxiu praised the cadres, workers, and staff of these enterprises for their great efforts to earn foreign exchange. She held that the reasons why these old enterprises always remain vigorous is the good quality of their workers and their sound management down to the basic level. They would do a lot better if they carried out technological transformation.

LEADERS ATTEND SHANGHAI ORCHESTRA PERFORMANCE

OW191426 Beijing XINHUA in English 1401 GMT 19 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 19 (XINHUA) -- The Shanghai Symphony orchestra has been so popular on its present visit to Beijing that it has had to open its rehearsals to the public.

The orchestra has been showered with praise by Beijing audiences since it gave its first concert here on June 12.

Chinese leaders Wan Li, Chen Pixian and Wang Zhen attended the first performance. Wan praised the orchestra for its contribution to the development of symphonic music in China.

The conductor and players answered 11 curtain calls after their first two performances.

All the tickets for the 10 scheduled concerts were sold out 10 days before the orchestra performed. This did not meet demand, so the players agreed to let audiences into their rehearsals.

The orchestra, formed 107 years ago and once known as "the first orchestra in the Far East", plays works by both foreign and Chinese composers, such as Brahms, Tschaikovsky, Beethoven and Zhu Jianer.

Six Chinese vocal and instrumental soloists, who have all won prizes at international contests, are taking part in the concerts.

Over the past 30 years, the Shanghai Symphony Orchestra has given more than 2,000 concerts.

CHEN GUANGYI ADDRESSES FUJIAN PROPAGANDA WORK CONFERENCE

OW231150 Fuzhou FUJIAN RIBAO in Chinese 11 Jun 86 p 1

[Excerpts] On 10 June, Chen Guangyi, secretary of the Fujian Provincial CPC Committee, made a speech at the provincial conference on propaganda work. He emphatically pointed out: In doing propaganda work, we must firmly establish the guiding ideology of making propaganda work serve the "two civilizations." We must carry out our propaganda work in close connection with the actual situation in the province and in a way which conforms with Fujian's own characteristics. We must show a clear-cut party spirit and develop greater foresight and creativity. We must strengthen the party's leadership and mobilize the whole party to create a new situation.

Chen Guangyi said: Propaganda work must be made to serve the party's general tasks and targets as well as the two civilizations -- material and spiritual civilization. In serving material civilization, right now, we must pay attention to the following three points:

1. We must serve the modernization program.

2. We must serve the policy of promoting overall reform.

3. We must serve the policy of opening the country to the outside world. Propaganda workers must continue to give widespread publicity to the significance of implementing the policy of opening the country to the outside world and to the tremendous achievements we have scored after putting the open-door policy into practice. At the same time, we must correctly deal with some of the negative phenomena which have appeared in the course of opening the country to the outside world. In serving spiritual civilization, we must strive to raise the scientific, cultural, ideological, and moral standards of the entire Chinese nation and turn all people in the country into people with lofty ideals, moral integrity, better education, and a strong sense of discipline.

Comrade Chen Guangyi fully reaffirmed the achievements attained in the field of propaganda in recent years, and praised the hard work carried out by the masses of cadres in doing propaganda and political work. In order to make our propaganda work keep pace with the new situation, as it develops in the course of making reforms, opening the country to the outside world, and invigorating our domestic economy, he emphatically pointed out: In doing propaganda work, we must strengthen party spirit and develop greater foresight and creativity. To strengthen party spirit means that in doing propaganda work we must adhere to the basic Marxist principle of seeking truth from facts and identify ourselves with the party Central Committee politically and ideologically. To develop greater creativity means that under the guidance of the party's major policies and principle, we must give full play to our subjective initiative and carry out our work creatively. In order to make our propaganda work suit the new situation we face today, we must boldly discard outmoded ideas, concepts, and habits, and vigorously promote the spirit of daring to forge ahead and create the new.

In conclusion, Comrade Chen Guangyi called on the party committees at all levels to resolutely strengthen their leadership over propaganda work. He said: Efforts must be made to mobilize the whole party to carry out ideological and political work. At the same time, we must expand the contingent of propaganda workers, give them encouragement, and sincerely support and help them in carrying out their work.

The 7-day provincial conference on propaganda work was held from 4 to 10 June. Attending the conference were leading comrades of propaganda departments directly under the provincial authority, directors of propaganda departments under the various prefectual (city) and county party committees, leading comrades of the political department of the provincial economic commission, responsible comrades in charge of ideological and political work under the various prefectual and city economic and financial commissions, responsible comrades of the various provincial and prefectual (city) trade union, youth, and women federations as well as directors of propaganda departments under the party committees of some universities.

During the conference, He Shaochuan, Standing Committee member and Propaganda Department director of the provincial CPC Committee, relayed the guidelines laid down at various national meetings concerned. Wang Zhongxin, deputy director of the Propaganda Department under the provincial CPC Committee, and Huang Jie, vice chairman of the provincial economic commission and director of the political department under the provincial economic commission, made speeches on separate occasions on how to strengthen ideological and political work in rural areas and in various enterprises. The conference also seriously studied issues on how to strengthen ideological and political work in rural areas and in various enterprises.

FUJIAN ENTERPRISES ATTRACT FOREIGN INVESTMENT

[Text] Beijing, June 24 (XINHUA) -- The 133 rural enterprises in Fujian Province in east China have attracted more than 74 million yuan (about 23 million U.S. dollars) in foreign investment, the overseas edition of the "PEOPLE'S DAILY" reported today. More than 60 percent of the enterprises export at least half of their products to other countries and regions, the paper said, noting that its statistics were based on counts made at the end of May. The 133 enterprises, in part collectively owned by their workers, manufacturered more than 1,000 products including garments, processed food, toys, handicrafts, electronics and machinery. In 1984, 31 of Fujian's rural enterprises had foreign investors. Another 96 jointly-owned firms were set up in 1985.

JIANGXI RESETTLES DEMOBILIZED ARMY CADRES

OW231350 Nanchang Jiangxi Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 16 Jun 86

[Text] Jiangxi did a good job in promptly resettling demobilized Army cadres in 1985. After the quote for resettling demobilized Army cadres was set for the province last year, the provincial party committee and provincial people's government promptly studied and drew up a number of measures in view of the large number of demobilized cadres and the major changes in the reform of local enterprises. Generally speaking, demobilized Army cadres were placed in civilian jobs commensurate with their previous experience. Of the some 380 division and regimental-level demobilized cadres returning to Jiangxi, 10 percent were assigned jobs equivalent to their former rank, and 87 percent a half grade lower than their former rank. Of the over 1,000 battalion-level demobilized cadres, 95 percent were placed in jobs generally commensurate with their professisonal skills.

In resettling demobilized cadres, the provincial party committee and provincial people's government paid a great deal of attention to specialized technical personnel and intellectual cadres. As a result, some 400 specialized technical cadres have found a place to continue to display their talent.

As for demobilized Army men who had won military service honors, the provincial party committee and provincial people's government gave preferential treatment to those who had won first or second-class merit citations in the Army, or had been awarded with a title of honor by a military region. Preferential treatment was also given to demobilized Army men who had served in remote hardship posts in high mountain areas, islands, or frontier areas for a long time. Last year, 26 demobilized cadres with first or second class merit citations were placed in better jobs in accordance with relevant regulations. The province also resettled some 2,700 dependents of demobilized cadres last year, of whom 900 were given employment.

SHANGHAI CONTINUES GRASS-ROOTS PARTY RECTIFICATION

OW190509 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 0000 GMT 18 Jun 86

[Text] At a municipal work conference on party rectification in rural areas held yesterday, Wu Bangguo, deputy secretary of the Shanghai Municipal CPC Committee, said: Party rectification in rural areas must promote reform and ensure that it invigorates the economy and is conducive to developing the exceedingly favorable situation in the countryside. The focus of party rectification should be the solution of conspicuous problems among party cadres. As for new situations and problems emerging in the course of reform, they should be treated carefully according to policy. We should not simply copy the methods used in party rectification of organs and apply them to grass-roots party rectification, disregarding specific conditions.

Party rectification in town and township organs in Shanghai has basically been completed. The rectification of some 8,600 grass-roots party branches in the rural areas will systematically begin in the second half of this year.

SHANGHAI GARRISON BEGINS LOW-LEVEL RECTIFICATION

OW221800 Shanghai City Service in Mandarin 0000 GMT 21 Jun 86

[Text] The Shanghai Garrison District held a party rectification work meeting on 20 June. Addressing the meeting, Commander Ba Zhongtan said: The district plans to start its all-out party rectification at the battalion and company level in early July. All grass-roots units will be involved in party rectification at this level. Therefore, successfully carrying it out is of fundamental importance to strengthening the revolutionization, regularization, and modernization of the Army, and is also required to ensure success in Army building at the grass-roots level.

SHANGHAI INITIATES JOINT VENTURE EMPLAOYEES' PENSIONS

[Text] Shanghai, June 19 (XINHUA) -- All Chinese working for Sino-foreign joint-venture enterprises in Shanghai will enjoy old-age pensions after retirement, according to a new temporary regulation.

The regulation, issued by the municipal government of Shanghai, provides that all the Sino-foreign joint-venture enterprises in the largest industrial city of China should begin to take out old-age insurance for their Chinese employees once they get approval to open their business.

It stipulates that the enterprises should pay every month a sum equivalent to 30 percent of the total amount of their Chinese employees' monthly salaries to the Shanghai branch of the People's Insurance Company of China for the old-age pension fund. The insurance will cover retired employees' old-age pensions, medical bills, funeral expenses, and compensation for the deceased employees' widows and orphans.

The municipal authorities said the regulation is also applicable to Sino-foreign cooperative enterprises and enterprises with sole overseas funds.

The joint-venture and cooperatiave enterprises, because of their limited contract business period and other factors, can not guarantee the livelihood of their retired Chinese employees as Chinese enterprises do. The old-age pension scheme is aimed at tackling this problem, local officials said.

They noted that there are more than 10,000 Chinese currently working for Shanghai's 170-odd joint-venture and cooperative enterprises.

The regulation is the first of five scheduled to be published by the Shanghai government this year for enterprises introducing overseas funds, they said. The officials added that the city has already issued 37 regulations since 1979 concerning the introduction of overseas funds.

RURAL ZHEJIANG BEGINS PARTY RECTIFICATION

OW221913 Hangzhou ZHEJIANG RIBAO in Chinese 13 Jun 86 p 1

[Excerpts] A reporter of this newspaper has learned from the Party Rectification Office of the provincial party committee that the Zhejiang Provincial CPC Committee recently worked out more specific arrangements for carrying out party rectification in units at the village level in rural Zhejiang in accordance with the guidelines of a seminar convened by the Central Committee for Guiding Party Rectification on the work of party rectification in six coastal provinces and municipalities.

Under preparation since June, the work of party rectification in units at the village level in rural Zhejiang will begin successively in mid-August. More than 50,000 party branches and 710,000 party members will take part in this party rectification.

As the guiding ideology for carrying out party rectification in units at the village level in rural areas, the provincial party committee has called for giving full scope to the "twin roles" of ensuring reform and economic development and successfully fulfilling the Seventh 5-Year Plan, with emphasis on persistent efforts in conducting positive education aimed at raising the ideological and political consciousness of the broad masses of party members. In order to conscientiously implement this guiding ideology, it is necessary to gain a clear understanding of the following four points both ideologically and realistically:

1. At present our central task is socialist modernization based on the vigorous development of social productivity. This is the general guiding ideology for rural party rectification that calls for compliance.

2. It is essential to persist in carrying out reform and to promote further development of reform.

In conducting party rectification, rural party organizations and members should be made to resolutely implement the party's rural policies, to further develop and refine the management system marked by a dual combination of overall and shared management, to take the lead in establishing and perfecting a system to facilitate rural commodity production, and to lead the masses onto the road of achieving prosperity through hard work and of bringing about common affluence.

3. It is imperative to recognize Zhejiang's characteristics of being close to the coast and economically quite advanced; to give full protection and support to village and town enterprises, including the development of household and joint household industries; and to support and protect those peasant-entrepreneurs who are bold in carrying out reform and blazing new trails and good at running their businesses.

4. It is necessary to provide different types of guidance in accordance with the economic development of the various localities.

The provincial party committee noted: The pace and approach of carrying out party rectification should proceed from the actual situation in rural areas. In laying the groundwork for carrying out party rectification in units at the village level, party committees at the higher levels should take a thorough, rather than a hasty, approach. Arrangements for the various stages of party rectification should be compact, not loose, in structure. Provincial, city, prefectural, county, district, and village organizations should mobilize substantive forces to help and guide units at the village level in their party rectification work to ensure the quality of their tasks.

GUANGZHOU ARTICLE REFLECTS ON 'DOUBLE HUNDRED' POLICY

HK250223 Guangzhou YANGCHENG WANBAO in Chinese 19 Jun 86 p 2

[Article by Shu Zhan: "Both a Principle and a Law"]

[Text] It has been almost 10 years since Jiang Qing was overthrown. Can everyone remember precisely what he was doing on the day that wonderful news was announced and rapidly spread everywhere? It seemed that everyone was simultaneously celebrating China's second liberation, and the dark days had finally come to an end.

Everyone was acclaiming, forecasting, and expecting a spring time for science and for literature and art. In the event, the "double hundred" principle indeed returned to us. Some people innocently believed that "leftist" ideology had then died a natural death or, in other words, had taken a rest from its stage in history.

No, it is not disposed to be lonesome, and sometimes it returns to the stage in disguise.

If we are not forgetful, we should remember that after the "gang of four" was smashed, for a time stress was still laid on grasping the key link and criticizing Deng, and the "gang of four" was described as ultrarightist instead of ultraleftist; there was a total ban on probing into everything the leader had written and said.

The discussion on practice as the criterion of truth was censured and boycotted by many people, despite the fact that this discussion was very popular with the party, the Army, and the people. The 3d Plenary Session of the 11th CPC Central Committee was of equal significance with the Cunyi Conference, but it was reproached by certain people. Do you recall, at that time there was a certain so-called "theory of going to excess." It was held that emancipation of the mind, assigning production contracts to each household, implementing the policies, and bringing democracy into play had all been taken excessively.

Afterwards, the remuneration that intellectuals on the science and technology front received for sparetime labor was described as spiritual pollution, and the fruits of an individual's hard work were described as crimes and legal sanctions were taken against them. These and similar things happened.

Some people become extremely angry and resentful when they hear about the various expressions of "leftism," like Ah Q when he was accused of having favus on the head; it seems that, in their view, so long as nothing is said about it, the favus will disappear naturally.

"There is no need to settle old accounts." I agree, but should we forget the history of the past and the present, the things that happened yesterday, the tragic lessons that left us bruised and bloody? Should not those people who went to extremes in their irrational criticism of correct theories and viewpoints that had been accepted by the party and written into documents conduct a little self-criticism?

Innocent students (including myself) should also become more soberminded through reviewing the setbacks, frustrations, and difficulties in implementing the "double hundred" principle in theory, literature and art, and cultural works over the past 10 years.

There is no doubt that since the "double hundred" principle is a state cultural policy guideline, the leading departments in cultural work at all levels should create good conditions for its implementation, to ensure equality in contending and to provide a pleasant atmosphere for a hundred flowers to blossom. However, the "double hundred" is not only a policy guideline; it is also a law for the development of ideology, science, and culture. The various schools of thought during the period from pre-Qin times to the early years of the Han Dynasty, the renaissance and the industrial revolution in Europe, and the new wave of world science and technology in recent years prove in every case that the development of human civilization can only be advanced if there is academic equality and creative freedom. The moment "democracy" is strangled, there is no way for "science" to carry on.

It was long ago evident how much harm was done to scientific development by the dismissal of 98 of the 100 schools of thought after the anti-rightist drive in 1957, leaving only 2 behind -- dictatorship and existence under dictatorship. However, science still stubbornly forges ahead amid arduous difficulties; it does not shift according to whether or not the eight-character "double hundred" principle appears in the press.

People await happiness, the trees await the spring. There are also spring storms. It is not just mild breezes and gentle rain, some areas may have fierce storms with black clouds and even hailstones. However, spring cold toughens the plum blossom. Extreme "leftist" ideology has also toughened China's intellectuals. They are gradually able to distinguish its dazzling and stylish garments and see right through to its bone marrow. Mr "Left" sometimes holds things aloft against the "double hundred" principle, sometimes blocks it, and sometimes tramples on it, changing his methods in bewildering ways, with the simple gut feeling that the "double hundred" principle is equal to liberalization. This is because when the "double hundred" principle is practiced, dogmatism has to take a rest.

GUANGDONG PROVINCE BECOMES LEADING EXPORTER

[Text] Beijing, June 23 (XINHUA) -- Guangdong Province bordering on Hong Kong and Macao is China's largest exporter, overtaking Liaoning Province and Shanghai, the "INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS" reported today. The province exported 1.39 billion U.S. dollars worth of goods in the first five months of this year -- a 118.7 percent increase from the same 1985 period. The figure met 48.4 percent of Guangdong's annual target. Guangdong's exports topped the 300 million U.S. dollar mark for the first time last month, according to the biweekly paper.

Shenzhen, Shantou and Zhuhai in Guangdong are three of China's four special economic zones, where investors from Hong Kong, Macao and overseas enjoy preferential treatment. Moreover, the provincial capital of Guangzhou and Zhanjiang are among the 14 coastal cities with greater decision-making authority over foreign investment and trade. The Pearl River Delta, one of the most developed areas in China, is also open to foreign investment.

This brings the total number of satellite towns named by provincial authorities to 64, the newspaper said. They enjoy priority in tax benefits and raising loans. Tariffs and taxes on imported raw materials, spare parts, packaging materials and vehicles for Sino-foreign joint ventures in these satellite towns can be exempted, as long as their products are for export. And joint ventures and foreign-funded enterprises involved in technical research, energy, transport and ports, which need a comparatively longer period to recover investment, enjoy preferential tax treatment.

The Bank of China and the China International Trust and Investment Corporation will grant loans to enterprises which are expected to earn hard currency.

Existing enterprises in the satellite towns also enjoy preferential tax treatment on imported equipment and raw materials for making export goods.

CPC SECRETARY QUERIED ON HAINAN DEVELOPMENT PROGRESS

HK231242 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 23, 9 Jun 86 pp 17, 18

[Article by Chen Yexuan: "Yao Wenxu, Secretary of the CPC Committee of the Hainan Administrative Region, on Correcting the Orientation of Hainan's Development"]

[Text] The motor vehicle reselling incident which happened on Hainan Island in 1984 shocked the whole country. This serious case brought disorder and losses to Hainan's economy, and a number of cadres involved were punished. It was a great setback in Hainan's development.

This island, once a shining pearl in the sea under the guidance of the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy, was covered with a shadow. Now more than 1 year has passed since then. What is the situation on this island? This is a question people are concerned about.

Recently this reporter paid a visit to Hainan. What was heard and seen can be summarized as follows: The course has been corrected, the cadres are in high spirits, and the treasure island in the South Sea is again full of life.

We interviewed Yao Wensu, secretary of the Hainan Administrative Regional CPC Committee, in an office with simple decor and out-dated equipment. Yao Wenxu spoke slowly, honestly, and at length.

At the very beginning he said: "We have committed serious mistakes in our work and are now correcting them with real action." He continued: The CPC Central Committee always requires us to proceed from the realities of our island and to use the island's resources to promote our development. During the period from 1983 to the first half of 1984, we did quite well in implementing this policy of the central authorities, and all undertakings were developing healthily. At that time, we put forward the slogan: Prepare in the first year, glide in the second year, and take off in the third year. However, in the summer of 1984, due to the vacillation in our guiding ideology, we became impatient and hoped that we could reap more profits from trade and establish some basic facilities as quickly as possible. As a result, as you already know, we committed serious mistakes, trying to reap profits by reselling motor vehicles. This has been a profound lesson for us.

He said: The CPC Central Committee and the State Council are showing great concern for Hainan's work. In winter last year and spring this year, many central leading comrades, including Hu Yaobang, Zhao Ziyang, Hu Qili, Tian Jiyun, and Gu Mu, came to Hainan one after another, to inspect and examine work and help Hainan learn from experiences and lessons and solve difficult problems. They encouraged us to brace ourselves and do our jobs well. While affirming Hainan's achievements in opening up and construction, they also pointed out the existing problems and orientation for its future development. All this greatly inspired the people of all nationalities in Hainan. Setbacks taught us a lesson. In the future we will strictly follow the party's policies and principles and do our jobs well in a down-to-earth manner.

We asked him to talk about something new, such as the new situation of Hainan's construction and development and new plans, rather than talking about the old accounts.

Yao Wenxu smiled. He said: In order to promote Hainan's development, we must use its superiority in natural resources and vigorously develop the planting and processing of tropical industrial crops and the breeding and processing of aquatic products, as well as tourism. This is a policy worked out with the help of the central leading comrades during their inspection of Hainan. This is nothing new, and is not news to us. In the future, in order to implement this policy and accelerate Hainan's construction and development, we must work hard to lay two solid foundations.

First, we must lay a solid foundation for agriculture. Over the past few years, we have paid attention to agriculture and have achieved rapid development in this field. However, there is still insufficient investment, scientific and technological guidance, and basic facilities for agriculture, and the overall plans are still imperfect. All these problems have to be solved conscientiously.

In China, the subtropical zone covers an area of more than 50,00 square kilometers, of which over 30,000 square kilometers are in Hainan. Tropical industrial crops are the main natural resources and the economic basis of Hainan Island. We must proceed from this reality and implement the policy of developing agriculture, forestry, animal husbandry, sideline production, and fishery in an all-round way, with the stress on developing tropical plants such as rubber and others.

Our initial target is that by 1990, the land for growing tropical plants and industrial crops will be expanded from the current 6.8 million mu to 8 million mu and each year will provide the state with 200,000 tons of dry rubber, 500,000 tons of sugar, 60 million coconuts, 4,000 tons of pepper, 4,000 tons of medical herbs, and 2,000 tons of dry coffee beans. We will also make use of the superiority of the island, which is surrounded by the sea, to develop the fishery and aquatic rpoducts industry, especially the breeding of prawns, grouper, clams, and oysters. We plan to gradually establish an industrial structure with the stress on processing the island's resources, while promoting the production of industrial crops and aquatic products.

Second, we must grasp well the construction of basic facilities with the stress on energy resources and communications. Hainan's basic facilities for communications, energy production, and telecommunications are backward. It is especially deficient in electricity. This is a great obstacle for Hainan's development and construction. Since 1983, the region has built 24 key projects, including 13 projects for communications, energy production, and telecommunications. Of these projects, the urban automatic telephone system of Haikou City, the Nandukou Bridge, the extension of the Haikou airport and sea port, the Xi-Ling-Ba [6007 1545 0360] railway, and the telecommunications circuit between Guangzhou and Haikou have already been completed and put into production.

At present, there are already air and sea navigation lines between Haikou and Hong Kong, sea routes between Sanya and Hong Kong, air routes between Sanya and Guangzhou, and air routes between Haikou and Singapore. However, they still cannot satisfy the needs of the current construction and development. We are now concentrating our efforts on some key projects, including the 200,000 kw thermal power station and the natural gas and hydropower stations in Haikou, the reconstruction of a first-grade highway on the eastern line, and the extension of the Haikou and Yangpu ports. Yao Wenxu said: We are preparing to establish a Hainan Aviation Corporation to conduct unified administration of civil aviation on this island. We will make full use of the existing airports to promote our island air service and then extend our service to the outside.

Yao Wenxu drew a picture for us of Hainan's magnificent economic construction. However, it needs large sums of investment. Where can we get the money? Yao Wenxu said that there are three ways: 1) rely on our own strength and take the road of self-reliance; 2) state investment in some key projects or state loans for them; 3) "introduce foreign investment and strengthen cooperation with the hinterland" and implement the policy of opening up to the outside world to promote our internal development, to absorb both internal and external funds and technology for Hainan's development.

Yao Wenxu said: We welcome enterprises from China's advanced areas, Hong Kong and Macao compatriots, Overseas Chinese, and foreign businessmen to Hainan to make investments or to cooperate with us in our development, and we will continue to give them preferential treatment.

This means that in the first and second profit-making years, the Chinese-foreign joint ventures and cooperative enterprises, as well as those independently run by foreign investors, will continue to be exempted from profit tax, and from the third year, this tax will be levied at a reduced rate of 15 percent. If, in the first 3 years, these enterprises have difficulty in paying consolidated industry and commerce tax, they can apply for reduction or exemption.

As to the share dividend, interest, rent, and charges for exclusive use of certain facilities, which are obtsained by foreign firms that do not have an office in the Hainan Administrative Region, profit tax will be levied at a reduced rate of 10 percent. Profit tax will not be levied on the part of profit remitted abroad by the joint venture enterprises, and all construction materials, machinery and equipment, raw materials for production, seeds, and breeding stock which are necessary for projects using foreign investment will be duty free when they are imported. Construction materials and equipment for Chinese-foreign joint or cooperative tourist projects will also be duty free.

In conclusion, Yao Wenxu said: Since implementing the policy of opening up to the outside world, by the end of 1985, Hainan Island has signed 254 contracts with China's advanced areas on joint investment, with a total investment of 232 million yuan, and had signed 248 contracts with foreign firms, a total investment of $335 million. The foreign funds actually used were more than $37 million.

Over the past few years, great achievements have also been made in Hainan's industrial and agricultural production as well as in the construction of some basic facilities. The total industrial and agricultural output value has been increasing at an average annual rate of 13.8 percent. Last year, the total output value of this region almost doubled that of 1980.

Now we can say with full confidence that, provided we firmly implement the three main policies on developing the planting and processing of tropical plants, developing the breeding and processing of aquatic products, and developing tourism, and providing we continue to open up to the outside world and strengthen cooperation with the hinterland, Hainan's economy will surely be vigorously developed.

Yao Wenxu concluded: We hope that all people of noble aspirations both at home and abroad will strengthen cooperation and make joint efforts to build Hainan into a more beautiful and more prosperous island!

HUBEI STUDIES PARTY RECTIFICATION ARRANGEMENTS

HK240217 Wuhan Hubei Provincial Service in Mandarin 1000 GMT 23 Jun 86

[Excerpts] The provincial CPC Committee Standing Committee and the provincial party rectification guidance group held a meeting on 21 June to convey and implement the spirit of the forum on party rectification in six provinces and one autonomous region in south China to study and make arrangements for future work. The meeting demanded that all parts of Hubei set high standards and strict demands and achieve thorough success in district and township party rectification and in consolidating and developing the fruits of party rectification, to ensure and promote the healthy development of reforms and economic construction. Guan Guangfu, secretary of the provincial CPC Committee and head of the provincial party rectification guidance group, presided.

The meeting pointed out that under the guidance of the central principles and policies and with the common efforts of the party organizations at all levels, notable achievements have been scored in party rectification in districts and townships in the province. However, the development is uneven. The meeting therefore demanded that attention to paid to grasping the following tasks:

1. Make a success of district and township party rectification from beginning to end. Units where the standards were not high and the demand not strict, and in particular, units which did the work in a superficial way, must carry out a review. If problems are discovered, we must help them to make up for the missed lessons.

2. Get a good grasp of preparations for party rectification at village level. First it is necessary to investigate rural party organizations and party-member cadres to find out the situation, and to organize pilot projects. Experiences must be seriously summed up. We must educate all village-level party members.

3. Further promote the work of consolidating and developing the fruits of party rectification in units at and above-county level.

4. We must continue to do a good job in investigating and dealing with major and important cases and investigating people of three categories.

The meeting stressed: Rural party rectification is extremely important. It is a new starting point for party building in the new period and an important measure for governing the party with strictness. All rural party rectification must be focused on ensuring and promoting the development of reforms and help to further invigorate the rural economy, to mobilize the peasants' enthusiasm for production, and to stabilize and develop the excellent situation.

PRC SPECIAL ECONOMIC ZONES 'NO LONGER SPECIAL'

HK260259 Hong Kong SOUTH CHINA MORNING POST in English 26 Jun 86 p 14

["Views on China" by Thomas Chan, researcher at Center of Asian Studies, University of Hong Kong; "Economic Zones Lose Their Special Status"]

[Text] The Shenzhen Special Economic Zone [SEZ] is no longer special.

It was reported early this year in the GANGAU JINGJI, a journal published by the Center of Hong Kong and Macao Studies of Guangzhou, that in over 40 policies promulgated by the central authorities since the second half of last year, Shenzhen was not given any special exemption.

The very nature of SEZ's is their special exemption from the jurisdiction of central economic policies. With this exemption done away with, or diminished, it will be difficult for Shenzhen and three others -- Zhuhai, Shantou and Xiamun -- to be true to their names as SEZ's of China.

What is at stake is not just a matter of name and substance, but the very economic viability of these SEZ's.

In the last year debate on whether Shenzhen should be deemed as a model of success or as an example of discrepancy between policy goal and performance, it has become an obvious fact to both the central authorities of China and outside observers that the "economic miracle" of Shenzhen was nothing more than the result of misuse of its policy prerogatives.

Shenzhen built up its physical achievement (in the form of blocks of multi-story skyscrapers that Mr Deng Xiaoping admired) and economic boom (as expressed in terms of rapidly rising living standard and prosperity of the firms there) primarily on its gains from entrepot trade.

Its special policy status and the laxity of customs controls at the border that separates the SEZ from the rest of China has allowed it to trade much sought after imported consumer goods on the local and mainland markets.

In return, huge wealth from the considerable difference between the import price and selling price of these goods has been accrued to those involved in the trade, which practically includes almost everyone and every organisation in Shenzhen, and the SEZ itself.

The prosperity of Shenzhen, and hence its apparent "economic miracle" and of the SEZ policy as a whole between 1983 and early last year are primarily a result of this illegal but tolerated (even at times encouraged) entrepot trade.

However, this phenomenon is contrary to the expectations of the central authorities. More significantly, such illegal entrepot trade has caused serious disruptions and dislocations to China's foreign trade system, and especially to the domestic foreign exchange control and monetary system.

Although it is unfair to say that the entrepot trade of Shenzhen, and of Zhuhai to a lesser extent, which is predominantly import trade, should be held responsible for the huge foreign trade deficit and draining of foreign exchange resource out of China, the negative effect of Shenzhen's entrepot trade is so obvious that no sensible central leader would come to its defence.

Last year, when the central authorities were forced to clamp down on the illegal trade in foreign currency by Shenzhen's firms (even the SEZ government was alleged to be involved), which was the means by which the SEZ balanced its payments in foreign currency, Shenzhen turned to parallel trade for compensation.

The result was an upsurge of general hostility towards Shenzhen by xians (countries) in the Pearl River Delta (which inevitably involved the Guangdong provincial authorities), neighbouring provinces and finally the powerful MOFERT (Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade) because of the damage to their usual exports by Shenzhen's "lower-than-production-cost" offers in parallel trade.

The rigid imposition of a foreign trade quota and permit system on Shenzhen this year was a logical outcome of such hostility.

Despite the efforts of Mr Deng and Mr Gu Mu to save Shenzhen (which is in fact more for the saving of their "face" and credibility in the central leadership), the generalised hostility towards the SEZ by central ministries and local authorities is so strong that Shenzhen and other SEZ's as well have, since the second half of last year, been gradually stripped of their special policy prerogatives.

Without special policy prerogatives, SEZ's are left with no short-cut road to economic development through illegal trade. Now they have not only to face the formidable task of local accumulation out of a small regional economy, as the central authorities remain firm on their original stand of no financial assistance to SEZ's, but also to feel the crushing burden of immediate foreign currency and RMB debt servicing.

The scale of such problems for Shenzhen and Zhuhai, the fastest growing SEZ's in the past few years, will be much greater and more unbearable. With a dwindling local market and stagnant tourism, Zhuhai might find it hard to service its debt from current foreign currency incomes.

As for Shenzhen, the city government alone is required in this year to repay the first installment of a RMB 700 million infrastructural loan, which amounts to RMB 200 million and is equivalent to one-fourth of the total financial income of the city last year. (Another source says the sum to be repaid this year is only RMB 150 million. Nevertheless, Shenzhen is required to repay the entire amount of RMB 700 million within three years, beginning from this year.) This will undoubtedly cause a serious strain on the city's tight budget; and the city has little accumulated financial surplus to rely on.

As for the central leaders like Mr Deng, their minds have turned to another, at least potentially, miracle-creating project -- Ningbo. This time, probably because of the lesson from the SEZ's, the central government has promised to invest RMB 520 million in Ningbo in the next five years, beginning from this year, a sum that is more than half the amount committed to the municipality of Shanghai.

With such a huge investment, and with about U.S. $300 million that Hong Kong's Sir Yue-kong Pao has promised raise [as published], Ningbo could soon become the national model of "instant" economic success.

Meanwhile, the no longer special Shenzhen SEZ will be left to struggle on its meagre resources, perhaps as an example of self-reliance.

PRC SCIENTIST REASSURES HONG KONG ON DAYA BAY SAFETY

HK260134 Hong Kong TA KUNG PAO in English 26 Jun-2 Jul 86 p 1

[By staff writer]

[Text] Although the equipment and technology for the Daya Bay nuclear power plant are to be imported from France, this does not mean that China was blank in nuclear technology, a Chinese expert said on 24 June.

Jiang Shengjie, director of China's Nuclear safety Bureau, made the remark when meeting in Beijing with scientists from Hong Kong and Macao who are atending the third national congress of the Chinese Association for Science and Technology.

Noting that many Hong Kong residents are worried about the competence of the Daya Bay plant staff, Jiang pointed out that China has 30 years' successful experience in making nuclear weapons and carrying out nuclear tests. China has full confidence in its sizable contingent of nuclear specialists trained in the course of developing the country's nuclear industry during the past 30 years, he added.

Jiang, a graduate of Columbia University who pioneered China's nuclear industry, assured the Hong Kong and Macao scientists attending the congress that the high safety standards adopted for the Daya Bay plant are up to international level. He said that a computerized simulator is to be used to train the plant staff on ways to detect and tackle possible accidents. There is no such simulating device in Chernobyl, he noted.

Unlike in the Soviet Union, he went on, decisionmakers on nuclear development and people responsible for safety inspection and issuing licences belong to two different organizations, thus ensuring the reliability of supervision.

Acknowledging that negotiations had been held on lowering the cost of the Daya Bay project, the nuclear specialist said the plant's safety standard would not be affected.

He said that nuclear power has been playing an important role in developed countries. In France 68 percent of the electricity is generated by nuclear plants.

China cannot affort to ignore nuclear power although priorities have been given to developing thermal and hydraulic power plants. China is rich in coal and water resources, but 70 percent of the hydropower resources are concentrated in the southwest, while 60 percent of the country's coal deposits are in the north and northwest. This leaves the economically developed east and southeast short of energy supply.

Two nuclear power plants are under construction in China at present, one at Qinshan in east China's Zhejiang Province, the other in Guangdong Province's Daya Bay, close to Hong Kong. The 300-megawatt Qinshan plant is scheduled to go into operation in 1989. The Daya Bay plant, with two 900-megawatt pressurized water reactors, will be commissioned in 1992 or 1993.

COMMENTARY ON PROSPECTS FOR SINO-PORTUGUESE TALKS ON MACAO

HK260643 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE in Chinese 1031 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Short commentary by Zhao Qi: "Sino-Portuguese Talks in Prospect" -- ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE headline]

[Text] Hong Kong, 25 Jun (ZHONGGUO TONGXUN SHE) -- The Sino-Portuguese talks on the issue of Macao's future will soon be held in Beijing, on 30 June. This is another important affair that attracts attention from everyone at home and abroad after the smooth settlement of the issue of Hong Kong's future.

People in all circles in Macao have long been preparing mentally for the holding of the talks on Macao's future. At present, public feeling in Macao is rather stable, and the atmosphere in society is calm. Most people are optimistic about the Sino-Portuguese talks which will soon begin. Of course, some people may also have various worries. This is not at all surprising.

The Chinese side has disclosed that after China resumes the exercise of sovereignty over Macao, China will handle the problems in Macao left over by history in light of the formula of "one country, two systems." The social and economic systems in Macao will remain unchanged; the existing laws and life style will basically remain unchanged; and a series of special policies will be adopted in accordance to Macao's special conditions.

At present, relations between China and Portugal are good. Both sides are sincere regarding maintaining Macao's stability and prosperity. When the two countries established diplomatic relations in 1979, they reached understanding and agreement on Macao's sovereignty, and there is no dispute over the issue of sovereignty. In addition, the successful settlement of the Hong Kong issue has set a precedent for the Sino-Portuguese talks, which are expected to encounter no major obstacles. A few days ago, Zhou Nan, head of the Chinese delegation to the Sino-Portuguese talks, optimistically predicted that the talks on Macao's future will make progress more smoothly than the Sino-British talks on the Hong Kong issue, and will be completed more quickly. At the same time, he also pointed out that Macao has its own special problems that Hong Kong does not have, so China and Portugal must seek a set of solutions through their talks.

People generally hold that the time for China to recover sovereignty over Macao and the issue concerning Macao residents of Portuguese origin and their nationality will be the major subjects to be dealt with in the Sino-Portuguese talks. In addition, the two sides will also discuss such issues as maintaining social stability, promoting economic development, localizing Macao's public servants popularizing both the Chinese and Portuguese languages, and making Chinese an official language.

People are glad to see that China and Portugal share the same objectives and are sincere in entering into their talks. It is believed that through frank and in-depth talks, they will conclude an agreement which is in the interests of both sides and which is gererally accepted by people in all circles in Macao.

PRC DELEGATE ADDRESSES DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE

[Text] Geneva, June 26 (XINHUA) -- The superpowers should halt their tests, production and deployment of all types of nuclear weapons and drastically reduce such weapons before all countries concerned can sit down to discuss thorough nuclear disarmament, Fan Guoxiang, head of the Chinese delegation, said here today.

Speaking at the on-going Conference on Disarmament (CD), the Chinese delegate pointed out that the danger of a nuclear war comes mainly from the two superpowers, which not only possess 95 percent of the world's nuclear weapons and a nuclear "overkill capability" but are also intensifying their nuclear arms race.

The states possessing the largest nuclear arsenals have a special responsibility for nuclear disarmament, a principle that has not only been widely recognized by the international community, but has also begun to be acknowledged by the two superpowers themselves, Fan said.

The Chinese delegation called on the superpowers to put an immediate end to "the qualitative improvement and quantitative increase of their nuclear weapons and to the deployment of nuclear weapons in various regions," and to reduce all types of nuclear weapons, either deployed in Europe or in Asia, by a wide margin. "After the United Staes and the Soviet Union halt the test, production and deployment of all types of nuclear weapons and drastically reduce these weapons, a broadly representative international conference with the participation of all the nuclear-weapon states can be held to discuss measures for further nuclear disarmament and thorough destruction of nuclear weapons," he said.

As for measures to prevent a nuclear war before the realization of nuclear disarmament, Fan said, "China supports the reasonable demand by numerous non-nuclear weapon states over the years calling for the prohibition of the uses of nuclear weapons." He noted that from the very day that China possessed nuclear weapons, the country declared that at no time and under no circumstances would it be the first to use nuclear weapons, nor to use or threaten to use nuclear weapons against non-nuclear weapon states or nuclear-weapon-free zones.

"We have proposed that all nuclear weapon states undertake this obligation and on this basis an international convention should be concluded, ensuring the prohibition of the use of nuclear weapons," Fan said. Fan maintained that in addition to nuclear disarmament, conventional disarmament should also be given importance. Since the two superpowers and their allies possess the largest and most sophisticated conventional armaments, "it is only natural that they should take the lead in reducing substantially their conventional armaments, particularly their conventional offensive forces," he said. He also expressed China's opposition to any development, tests or deployment of space weapons in any form, saying that the outer space should be used exclusively for peaceful purposes and for the benefit of all mankind.

The Chinese delegate said that China is opposed to the arms race and will never take part in it. The small amount of nuclear weapons China possesses are exclusively for self-defence purposes and the country will never be the first to use the, nor engage in any nuclear proliferation, nor conduct atmospheric nuclear tests in the future, he added.

U.S.-SOVIET ARMS TALKS END WITHOUT PROGRESS

[Text] Geneva, June 26 (XINHUA) -- The 5th round of the U.S.-Soviet negotations on nuclear and space weapons ended here today after the two superpowers failed to reach any agreement. Before the U.S. and Soviet delegations met in the American mission here this morning, Soviet chief delegate Victor Karpov said that he has not perceived "any progress" in the current round of talks which started May 8.

During the past seven weeks, the Soviet delegation put forward several proposals on strategic, intermediate and space weapons reduction which have been rejected by the American side as "old offers in new wraps". However, when the Soviet Union proposed a package of arms reduction proposals in Jun 11 which would allow the research of outer space weapons in laboratories, U.S. President Ronald Reagan said it could be a "turning point" in the U.S.-Soviet relations. Nevertheless, Reagan insisted that the United States could not accept the proposals "without changes".

Informed sources said that a new round of arms talks may begin here on September 18.

The U.S. chief delegate, Max Kampelman, told reporters today that despite the "true, important and substantial differences" between the United States and the Soviet Union, there still exist "possibilities for serious and constructive discussions." He expressed the hope that the next round of talks will open ways for serious dialogues and lead to an agreement in certain aspects of arms control.

REAGAN STATEMENT WELCOMES SOVIET PROPOSALS

OW270728 Beijing XINHUA in English 0710 GMT 27 Jun 86

[Text] Washington, June 26 (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Ronald Reagan said in a statement today that the latest Soviet proposals mark the beginning of a serious Soviet effort to reach an arms control agreement. The statement was issued to mark the end of the fifth round of U.S.-Soviet arms control negotiations, which began in Geneva seven weeks ago. The next round will start on September 18 after a 12-week summer break.

Reagan said in the past two weeks Soviet negotiators at Geneva have tabled new proposals. "I am hopeful that these proposals signal the beginning of a serious Soviet effort to join with us in actually reducing offensive nuclear arms," the President said.

He said the United States is studying the Soviet proposals "very carefully to see how they might help to move us toward our goal of deep, equitable and verifiable arms cuts." "We know there is much hard bargaining ahead, but for our part, the United States is determined to do everything we can to achieve these deep reductions," he declared.

Meanwhile in Geneva today, Soviet chief negotiator, Viktor Karpov charged that the United States presented matters "in a distorted light" and continued "to block progress" in the negotiations. "There have been no changes in the position of the U.S. delegation that would lead to mutually acceptable agreements," he complained, according to reports reaching here.

XINHUA ON U.S. SEEKING MILITARY SUPERIORITY

OW270028 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 0657 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Commentary by XINHUA reporter Mei Zhenmin: "U.S.-USSR Dispute Over the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty"]

[Text] Beijing, 25 Jun (XINHUA) -- U.S. President Reagan declared on 27 may that because the Soviet Union has failed to observe the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty [SALT II], the United States would no longer be bound by this treaty by the end of the year. Then, the Soviet Union warned that it would take "adequate, effective countermeasures," saying that it could not remain "unconcerned" over the U.S. action. The accord, which was signed in June 1979 after 300 talks over a period of 7 years, is now facing the danger of being abrogated.

Reviewing how this treaty was signed, we can see the changes in the relative nuclear strengths of the United States and the Soviet Union and their confrontation.

When Nixon visited the Soviet Union for the first time in July 1959 as vice president of the United States, U.S. nuclear strength was overwhelmingly superior to that of the Soviet Union by 10 to 1. Afterwards, the Soviet Union went all out to expand its military strength, taking advantage of the United States being bogged down in the Vietnam war. When Nixon visited the Soviet Union for the second time as U.S. President and signed the "provisional accord" of SALT I and the Antiballistic Missile Treaty with the Soviet Union in May 1972, the U.S. and Soviet nuclear strengths appeared to be the same. When President Carter and Brezhnev signed SALT II in Vienna in June 1979, the USSR had already exceeded the United States in strategic nuclear weapons launchers. According to official figures released by the two sides at that time, the Soviet Union had 2,504 launchers, and the United States had 2,283. The signing of the two accords indicated that the United States had already lost its nuclear superiority. Under such circumstances, the United States hoped to use the treaty to stop the growing nuclear strength of the Soviet Union which, after becoming equal to the United States in nuclear strength, also wanted to temporarily suspend its competition in quantity so as to concentrate on improving the quality of its nuclear weapons. Since both sides felt that the treaty would limit the other side in terms of quantity, but not quality, the deal was made.

After becoming the head of the White House in 1981, President Reagan decided to "restore national strength" and reverse the unfavorable situation in the arms race with the Soviet Union. In October of the same year after becoming President, he put forward plans to modernize U.S. strategic nuclear strength. Despite the staggering financial deficits, enormous military budgets were earmarked each year for the development and deployment of more advanced nuclear weapons. The current stage is one in which strategic nuclear weapons are being renewed.

According to a report by the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff on the military situation in fiscal 1987, "all types of weaponry, from strategic arms to individual arms for ground combat, are being renewed," and "the United States will continue to give top priority to the renewal of its strategic weaponry." In a long article entitled "The U.S. Defense Strategy" published in the spring issue of the FOREIGN AFFAIRS quarterly, U.S. Defense Secretary Weinberger stressed: "As a result of rebuilding U.S. military strength, the conditions for U.S.-Soviet relations will be redefined."

As the Reagan administration sees it, the United States has now extricated itself from the "Quite unfavorable situation of weakness" during the 1970's and has regained its "status of relatively powerful strength." The Reagan government's declaration that it will abrogate SALT II precisely proceeds from its need to seek military superiority and its intention to "redefine U.S.-USSR relations."

While the United States worked hard to modernize its strategic nuclear strength, the Soviet Union also proceeded to renew its strategic nuclear weapons. Reagan declared his intention to abrogate the treaty mainly because, following the deployment of SS-25 ICBMs, the Soviet Union developed a new generation strategic offensive weapon, the SS-24 mobile ICBM, and violated the treaty in various other areas. However, according to U.S. papers, this was just a superficial reason. In actuality, the Reagan administration wanted to use this reason to press the Soviets to make substantial concessions at the Geneva disarmament talks. From a longer perspective, the U.S. strategic scheme is to hinder the Soviet Union with an even more gigantic nuclear arms race so as to deplete the USSR's financial and material resources, rendering it incapable of achieving its "accelerated development strategy" to expedite its economic, scientific, and technological development.

The Reagan administration's decision to abrogate the aforesaid treaty has caused concern and opposition from its allies and the U.S. people. During a recent meeting of NATO foreign ministers, the United States' Western European allies all strongly opposed abrogating the treaty. Many U.S. congressmen have openly stated that the treaty should be sustained. The house also adopted a resolution urging the Reagan administration to continue to abide by the treaty. Owing to this, some U.S. papers and journals have predicted that the Reagan administration will have trouble during the midterm election in November. Amid the voices of opposition at home and abroad, the U.S. Government itself has also showed differences and disconcerted steps. After the White House spokesman stated on 12 June that the treaty "no longer exists," Secretary of State Shultz made a denial the next day. After Gorbachev proposed on 16 June that as long as the United States agreed to abide by the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty for 15 years, the USSR would agree to cut the number of strategic nuclear weapons, Secretary of Defense Weinberger immediately rejected the proposal. However, in a speech at Glassboro on 19 June, Reagan praised the proposal, saying that the Soviet Union has "begun to make a serious effort," that "it could represent a turning point" in the arms-control talks, and that "this can be an opportunity for improving U.S.-Soviet relations."

Meanwhile, both the USSR and the United States have not slammed the door on a second summit. As the international situation continues to change, the relations between the United States and the Soviet Union will also be marked by frequent tension and relaxation according to their strategic and tactical needs. At any rate, the international community does not want to see a deterioration of the situation.

INTERNATIONAL ATOMIC ENERGY CONFERENCE PLANNED

[Text] Bonn, June 23 (XINHUA) -- The International Conference on Atomic Energy, scheduled for September in Vienna, will focus on security measures such as early warning accident systems. Chancellor of Federal Germany Helmut Kohl and Minister of Foreign Affairs Hans-Dietrich Genscher today discussed the focus of the conference with Director-General of the International Atomic Energy Agency Hans Blix. Genscher said it was important that the international conference should achieve specific results.

After the Chernobyl accident in Soviet Union on April 26, Kohl wrote to over 30 countries which already have or are planning to put up nuclear stations, suggesting that an international conference be held. So far most of the invited countries have accepted and the conference will be held from September 24 to 26.

Blix, who is on a two-day visit to Bonn, is scheduled to meet Federal Minister of Environment Walter Wallmann, a former mayor of Frankfurt.

PRC MAKES 'GREAT DEVELOPMENT' IN FOREIGN TRADE

HK270617 Beijing GUOJI SHANGBAO in Chinese 16 Jun 86 p 2

[Report: "Import and Export Trade Made Great Development in the Sixth 5-Year Plan Period" — capitalized passages published in boldface]

[Text] Our reporter has learned from the General Administration of Customs that along with the implementation of the policy of opening up to the outside world and enlivening the domestic economy, China made great development in foreign trade during the Sixth 5-Year Plan period.

1. The TOTAL IMPORT AND EXPORT VOLUME INCREASED BY MORE THAN 100 PERCENT. China's import and export volume amounted to $252.4 billion in the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, an increase of 120 percent over the total volume of $116 billion in the Fifth 5-Year Plan period. The import volume amounted to $1132.4 billion, an increase of 121 percent; and the total export volume amounted to $120 billion, an increase of 113 percent. The trade deficit was $12.4 billion.

2. GREATER CHANGES HAVE TAKEN PLACE IN THE COMPOSITION OF IMPORTS AND EXPORTS. The export of finished industrial products has increased rapidly. The export volume of finished industrial products in the Sixth 5-Year Plan amounted to $64.3 billion, an increase of 150 percent. Its proportion of the total export volume increased from 46 percent in the Fifth 5-Year Plan to 54 percent. The export volume of heavy industrial products amounted to $17.7 billion, an increase of 270 percent; the export of chemical products amounted to $4.8 billion an increase of 190 percent; and the export of light industrial and textile products amounted to $41.8 billion, an increase of 110 percent. The export volume of elementary products in the Sixth 5-Year Plan amounted to $55.7 billion, an increase of 85 percent, but its proportion of the total export volume decreased from 54 percent in the Fifth 5-Year Plan period to 46 percent. Of the elementary products, the export volume of foodstuffs amounted to $17.2 billion, an increase of 47 percent; the export volume of industrial raw materials amounted to $9.6 billion, an increase of 28 percent; and the export volume of mineral products and fuel amounted to $28.4 billion, an increase of 170 percent. In the field of import, as a result of a series of reforms in the rural economic structure, the output of grain, cotton, and other crops has increased, leading to a decrease in the import volume of cotton and grain year by year. A gratifying situation of export volume exceeding import volume appeared in 1985.

3. CHINA HAS STRENGTHENED TRADE RELATIONS WITH ALL COUNTRIES. During the Sixth 5-Year Plan period, China further developed trade with developing countries; expanded trade with developed countries such as Japan, the United States, and the European Community; and made some development in trade with the Soviet Union and East European countries.

(1) China's import and export volume with developing countries amounted to $54.7 billion, an increase of 100 percent. This volume accounted for 22 percent of China's total import and export volume. Of the figure, $22 billion was for import, and $32.7 was for export.

(2) China's import and export volume with developed countries amounted to $143.8 billion, an increase of 120 percent. This volume accounted for 57 percent of China's total import and export volume. Of the figure, the import volume amounted to $92.9 billion, and the export volume amounted to $50.9 billion. China's imports from Japan amounted to $39.3 billion, and exports to Japan amounted to $25.9 billion. China's imports from the United States amounted to $21 billion, and exports to the United States amounted to $9.7 billion. China's imports from the European Community amounted to $16.9 billion, and exports to the European Community amounted to $11.6 billion.

(3) China's import and export volume with the Soviet Union and East European countries amount to $9.7 billion, an increase of 432 percent. Of the figure, $5.3 billion was for import, and $4.4 billion was for export.

(4) China's import and export volume with Hong Kong and Macao amounted to $4.2 billion, an increase of 180 percent. This volume accounted for 18 percent of China's total import and export volume. Of the figure, $12.2 billion was for import, and $32 billion was for export.

TIAN JIYUN ADDRESSES WORLD INSURANCE MEETING

[Text] Beijing, June 24 (XINHUA) — More than 300 insurance representatives from 49 countries and regions gathered here today to attend two Third-World insurance meetings which opened simultaneously. In his opening speech, Chinese Vice-Premier Tian Jiyun said that the two meetings — the Third World Insurance Congress (TWIC) and the meeting of the Association of Insurance Supervisory Authorities of Developing Countries (AISADC) — would contribute greatly to cooperation in Third World countries' insurance business. China welcomed cooperation between Chinese and international insurance bodies, which was beneficial to the development of South-South cooperation, South-North dialogue and the establishment of a new international economic order.

Representatives will discuss which topics as life insurance, crop insurance, reinsurance, insurance finance and the theme, "insurance management in a period of crisis", during the meetings, which both last four days, said Cheng Wanzhu, chairman of the fifth TWIC general meeting.

Cheng, vice-president of the People's Insurance Company of China, said at the opening ceremony that there were bright prospects for the development of national insurance in developing countries. He said that while relying mainly on domestic efforts, these countries also welcomed friendly co-operation with other foreign insurance companies in the fields of international reinsurance, information, personnel training and technology. The previous four sessions of TWIC were held in the Philippines, Argentina, Kenya and Morocco, and the past two meetings of the AISADC were held in the Philippines and Morocco. The two bodies will now meet every two years at the same venue.

BEIJING REVIEW ON U.S.-SOVIET ARMS RACE

OW241155 Beijing BEIJING REVIEW in English 23 Jun 86 p 10

[Commentary by news analyst Peng Di -- Arms Race Still on Grueling Course]

[Text] U.S.-Soviet relations over the past 6 months have been characterized by the usual arms race stalemate in arms reduction talks and regional contests. Despite worldwide pleas to curb the escalating arms race between the two superpowers, neither side is ready to relinquish superiority in the name of sensibility.

The U.S. government recently proposed a military budget of U.S.$311.6 billion for fiscal year 1987, an increase of 8.2 percent over 1986. Its programme for the development of new strategic weapons includes turning out and deploying more MX missiles; stepping up research and production of miniature intercontinental missiles; building the 14th Trident submarine and advanced submarine-based missiles and conducting further research on "invisible" bombers capable of shunning radar pursuit.

Since Washington thinks the Soviet Union exceeds the United States in chemical weapons by a ratio of 10:1, it has resolved to resume its production, which was halted 17 years ago. Conventional weapons also will be renovated. And U.S. President Ronald Reagan's pet project the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) will absorb U.S.$4.8 billion of the defense budget in 1987, compared with this year's U.S.$2.7 billion.

Moscow does not intend to lag behind in its arms stockade. "With highly destructive SS-25S -- the fifth-generation of USSR-made intercontinental missiles in the process of deployment -- and the highly accurate SS-18S -- the fourth generation of intercontinental missiles near the end of deployment, the Soviet Union is working on SS-X-24 mobile intercontinental missiles which directing more efforts towards the production of SS-20 medium-range missiles and a new type of SU-27 aircraft. Moreover, thousands of Soviet scientists and engineers are occupied with the research of laser technology capable of missile interception.

The Kremlin has been more active on the issue of disarmament. It is quite outspoken in its call for arms control with a series of highly publicized arms reduction plans. The Soviets introduced in January a long-term programme for the elimination of nuclear arms in stages. Twice, in April and June, they put out proposals for the reduction of conventional weapons and forces in Europe. And they made repeated calls for a mutual end to nuclear testing.

Unable to compete with Moscow in this respect, the White House has been more reticent. It has, nonetheless, called for separating the issue of strategic weapons from medium-ranged ones, while urging for a link in the reduction of weapons in Europe and Asia, maintaining that the Soviet Union has the upper hand in Asia. It also feels that there is a real danger that the United States will be behind its rival in both offensive and strategic defensive weapons. Therefore, ignoring the Soviet calls for a halt to nuclear testing, the United States goes on.

Debate over regional issues between the two superpowers has grown intense.

In the name of anti-terrorism the United States launched a military attack upon Libya and posed threats against Syria as a warning signal to the Middle East.

Equally active in the region, the Soviet Union has provided weapons to some Arab countries, while increasing contact with the Gulf nations and promoting a reconciliation between different factions within the Palestine Liberation Organization. It also has called for an international conference on the Middle East in order to further its influence in the region and contend with the United States.

In Central America, apart from offering military aid to the contras in Nicaragua, the White House has also employed diplomatic means to pressure the ruling government to change course so as to restrict or diminish Soviet influence in the country.

Moscow has been concentrating on its economic problems at home while talking profusely about disarmament internationally. In regional rivalry, it continues to hold fast to its spheres of influence. Far from giving in, it is ready to expand wherever there is an opportunity.

Afghanistan is a case in point. Dissatisfied with mere military assaults on the resistance forces, the Soviets have replaced Karmal with Muhammad Najibullah as leader of the People's Democratic Party. They have also stepped up their pressure against Pakistan. As the United States has repeatedly claimed, the Soviet expedition in Afghanistan has been motivated by the rich Gulf oil fields to which Afghanistan is the pathway.

In southeast Asia, while offering continuous support to Vietnam's attempt to control Kampuchea, Moscow has turned down the 8-point peace proposal by the Coalition Government of Democratic Kampuchea. This has made it more obvious that the Soviet interest lies in expansion in the South Pacific area.

LIAOWANG ON U.S.-SOVIET DISPUTE OVER SALT II

HK250918 Beijing LIAOWANG in Chinese No 24, 16 Jun 86 p 5

[Special dispatch from Washington by LIAOWANG contributing reporter Shi Lujia: "Reagan's Decision Has Caused a Great Disturbance"]

[Text] U.S. President Ronald Reagan announced on 27 May that since the Soviet Union had frequently violated the Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty (SALT II), the United States would not be bound by the treaty later this year. The Soviet Union reacted strongly to this decision. Some West European NATO allies expressed opposition or had reservations. Consequently, a rigorous trial lay ahead for U.S.-Soviet relations and U.S.-European relations.

SALT II was signed by the late Soviet leader Leonid Brezhnev and former U.S. President Jimmy Carter in Vienna in 1979 after 8 years of negotiations. After the Soviet Union invaded Afghanistan, the U.S. Senate refused to ratify the treaty. Although the treaty was "fundamentally flawed" and not ratified, the position of the Reagan administration was that the United States would comply with it so long as the Soviet Union does so. The United States reiterated this position at the expiration of the treaty at the end of last year.

When making the new announcement, Reagan decided to replace two old nuclear submarines with a new Trident with nuclear warhead missile launchers so as to keep the United States within the limits of SALT II. He said that the policy would not be effected for the time being, and whether the United States would adhere to the treaty depended on Soviet behavior in the following months. He urged the Soviet Union to stop violations of the treaty, reduce the pace of its arms expansion, and show sincerity at the Geneva nuclear disarmament talks. If the Soviet Union takes these "constructive steps," Reagan said that he would reconsider the decision already made. Even though the treaty is abrogated, he said, provided the Soviet Union is willing to exercise "mutual restraint," the number of strategic nuclear weapons deployed by the United States in the future will not exceed that of the Soviet Union.

The reaction from the Soviet Union was stern. In a 28 May commentary, the Soviet news agency TASS denied any violation and said that Reagan's assertions were groundless. The commentary also charged the United States with harboring a scheme to ensure a unilateral military advantage and said that the Soviet Union would take necessary countermeasures to engage in arms expansion. A few days later, Moscow warned in a sharply worded statement that the Soviet Union would no longer be bound by the two SALT treaties and would take "necessary measures to prevent the strategic equilibrium from being damaged" once Reagan put his 27 May decision into effect. Soviet leaders also asked West European countries to persuade Reagan to reconsider his decision. During these days, Soviet officials emphasized time and again that the upcoming Soviet-U.S. summit would be jeopardized and there would be an "adverse influence" on the Geneva nuclear disarmament talks so long as Washington maintained its hard stand against SALT II.

Following the U.S.-Soviet Geneva summit in November last year, the relations between the two countries seemed relaxed. In the first half of this year, however, both sides engaged in fierce wrangling on a series of issues. Although the Geneva nuclear disarmament talks have reached the fifth round since their resumption in March last year, no substantial progress has been made so far. Both sides have insisted on their respective positions and blamed the other for having no sincerity. Moscow announced on several occasions that it would make sustained efforts to unilaterally halt its nuclear tests and asked Washington to undertake the commitment, and also proposed a summit held as quickly possible on the issue, but Washington refused the offer. The Soviet Union cancelled the meeting of foreign ministers of the two big powers to be held in Washington in May this year, and has not yet decided on a new date because it asserted that the U.S. attack on Libya was "deliberately aimed at intensifying Soviet-U.S. relations." Both the United States and the Soviet Union hope that the second summit can be held within the year, but no agreement has been reached because the positions of both sides are poles apart. Public opinion in the West holds that the new quarrel on SALT II provoked under such circumstances will undoubtedly impair the trend of relaxation and further intensify the relations between the two countries.

Proceeding from their own interests and security, the West European countries require U.S. nuclear protection, but also fear that the vigorous arms expansion of the United States will stimulate the Soviet Union to engage in a new round of the arms race, which could result in a threat to Europe. For this reason, they hope that the United States and the Soviet Union can reach an agreement on maintaining a relatively strategic equilibrium. Although the West European countries are not satisfied with the nuclear arms limitation treaties concluded between the two big powers over the past decade or so, they believe that the treaties concluded are better than nothing at all.

Owing to pressure from U.S. allies and differences within his administration, Reagan did not hastily abrogate SALT II, which he opposed repeatedly during the presidential elections. The fact that Reagan suddenly changed his position has shocked the West European countries. At the conference of NATO foreign ministers held recently in Canada, the foreign ministers of U.S. allies unanimously requested the United States to reconsider the decision. The British Government, which holds identical views with the United States on many international issues, also issued a statement expressing regret over the decision.

The West European countries also expressed dissatisfaction with the United States for not consulting them before making the decision. They pointed out: Despite opposition from the majority of its allies, the United States attacked Libya in April. Now the United States has again ignored their consistent position and has taken this drastic action that involves the relations between East and West as a whole. This shows how far the United States has gone in acting willfully, regardless of its allies. In connection with the recent disputes between the United States and Europe in trade and other issues, some U.S. newspapers fear that Europe will further fall away from the United States in the days to come.

In view of Soviet counterattacks and criticism from Western Europe, U.S. Government officials came out one after another to explain that Reagan's new position is aimed at urging both the Soviet Union and the United States to exercise "mutual restraint," thus reaching a new agreement on sharply reducing nuclear arms. They also reminded people to take note of Reagan's promise that the number of nuclear weapons deployed by the United States in the future will not exceed that of the Soviet Union. Nevertheless, it seems that these explanations cannot quell the great disturbance.

JINGJI RIBAO ON PRC AID TO THIRD WORLD

[Article by Li Wanming of the Foreign Aid Bureau of the Ministry of Foreign Economic Relations and Trade: "China Creates a New Situation in Giving Economic and Technical Aid to Foreign Countries"]

[Text] During the Sixth 5-year Plan period, the amount of money gained from contracted projects in foreign countries and sending labor abroad increased at an average rate of 60 percent a year. In the plan period, China signed contracts worth $483,000 [as published], of which, contracts worth $2.4 billion or more were completed, and the grand total of workers sent abroad under labor contracts amounted to 170,000.

In the last 5 years, China has followed the principle of suiting the task to one's capacity in giving economic and technical aid to foreign countries and in developing relations with them. While continuing to give aid to existing recipient countries, China also established new relationships of economic aid with an additional 17 countries. Besides the existing construction projects, China also undertook 83 new economic aid projects. The construction of 174 projects has been completed. The projects covered many areas, such as agriculture, animal husbandry, fishery, light and textile industries, public and civil building industries, water resources and electric power, culture, education public health, broadcasting communications, communications and transportation, geological prospecting, chemical industry, grain processing, and handicraft art.

They included a project to harness the Gold River in Sri Lanka; the Morogora Provincial Agrotechnology Popularization Center in Tanzania; the Mai Re Er De [7796 3583 1422 1795] -- Being Jiao [1514 6037] Canal in Tunisia; the Pokhara Irrigation Project in Nepal; the Rui Dong [3843 3159] Textile Mill in Burma; a sugar refinery in Sierra Lione; the Bo La Shi [3134 2139 0087] Urea Fertilizer Plant in Bangladesh, the Mu Jie Lei [4476 2638 7191] Hydroelectric Station in Burundi; the well-drilling project in Koudougou Region, Burkina Faso; the People's Palace in the Congo; the Friendship Stadium in Senegal; The College of Political Science in Somalia; the Ka Song Guo [0595 2646 2654] Hospital in Guinea-Bissau; the Xie Ha Er [6200 0761 1422] -- Saihut Highway in Democratic Yeme; and the Mu La Lan Jia [2606 5198 5695 0502] -- and De La Nu Nan Bang Gu [2491 1795 2139 0505 0589 1620 0657] Highway in Madagascar. All these relatively large projects have been completed through many years of hard work.

In the last 5 years, China has sent about 30,000 people to carry out the task of giving economic and technical assistance to foreign countries. At the end of 1985, the number of people sent abroad to carry out the tasks totaled 6,448.

In accordance with the set agreements, China has dispatched group after group of medical teams, at different times, to prevent and cure diseases of people in Third World countries. At the end of 1985, more than 1,200 Chinese medical workers continued to work in 92 medical centers in 42 countries and regions.

In the last 5 years, the management system and forms of aid in China's foreign economic and technical aid work have been reformed and gratifying achievements scored in this regard.

1. A contract responsibility system has been comprehensively implemented in the management of economic aid projects. At home, public bidding or negotiated bidding has been introduced and, abroad, construction projects are undertaken at the prices set in the contracts. The projects put under the contract responsibility system have been expanded from the existing construction of civil engineering projects alone, to project investigation, design, overhaul, and technological cooperation. Contractors are asked to undertake all these tasks under a contract system. With the introduction of public bidding or negotiated bidding, not only can we select contractors using comprehensive assessment indices, such as construction period, building costs, technology, and managerial expertise, but we can also gain better economic results. The introduction of a contract responsibility system in managing economic aid projects is a good, effective method by which we can bring the enthusiasm of the contractors and personnel engaged in foreign-aid work into play, tighten control over projects, and quicken the construction pace of projects. The year 1985, when the contract responsibility system was introduced, witnessed the largest number of contracts signed and the largest amount of money earned from contracts. There were 92 contracts in all. Of these, prospecting and designing projects numbered 31, construction projects 23, overhaul projects 5, and technological cooperation and other projects 8. [figures as published]

2. By acting on the four principles of equality and mutual benefit, stress on practical results, diversity of forms, and common progress, which were put forward by Premier Zhao Ziyang, China has carried out economic and technological cooperation in many forms, thus opening up a new preliminary situation of mutual benefit and cooperation. Over the last few years, our cooperation in production and management with countries, such as Sierra Lione, Mali, Rwanda, Zambia, and Zaire, has made encouraging progress. For example, after Zambia's Mu Long Gu Xi [4476 7127 0657 1585] Textile Mill (with 25,000 spindles, 720 looms, and appropriate printing and dying equipment) was completed and transferred in 1983, the mill suffered losses in operation due to mismanagement. In 1984, at the invitation of the authorities concerned, Chinese specialists held the mill's important posts of general manager, chief accountant, and chief engineer. Since then, the situation in the mill has rapidly changed, production steadily increased, and the mill gained profits every month. According to statistics, by July 1985, within 2 years, apart from recovering an investment totaling 12 million kwachas on the Zambian side in building the mill, the mill had gained a profit of 3 million kwachas (1 kwacha is equal to approximately $0.42). In Mali, a leather factory was on the brink of bankruptcy prior to the cooperation scheme but 3 months after the "cooperation in production," production began to take off and the factory netted a profit of nearly 200,000 yuan in renminbi in 6 months. A pharmaceutical factory incurred losses in operation prior to the cooperation scheme due to the overstocking of products. In 1984, China sent specialists by invitation, to take up the factory's important posts, such as general manager. Both sides "cooperated with each other in management." The factory gained a profit of 1.3 million yuan in renminbi within 12 months.

Practice has proved that it is possible for China to carry out multiforms of economic cooperation with numerous Third World countries on the basis of mutual benefit and the road toward this goal is wide. Through cooperation based on mutual benefit, both sides can achieve common progress. This will play a positive role in strengthening South-South cooperation and expediting our country's four modernizations program.

The year 1986 is the first year of the implementation of the Seventh 5-Year Plan for China's socialist economic construction. We will still adhere to the principle of suiting the task to one's capacity and continue to undertake 252 economic-aid projects for 67 recipient countries. They include 33 projects started from scratch, 65 continuation projects, and 155 preparation, winding-up, and technological cooperation projects. Forty projects are planned for completion in 1986.

During the Seventh 5-Year Plan period, by acting on the principles of "equality and mutual benefit, stress on practical results, diversity of forms, and common progress," we will further readjust the structure of foreign aid work, reform aid forms, tighten control over the work, continue to do a good job of the work, and strive to achieve better results in giving aid to foreign countries using our limited foreign aid funds. To promote friendship with the people of the Third World countries, we will create a new situation in our work in giving economic and technical aid to foreign countries and make due contributions in this regard.

He also expressed the determination of his government to abide by the three "joint communiques" signed between the two countries in 1972, 1979 and 1982. Bush expressed the conviction that no political wind in the years to come will affect the importance attached by the U.S. Government to the Sino-American relations. Invited by Michael Armacost, under secretary of state for political affairs, Zhu Qizhen arrived in Washington Tuesday for political consultations. SOVIET ARMS PROPOSAL A NOTEWORTHY 'INTERIM AGREEMENT'

OW261017 Beijing XINHUA Domestic Service in Chinese 1456 GMT 24 Jun 86

[Text] Moscow, 24 Jun (XINHUA) -- News Analysis: A Noteworthy "Interim Agreement"

[By] XINHUA reporter Tang Xiushan

Because the Soviet-U.S. disarmament talks in Geneva had been at a standstill for a long time, the Soviet Union recently proposed an "interim agreement," which Soviet leader Gorbachev described as a new step taken by the Soviet Union to reach a mutually acceptable agreement at the Geneva talks. Initially the proposal differs from previous Soviet proposals in the following three noteworthy points:

First, the Soviet Union has changed its previous staunch position of diametrically opposing the United States' "Strategic Defense Initiative [SDI]", and began to recognize its existence and agree to a star wars program limited to laboratory research, that is, to a program limited to the level the United States has already reached. At the same time, the Soviet Union has proposed that both sides agree not to withdraw from the treaty limiting antiballistic guided missile defense systems for a period of at least 15 years. In view of the treaty's stipulation that both sides not set up nationwide antiballistic guided missile defense systems, the proposal actually demands that the United States not deploy space strike weapons for the next 15 years.

Second, prior to this proposal, the Soviet Union had proposed that both sides reduce their offensive strategic weapons by 50 percent during a period of between 5 to 8 years. Now, the Soviet Union has lowered its demand by proposing that both sides limit their offensive strategic weapons to equal ceilings. The so-called "equal ceilings" means having a flexible quota, and demands only "equal" limitation. It is said that the Soviet side has already proposed a 30-percent reduction, thus cutting the scale and slowing down the pace of the reduction.

Third, in the past, the Soviet Union emphasized that the reduction of offensive strategic weapons has "possibly only under the condition that both the Soviet and U.S. sides refuse to manufacture, test, and deploy space strike weapons." However, as far as the reduction of offensive strategic weapons is concerned, the "interim agreement" does not include the precondition of tying the reduction to space arms, and actually agrees that these two issues can be solved separately.

Judging from the "interim agreement," although the Soviet Union has somewhat changed its position and lowered its demands, the proposal for "equal ceilings" does not mean allowing the United States to gain extra advantage. In a nutshell, the Soviet Union absolutely does not allow the United States to gain military supremacy, and the Soviet stand of preventing the United States from getting a head start in deploying space weapons remains basically unchanged.

After the Soviet Union made the latest proposal at the Geneva talks, Regan, who had consistently refused downright any Soviet proposal for disarmament, made a certain positive appraisal of the latest Soviet proposal in a recent speech at Glassboro. He said: This is a beginning of serious efforts by the Soviet side to reduce nuclear weapons, and may become a turning point in the Soviet-U.S. nuclear arms talks. What he appreciated was primarily the point that the Soviet Union no longer demanded that he gave up "SDI" and did not insist that abandoning space arms be a precondition for the reduction of strategic weapons. However, Reagan added, without amendments, the latest Soviet proposal would be unacceptable to the United States.

It seems that the United States has somewhat shifted its position. However, it is not an easy task to reach an accord because the disarmament talks, which are an extremely complicated issue, involve the vital interests of both sides.

GORBACHEV SEEKS ARMS TALKS PROGRESS BEFORE SUMMIT

OW251829 Beijing XINHUA in English 1755 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Text] Washington, June 25 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev still insists that a second summit meeting with U.S. President Ronald Reagan must be proceeded by "concrete achievements" in arms control talks, THE NEW YORK TIMES reported today, quoting government officials.

The point was contained in Gorbachev's letter to Reagan presented on Monday by new Soviet Ambassador to Washington Yuri Dubinin, the officials said. According to these officials, Gorbachev told Regan that a meeting this year would make no sense without "concrete achievements" on nuclear arms control. He indicated that he would examine the progress in Geneva arms control talks as a basis for judging prospects for a second summit meeting.

A senior White House official told reporters Tuesday that Gorbachev discussed in the letter "the ways that we proceed toward a summit" but that "no specific dates were discussed for either a Shultz-Shevardnadze or a Reagan-Gorbachev meeting."

The letter was seen here as a Soviet effort to keep pressure on the United States to respond to the latest Soviet arms control proposal which essentially calls for limits on nuclear testing and a ban on the deployment of space-based missile defense systems in return for substantial reductions in offensive nuclear weapons. However, the officials described the tone of the letter as "positive" and "practical." They said that although the Soviet leader still seeks progress in arms talks before summit, he also carefully avoided making this a precondition for a meeting. "We are still optimistic about having a summit this year," White House Chief of Staff Donald Regan told National Broadcasting Corporation Tuesday. "The general secretary (Gorbachev) did agree in Geneva to come this year to the United States and we still think he will come," he said.

GORBACHEV ACCUSES WEST OF INTENSIFYING ARMS RACE

[Text] Moscow, June 25 (XINHUA) -- Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev today charged that certain groups in the West are trying their utmost to frustrate the Soviet Union's economic program by intensifying the arms race and worsening international relations. He said one of the obstacles to security in Europe and the world has been the lack of political will on the part of the West to pull the arms race out of the extremely dangerous and unpredictable whirlpool. Worse still, Gorbachev said, is that some influential circles in Washington are deliberately trying to drag the arms race into such a whirlpool.

Gorbachev made the accusation today when he met with Prime Minister Johannes Rao, of Federal Germany's north Rhine-Westphalia. Rao arrived Tuesday to open his state's trade and industrial exhibition in Moscow. The two men also discussed the possibilities of expanding economic relations between the two countries, but the Soviet media didn't give further details.

[Text] Pyongyang, June 26 (XINHUA) -- A security officer of the Korean-Chinese side of the Korean Military Armistice Commission has strongly condemned U.S. and South Korean soldiers for violating the armistice agreement in the joint security area in Panmunjom.

This is against the armistice agreement signed in 1953, he said. The officer was quoted as saying that the provocations to the Korean-Chinese side, which have amounted to more than 220 times since the beginning of 1986, "have increased the tension in the area."

XINHUA ON PHILIPPINE ECONOMIC RECOVERY EFFORTS

["Roundup: Aquino Government's Solutions to Economic Recovery (by Zhai Shuyao)" -- XINHUA headline]

[Text] Manila, June 20 (XINHUA) -- The new Philippine Government led by President Corazon Aquino has been charting new solutions and directions for the slackening economy of the country. The solutions have now appeared clear as the government's first four months approach an end. They are designed to remedy the serious economic crisis brought about by the Marcos regime -- negative growth rates for the past two years, huge external debt and massive unemployment.

As a major move to economic recovery, President Aquino has recently launched the "second revolution", the blueprint of which features priority given to the development of agriculture, an active participation by the private sector in the nation's economic activities, and the attraction of foreign capital. Then, a medium-term economic recovery program covering the rest of 1986 and 1987, approved by the cabinet, has defined its development strategy as "employment-oriented, rural-based development process that will lead to a better export performace." It emphasizes the development of agriculture, and the small and medium-scale industries, especially in the countryside.

Accordingly, the Ministry of Agriculture and Food has removed the previous biases against agriculture and taken a series of measures, such as reduction of export taxes on farm produce and sales taxes on chemical fertilizers, to boost agricultural production. Observers here hold that the rural-based strategy is necessary because two-thirds of the country's population of 55 million live in rural areas and are largely dependent on agriculture for their livelihood.

The second solution to the declining economy is privatization. According to the same program, government involvement in the economy "shall be kept to a minimum." The private sector shall be the engine of growth.

In its recent meeting, the cabinet has agreed to take steps towards the dismantaling of the monopolies of sugar and coconut industries by former cronies of ousted President Marcos and to allow private sector to take charge. It has pointed out that any monopoly is anathema to the country's adherence to free enterprise. In yet another meeting, it has also agreed to sell its enormous non-performing assets to the private sector. These assets, estimated at around 2.3 billion U.S. dollars, are mostly inefficient and bankrupt firms formerly owned and mismanaged by Marcos cronies of monopoly capitalism.

There are also plans to sell to the private sector the sequestered assets of the Marcos family, their relatives and friends. It is estimated that they stashed away some five to ten bilion U.S. dollars during the 20-year Marcos rule. Some 200 firms, worth about 400 million U.S. dollars, have been sequestered so far as of end-May.

The privatization of these assets has been described here as enhancing the active participation of the private sector, incrasing their efficiency and thus enlivening the lethargic economy. It will also generate the much needed revenues. Through rural development and privatization, the government is trying to create a million jobs for 1986-87. Unemployment rate stands at 12 percent or 2.6 million workers out of a total workforce of 21.7 million.

The solutions have resulted in some good reactions: Agricultural output is expected to grow by 10 percent this crop year over last. Inflation rate, which avereged 50 percent in 1984 and 23 percent in 1985, has come down substantially to 3.3 percent for the first four months of 1986. Commodity prices have basically been stable.

Last but not least, the government is seeking new foreign capital and aids to alleviate the external debt amounting to 26.2 billion U.S. dollars. For this, it has to make an affirmative response to the preconditions which foreign lenders, led by the International Monetary Fund, have set for the Philippines. In its 1983 letter of intent to the Fund, the Philippines pledged to open the economy to market forces in exchange for a standby credit of 615 special drawing rights.

Meeting its foreign obligations, the cabinet has decided to lift restrictions on the import of some 400 commodities. It has also approved a package of tax reform measures designed to raise about 130 million U.S. dollar additional revenues to help make up the budgetary deficit running from 1.5 to 2.2 billion U.S. dollars.

There are fears among the business circles here that import liberalization might kill local industry and further aggravate the country's dependence on foreign-made products. But the government has hinted that it would increase protective tariffs.

Whether or not the solutions are effective will have to stand the test of time. And the Aquino government still has a long way to go to realize its goals of enhancing the sluggish economy. Noted Philippine economist Bernardo Villegas predicted that the government may have to lower its economic growth projection of 1.3 percent to zero for this year, but if the privatization and other reform measures should succeed, there would be a six to eight percent growth rate for the next three years.

INTERVIEW WITH PHILIPPINE VICE PRESIDENT LAUREL

HK230807 Beijing International Service in Tagalog 1130 GMT 20 Jun 86

[Text] Philippine Vice President and Foreign Minister Salvador Laurel and his entourage visited China from 15 to 18 June by invitiation of the Chinese Government. Prior to his departure from Beijing, Radio Beijing conducted an interview with the vice president. Here is the interview:

[Interviewer] This is your third visit to China. What new changes can you see compared to your first two visits?

[Laurel] I noticed great changes when I arrived last Tuesday. First of all, I noticed that the people are better dressed today, and seem happier. There seems to be more freedom and more activities which they enjoy.

[Interviewer] What is the purpose of your visit and what are the expected results?

[Laurel] You must know what happened in our talks. First of all, I informed them of the actual situation in our country since the revolution where there was no fighting, no bloody violence. I confirmed that we are currently speeding up the process of the return to political stability. We are drafting a new constitution because the old one was rejected by the people, that is, the Marcos constitution and thus, we are changing it. Then, we will have an election as soon as possible, most likely before the end of the year. We will hold an election under the new constitution and we will have a new congress or parliament.

At the same time, we are trying to pacify different parts of the country where fighting used to take place. We are currently asking our people to end all fighting, to lay down arms, and to join in reconciliation and reconstruction efforts. We are striving to revive and rejuvenate our economy, which was devastated during the Marcos regime. We are trying to revitalize the economy so that our business establishments can be resurrected.

I explained this to our friends here in China. I spoke with Chairman Deng Xiaoping, Premier Zhao Ziyang, Vice President Ulanhu and your vice premier, foreign minister, finance minister and trade minister. The only one I was not able to meet was President Li Xiannian who is reportedly sick.

[Interviewer] What can you say about the prospects of Philippines-Chinese relations?

[Laurel] Based on our talks, which went very smoothly, I can say that relations between China and the Philippines will be further developed because we share the same views on many things, especially on cooperation. China is really behind us and helping us like a true friend.

[Interviewer] Thank you very much.

[Laurel] Thank you.

WU XUEQIAN FETES VISITING BENIN FOREIGN MINISTER

OW261711 Beijing XINHUA in English 1517 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, June 26 (XINHUA) -- Chinese Foreign Minister Wu Xueqian gave a banquet in honor of Frederic Affo, minister of foreign affairs and cooperation of Benin, and his party here this evening at the Diaoyutai State Guesthouse.

In his toast, Wu spoke highly of the efforts of the government and people of the African country, led by President Ahmed Kerekou, in safeguarding national independence and state sovereignty, and their achievements in economic construction. Wu said the policy of nonalignment and good-neighborly relations pursued by the Beninese Government has played a positive role in both African and international affairs.

Referring to the African economic situation, Wu said, the African people are industrious and brave, and own rich natural resources, so there is no doubt that the African people can rely mainly on their own efforts while trying to win necessary international aid to develop their economy and improve their peoples' lives. He noted that the recent situation in the southern part of Africa has aroused serious concern worldwide. China is confident that the great struggle for national liberation of the people in the southern part of Africa is irresistible, and the complete independence and liberation of the whole African continent will surely be realized, Wu said.

Both China and Benin are developing countries, he said, and face the common task of building up the country and getting rid of backwardness. He expressed his hope that the friendly relations and cooperation between two countries would make consistent progress with the efforts by the two governments and peoples.

Affo praised the good relations and cooperation between the two countries, parties and governments. He said the coordinated development of various forms of cooperation between the two countries is because the two peoples love peace, justice, freedom and dignity.

He said the two countries hold identical views on major international economic and political issues, and always support the struggles of the oppressed peoples against imperialism, colonialism and all other kinds of domination. They also believe in solving conflicts by way of dialogue and consultation. In the economic field, the two countries actively support all efforts to develop South-South cooperation, Affo said.

Affo and his party arrived here at noon today as guests of Wu Xueqian. Wu and Affo held talks this afternoon. They exchanged views on bilateral friendly relations and international issues of common concern, and briefed each other on their respective countries' economic construction.

HU QIAOMU ON EDUCATIONAL, ECONOMIC REFORM

HK270523 Beijing XINHUA Hong Kong Service in Chinese 1545 GMT 25 Jun 86

[Report: "Hu Qiaomu in Shanghai Talks About Reforms of Educational and Economic System"]

[Text] Shanghai, 25 Jun (XINHUA) — Hu Qiaomu, member of the Political Bureau of the CPC Central Committee, recently addressed a forum attended by some teachers of the East China Teachers' University. He said that we should lead students to vividly discuss the theories of philosophy, economics, and other humanities of various Western schools.

He added: we should take positive measure to introduce, in an analytical manner, the contents of these schools to students. The task of teachers is to guide students correctly.

The main trend of present-day university students is good. The purpose of reforming political and theoretical courses is to let university students understand society, history, the world and the future through the teaching of the courses.

During his stay in Shanghai, Hu Qiaomu also visited Shanghai's No 12 cotton mill. A responsible person of the mill said that since the implementation of the responsibility system of the mill manager, the party, the administrative department, and the workers of the mill "pull together to play a game of chess and act in an opera well." Hu Qiaomu said: China is expanding the experiment in implementing the factory manager responsibility system year by year. This is a great reform in China's enterprise management system.

He added: The implementation of the factory manager responsibility system means that after consultation, a factory manager has the right to appoint middle-level and above cadres. This does not conflict with the principle of the party governing cadres. He stressed that a factory manager can also represent the party! The main issue is that the party, the administrative department, and the workers should coordinate their actions. A party committee should devote its main efforts to ideological and political work, and to the work of supervising and ensuring the successful accomplishment of tasks.

OFFICIAL SAYS ALL NUCLEAR REACTORS 'WORKING WELL'

HK270521 Hong Kong ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE in Chinese 1302 GMT 26 Jun 86

[Text] Beijing, 26 Jun (ZHONGGUO XINWEN SHE) -- China has built more than 10 nuclear reactors and all are working well. This was disclosed by Jiang Shengjie, president of the Chinese Nuclear Society.

He said: Efforts are being made to step up the building of the Qinshan nuclear power plant in Zhejiang Province. The plant, located between Shanghai and Hangzhou, will supply electricity to the two cities and surrounding areas after its construction is complete.

At a banquet given by the society in honor of Hong Kong and Macao representatives to the third representative assembly of the Chinese Scientists Association, Jiang Shengjie said: To meet the needs of China's economic construction, nuclear industry and technology have been extensively turned to civil use and are playing an important role in machine building, electronics, and light industry.

Militarily, China has successfully used nuclear technology in production of A-bombs, H-bombs, and nuclear submarines and correspondingly completed a fairly comprehensive complex of nuclear research and nuclear industry. But compared with countries with advanced nuclear technology, he said, China still has a long way to go.

He hoped that scientific and technological circles and industrial circles of Hong Kong will work in cooperation with nuclear industrial circles of Mainland China in the technological, economic, and trade fields. He also said: The Hongyuan Company of the Ministry of Nuclear Industry in Hong Kong and the Shenzhen Industry and Trade Company of the China Atomic Energy Industrial Company in Shenzhen all expect to provide helpful service and cooperation to Hong Kong and Macao.

There will be altogether 50 volumes containing more than 500 biographies. They include major party leaders at different stages, revolutionary martyrs, and non-communist figures and foreign friends who backed the struggles of the CPC.

The first 30 volumes include the biographies of Li Dazhao, Dong Biwu, Lin Boqu, Peng Dehuai, He Long, Li Lisan, Soong Ching Ling and Dr. Norman Bethune.

This series represents the first attempt at a systematic account of the biographies of leading figures in CPC history, said an official of the publishing house.
